The alumni of Centenary College have been organized into an association for the promotion of the interests of the institution. Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Monroe District, is president; R. H. Wynn, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, is secretary-treasurer, and Prof. W. F. Roberts, of Centenary College, is vice president. Elaborate preparations are being made for the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of Centenary in 1925.

The sudden death of Mrs. R. E. Bobbitt, of Brookhaven, Miss., on Monday, June 23, from heart failure, was a great shock to her many friends throughout Louisiana and Mississippi. She was the wife of Professor R. E. Bobbitt, vice president of Whitworth College, who, for many years, was president of Mansfield Female College. She was a woman of remarkable gifts of mind and spirit, active in every good work. The Advocate extends deepest sympathy to the grief-stricken husband and children.

THE POWER OF THE WORD.

By S. A. Belcher.

One day, in 1915, in the streets of the little town of Sertaozinna, in the center of the great coffee region of Brazil, a colporter was selling Bibles. His satchel was open and he was showing his books to a few who had gathered about him to examine them.

From a house across the street an Italian lady beckoned to him to come over. Leaving his books, Mr. Benfall stepped over to her house.

"What kind of books are you selling?" she asked.

"Bibles," was the reply.

"Protestant Bibles?"

"No; just Bibles."

"Well, if you will guarantee that they are not Protestant, you may bring them over when you are through there."

Soon he knocked at the door and was admitted into the neat little parlor. She selected one of good binding, and then said:

"I want you to see my oratery," and led him into a small room opening into the parlor.

He was very much interested in its arrangement, and especially in the great number of saints represented there. The walls were literally covered with pictures of the saints, and standing on tables were a large number of small images. On the principal table that served as the altar stood a splendid image of St. Anthony.

After explaining them all she stepped up to the altar and placed the open Bible at the feet of the image, saying:

"And here is the place where my Bible shall rest."

The colporter manifested interest in everything she said, taking care not to say anything that might be taken as offense in regard to image worship. He finally bowed himself out and went on his way, leaving the Word to do its work.

A year passed by, and Mr. Benfatl was now in the neighboring city of Ribeiro Preste. As he was passing along the streets with his load of books, a lady recognized him from a window in a nearby house, and called him. It was the Italian to whom he had sold the Bible. As he approached the house she said:

"I have another Bible now; it is in Italian and I understand it better. The one I bought of you I gave to a friend." Then with a smile she continued: "You should see those walls now. That Bible cleared them of all those saints, they are all gone now, even St. Antheny."

Senhor Zachariah and Donna Maria were an interesting old Portuguese couple living out about two miles from the village of Serra Azul, in the State of Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Zachariah and the children tended the little farm, raising chickens, planting corn, melons, and cane from which he made rum on his own little still. Dona Maria really superintended it all, and besides served as country doctor and nurse on the nearby plantations, from the experience obtained in a hospital back in Portugal. Though the mother, she was the cock of the brood and did the crowing, she said.

They were both considered devout Catholics, she especially; though it must be confessed that Zachariah was more interested in the rum, of which he was a bountiful partaker, than in the mass. Being somewhat dull of understanding, he received but little spiritual uplift from the mass, said in Latin, the street processions, and other ceremonies of his religion.

Dona Maria, being more acute of mind and more given to vanity, was devoted to all these forms, and worked faithfully to make a great success of them. She confessed regularly, and went on pilgrimages more than once. On one of these pilgrimages to the shrine of our Lord Jesus of Pirapora she made a vow to buy a golden crown for the Virgin in her home church. The shrine being near the capital, she went on there and had a crown made. But not having the measure of the saint's head, on reaching home she found to her dismay that the crown was too little. Not discouraged, however, she had a larger one made and presented it to the saint. And so in many ways her life was devoted to her beloved saints.

But one day Senor "Juco" (Jose Benedicto Nunes), the dentist, passed by her home and interested her in the Bible. She wanted to read it. He procured one for her, and she was soon intensely interested in its contents. For a long time she was afraid to go out to the little chapel, but finally she resolved to go one dark night to see how they did. She enjoyed the service and lost all fear.

The writer, being the pastor at that time, was invited out to dine with the family. She was very much interested in the Bible, and so the day was passed in reading and explaining the Jesus way to her. Though the walls and the table in the sitting room were covered with saints, nothing was said about them.

Soon the priest heard about her interest in the Bible and made her a visit. He talked about the crops and inquired how much they would make that year, but said little about religion. When he arose to go, however, he reached out to the table and grasped the Bible and hymn book, saying she could not use them and that he would carry them along and burn them. She immediately objected, saying: "No, sir; unless you pay for them!" He threw them down and left in a fury.

Some time after this I made another visit to their home. When I arrived she met me at the gate with a smile, as always, and upon entering she motioned to the walls and to the tables, saying:

"Does it look better now?" Every saint had been removed.

"Yes, I think it does; but I did not tell you to remove them."

"No," she replied, "but the Book did; and I could not bear them any longer. They are packed away in the bottom of an old trunk."

That year there was no rum made. The still was torn up, and the cane was made into sugar. She and her children soon came into the church; and later on, after conquering his drink habit, Zachariah came along also. The Word had done its work.

GREAT HYMNS AND THEIR WRITERS.

By Hugh Fraser.

Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus.

The writer of this well-known and popular hymn was the Rev. George Duffield. He was born in 1818 and became a Presbyterian minister. As a minister he had a long and useful career and held pastorates in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Bloomfield, N. J.; Philadelphia, and several places in the West.

Mr. Duffield lived in Philadelphia from 1851 to 1861, and it was during that period that he wrote the hymn which made him famous. During the winter of 1857-8, a great revival of religion spread over the land. Its gracious influence was felt far and wide, and especially in the city of Philadelphia. Not long before this the Young Men's Christian Association had gained a firm hold in the Quaker city, and the leaders threw themselves heart and soul into the movement, with the result that the revival developed remarkable strength among the young men of the community.

At the forefront of the movement was a group of young men, among them the Rev. George Duffield being especially prominent because of his intense earnestness. Another earnest worker and an intimate friend of Mr. Duffield was the Rev. Dudley Tyng, a young clergyman of the Episcopal Church. The strong evangelism of Mr. Tyng and his hostility to slavery got him into trouble with his congregation, and such was the feeling against him that he was compelled to resign, and in 1857 he organized the Church of the Covenant and held services in a public hall. Mr. Tyng seemed destined to become a great Christian leader in the land when an unfortunate accident cut short his life of great promise.

One day, while staying at his country home, he left his study to look at a corn-shelling machine worked by mule-power in the barn. The sleeve of his gown caught in the cogs, and he was drawn in and so severely injured that a few days later he died. His last words to those around him were: "Tell them, 'Let us all stand up for Jesus.'"

His tragic death made a great impression upon all his friends, and especially upon the Rev. George Duffield. The following Sunday Mr. Duffield preached from the text: "Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness." As he closed the sermon Mr. Duffield read some verses he had composed as soon as he had returned from attending Mr. Tyng's funeral. These verses constituted the hymn which we know as "Stand Up, Stand Up, for Jesus." The author did not think that they were anything out of the ordinary, but the superintendent of the Sunday school had them printed on a leaflet, a copy found its way into a newspaper office, and in a very short time the hymn was being sung all over the Christian world.

It is said that the hymn is found in practically every collection of hymns, and that it has scarcely been altered in any way. Mr. Duffield said that the hymn, which had six stanzas when written, came to him like a message from God, and in a short time it was completed. "Since the night it was written," he said, "it has never been altered by the author in a single verse, a single line, or a single word, and it is his wish that it shall continue unaltered until the soldiers of the Cross shall replace it by something better." In practically every hymnal there are only four stanzas printed; the second and the fifth are usually omitted. The two less familiar stanzas are:

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus!
The solemn watchword hear;
If while ye sleep he suffers,
Away with shame and fear;
Where'er ye meet with evil,
Within you or without,
Charge for the God of Battles
And put the foe to rout!

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus!
Each soldier to his post,
Close up the broken column
And shout through all the host,
Make good the loss so heavy,
In those that still remain,
And prove to all around you
That death itself is gain."

—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A PRAYER.

Dear Jesus, who hast worn our flesh, thou Eternal Word of God, thou Son of God who art dwelling in the bosom of the Father, we love thee. Thou are so good, so true, so beautiful. Thou art all we would like to be. We want to be as good as thou art. We may not understand thee, but we can and do love thee. May the Spirit of Truth take of thy things and show them unto us, may the Spirit of Holiness make and remake us unto thy likeness. May the Spirit of Power enable us to witness for the truth; knowing that thou hast a plan for each of our lives, for this end are we born and for this purpose came we into the world to bear witness to the Truth. May each of us have the daring and the courage to believe in Jesus Christ and his way of life, and may it become our meat and drink to do his will. May we have life through his name. Amen.—Selected.

Why should we be sad and continue to grieve when we have ample evidence that the one who has passed the troublesome waves of this world has lived a true Christian life and the spirit has gone to take up abode in the "mansion prepared?" Mrs. L. I. WAY passed peacefully away on June 1, 1924. She was born in Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1841, and was married to L. I. Way when she was 21 years old. They came to Hammond, La., in 1888. Mrs. Way was living with her son, Arthur, in the old homestead at the time of decease. She leaves three sons, Maurice, Edwin and Arthur, and one daughter, Mrs. Nellie Shaw, sixteen grand and sixteen great-grandchildren, to mourn her loss. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Hammond, and up to the time of her death quite a regular attendant. She was always interested in the church life, and was especially pleased with good music. When asked if it was all right with her, she said, "Yes." The bond of love between her and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. A. L. Way, reminded one of Naomi and Ruth. The funeral was held in the Methodist church, June 2, by the pastor, Rev. James E. Selfe. A good woman has passed to her reward.

J. E. SELFE.

On June 5, ARTHUR OSCAR JONES, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Jones, of Hammond, La., passed away after ten days of suspense in Touro Infirmary, New Orleans. He broke his back while diving in the Tangipahoa River, five miles from Ponchatoula. He was popular among his school friends and church associates. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. While in the hospital he left testimony of his resignation and of his trust in God. God moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform. In the last days of his life he preached a stronger sermon than many of us who have lived many years have done. The funeral was held in the Methodist church of Hammond, La., the pastor, Rev. James E. Selfe, officiating. It was said to be one of the largest attended funerals ever held in Hammond. The DeMolays conducted service at the grave. Gone, but not forgotten.

JAMES E. SELFE.

JAMES ROACH, the son of W. J. and Elizabeth Roach Murnan, was born in Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 9, 1866, and died in Memphis, Tenn., June 18, 1924. When he was 7 years old his father moved to his country home, Stanton, Tenn., where the son was reared to manhood. His education was finished in Bell Buckle, and Vanderbilt University, in the medical department. After graduation, he came to Shelby, Miss., to practice his profession, where, with the exception of six years spent in Hillboro, Tex., he spent his life in giving his service to humanity as a faithful physician. In his going, death did not take an old man, but a worn-out man in a service rarely equaled in the life of any other man. Dr. Murnan's name is a household word in many a home where sickness and duty called him. He was a man of genial bearing, always cheerful, even under physical ailments. He shared others' troubles, but kept his own. Dr. Murnan shared the responsibilities of good citizenship, a man of wise counsel. He was chosen time and again an officer of the municipality of Shelby—as mayor or alderman. He was serving in the latter position when death relieved him of earthly cares and duties. Dr. Murnan was a faithful member of the Methodist church in Shelby, and one of its most responsible officers—a trustee and a steward. For some time, until health failed, he was teacher of the Men's Bible class. He loved his church, and grew in grace and in service with the years. He was ripe in Christian resignation. He died in faith, leaving to mourn his translation, his wife, whom he married in 1895, Miss Maidee Shelby, of Shelby, Miss.; four sisters in Memphis, and hosts of other friends and relatives here and in Memphis. The home, church and community have lost a most useful man. May the grace of consolation abide ever with those left behind.

His pastor,

C. M. CHAPMAN.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased God in his wisdom to call unto himself our beloved pastor, REV. R. I. COLLINS.

Whereas, we are as a flock without a shepherd since his guiding hand has been stilled.

Whereas, we feel that we were especially blessed by his ministry, although of short duration.

Whereas, we deeply appreciate the example of his consecrated Christian life.

Be it resolved by the Woman's Missionary Society of Vaiden, Miss., That we will bow in submission to the will of One who is too wise to err.

Be it further resolved, That we will endeavor to carry on the work so cheerfully and efficiently begun by him.

Be it further resolved, That the love and sympathy of this Society be extended to the bereaved family in this time of sorrow.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of Brother Collins, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that they also be spread upon the minutes of the Missionary Society.

Respectfully submitted: Mary E. Cain, Mrs. P. T. Flowers, Mrs. J. E. McClurg, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father called to her heavenly home, on June 7, 1924, our beloved sister, ANNIE E. GOOCH, at the age of 75, after a long life devoted to her church and her Lord; and,

Whereas, she was a charter member of our Missionary Society at Columbia, La., ever faithful to its teachings, and an earnest laborer in all its undertakings, a cheerful and enthusiastic worker, who inspired her co-laborers to attempt greater things;

Be it resolved, That we bow with Christlike submission to this sudden passing away of our sister, and are determined to be more zealous in the performance of our duty in the church and society which she loved.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved family, sorrowing with them and at the same time rejoicing in the knowledge of her beautiful Christian life, and the worthy example she has left us.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the family and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Caldwell Watchman.

Signed: Mrs. M. L. Ferrand, Mrs. E. W. Hearn, Mrs. L. C. Nunn, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

GLEN YOUNG BRYAN was born in Sabine Parish, La., on Aug. 4, 1907, where he resided the better part of his life. He moved to Alexandria, La., and was a student in the junior class, Bolton High School. He was an active member of the First Methodist Church of Alexandria, La., as well as a regular attendant at his Sunday school class and Epworth League. He was also a member of the local Chapter of the DeMolay Society.

Whereas, the hand of death has removed from among us our beloved friend and co-worker, Glen Young Bryan; and,

Whereas, this young life was cut down by the hand of time just when it began its development into manhood; and,

Whereas, we, the members of the Intermediate-Senior Department of the Methodist Sunday school of Alexandria, La., will miss his genial face and cordial smiling welcome, his co-operation and interest in the affairs of the Sunday school;

Be it resolved, That we cherish his memory, and with warm regard and esteem take this means of expressing our appreciation for such a splendid young life.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the records of our Sunday school, and that a copy be forwaded to the members of his bereaved family.

Signed: F. D. Richardson, A. C. Coor-Pender, M. G. Hord, J. W. Klein, Committee.

THE HOLY SPIRIT, NOT GROWTH REMOVES SIN.

Growth is not the method employed for the elimination of sin. Sin is removed by the direct agency of the Holy Spirit, but after the elimination of evil, growth is the process by which the soul approaches maturity and enlarges the capacities which grace has awakened into life. One may begin that growth at any time. Of course we cannot grow in the grace of regeneration until that grace has been found, but there is prevenient grace (the grace which goes before), and we may begin the cultivation of this at any time. The desire for salvation, the sense of sin which comes upon us are the products of this grace and just in proportion as we cultivate the grace which has awakened in us these holy aspirations we hasten our approach toward the experience of conscious salvation.—Central Methodist.

RUSTON DISTRICT MEN'S BIBLE CLASS.

The Men's Bible Classes of the Ruston District will hold a joint session in Ruston on Sunday, June 29, lasting from 9:45 a. m. to 4 p. m. A basket dinner will be given on the grounds of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and a program of general interest to men, and especially to Sunday school men, will be held. Dr. R. E. Smith, of Centenary College, will teach the Sunday school lesson, the subject being, "Americanism, a Messianic Principle for the World." Rev. N. E. Joyner will deliver the sermon at 11 a. m.

In the afternoon Rev. A. J. Gearheard will discuss "District Bible Class Organization," and W. M. Dees, of Arcadia, will discuss "What Can the Men's Bible Class do in the Summer Revival Campaign?"

Plans have been made to take care of 500 men. There will be not fewer than 100 well filled baskets of good things to eat, besides the refreshments served by the Ruston people. It is the plan of the men of the Ruston District to conduct a group Bible class meeting each fifth Sunday of the year, visiting the various churches.

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training and the development of his mind, body and character depends on you, his parents. It is a grave responsibility and you should meet the issue squarely.

As every boy looks back over his past training he can point to some one man who largely dominated his formative period and impressed his personality for good upon him.

To thousands of boys Robt. K. Morgan is this dominating personality. He has been training boys for thirty years. He knows boys and loves them. He knows their problems and can guide them aright.

He has a strong faculty composed of high-class Christian teachers. A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring you a catalogue and full information about the school.

This round of quarterly conferences is to be more than the regular conference and preaching service. It will be a series of institutes, especially on the circuits, an all-day program of great interest. There will be a team of workers and speakers, and it is hoped that great crowds of people will come to all these meetings. Rev. W. M. Campbell, the district evangelist, will be in the party from May 28 to June 6, and perhaps at other times also. Rev. R. H. B. Gladney will be in the party from July 10 to 20.

Let the pastors take advantage of this opportunity by getting all the officials and as many of the membership as possible to these meetings that the work may receive the stimulus and inspiration that they are sure to bring to the people.

Sunday School

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

The Baton Rouge District Conference authorized the organization of sub-districts. On Sunday, June 22, at Baker, the West Sub-District was organized, with Mr. J. H. Rhodes, of Zachary, as secretary. The attendance and interest in this sub-district organization were fine. The next meeting will be at Zachary, July 13, at 4 p. m. Mr. O. H. Cline, of Baton Rouge, rendered valuable service in this sub-district rally. Rev. Larry Armstrong, of Baton Rouge, was there in the interest of the Baton Rouge Standard Training School, July 28-Aug. 2.

On July 2, at Natalbany, at 10:30 a. m., there will be a rally of the leaders of the Central Baton Rouge Sub-District, for a similar organization. At this meeting the matter of a Standard Training School for the Central Sub-District will be decided on.

Your writer had the privilege last Sunday of visiting the Sunday school at Slaughter, where he was pastor during his senior year at Centenary College, 1899. It was a great privilege to renew his former friendships and preach for the people he first served as pastor. On Monday, June 23, he visited Jackson, La., where the old Centenary College is located. The campus had not changed much, except the wonderful growth of the magnolia trees back of the main building. The buildings were not as dilapidated as I had expected to find them. I visited the old Methodist church, which I understand is to be remodeled soon. I saw, to the left of the pulpit, where the Millwood students sat during the Sunday school period, a memorial slab erected in 1899 to the memory of the faithful Sunday school teacher and president of Millwood Institute, Miss McCalmont. The most permanent work a teacher can do is in religious education.

The presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, Rev. H. N. Brown, is very anxious to hold a Non-Standard Training School in connection with the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting, Aug. 8-20. We understand that Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Homer, who served once as presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, is to do the preaching during the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, writes: "We had a meeting in Shreveport yesterday of the clerical members of the Training School Board. We agreed upon the date suggested, the five-day school, elected Dr. A. S. Lutz, Director; Rev. G. M. Hicks, Registration Chairman; Rev. H. L. Johns, Publicity Chairman; Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, Arrangement Chairman; Mr. J. R. Russell, Finance Chairman."

On Sunday, June 22, Mrs. J. M. Henry, Assistant Conference Superintendent, visited Minden in the interest of Sunday school work there. She was accompanied by Mrs. H. G. McDonald, of San Antonio, Tex., who had just recently taught in the Standard Training School at Monroe. Of this visit to Minden Mrs. Henry writes: "Mr. Childress, pastor, was very cordial—gave us the 11 o'clock service, which we used as best we could. In the afternoon we planned for their Training School. They want their school following the Shreveport school. The Educational Director of the school is Mr. C. O. Holland, a school man and teacher in Sunday school. The other officers are: Publicity Chairman, Mr. G. A. Rathbun; Enrollment Chairman, Mr. Leroy Rathbun; Entertainment Chairman, Mrs. Kathleen Drury; Educational Chairman, Rev. W. C. Childress; Finance Chairman, Rev. W. C. Childress. These five, with Mr. Holland, constitute the Board of Managers."

The Alexandria District Standard Training School of 1923 had the honor of issuing the largest number of credits of any school in our Conference. This year, the date of the school is Sept. 29-Oct. 4. Mr. T. W. Holloman, the faithful superintendent of this school for twenty-three years, will teach a course on "The Church and Its Work." This is one of the general unit courses, and the text will be, "The Methodist Church and Its Work," by Tippy and Kern. He taught a large class last year in "Organization and Administration of the Sunday School," the largest class ever taught in Louisiana. Dr. A. S. Lutz, of Shreveport, will teach the Bible unit in this school.

IN FAVOR OF UNIFICATION.

Dear Brother Carley: The quo warranto of the four bishops has been fully answered. The significant caveat of Bishops DuBose and Mouzon has been pronounced. We hope the plan will carry. A coalition providing for a gradual coalescence, not precluding an element of tentativeness, but rather assuring success, is indeed beautiful. To some we have crossed the Rubicon, but it is to go on to victory over evil. Remember Lot's wife.

METHODIST BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. George H. Crowell, of our church, an educator, a preacher and speaker of ability, a field man, a business school man, an active Christian worker and brother, has been selected by the Methodist Benevolent Association as assistant to the General Secretary, to give his full time and talents to the work of the Association in Conferences, schools, assemblies, local churches and communities, as well as in the home office, to a greater enlargement and growth of the Association.

It is felt that the field of service and benevolence is unlimited; 7,000 preachers, 7,000 wives and hundreds of thousands of laymen and their wives.

We are rising up and going forward with Dr. Crowell as field man in this great work in our church, with the slogan of a thousand new memberships per year!

Come, brethren, realizing the great beneficence of the department of our church work unto the old soldiers of the cross, their widows and orphans, as well as the laymen, their widows and orphans, and let us so "aid and abet" in the work that even more than the slogan of a thousand new memberships shall be realized per year.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Baton Rouge District Conference was held in Ponchatoula, La., June 3 to June 5. Rev. H. N. Brown, presiding elder, was in the chair with a complete and detailed program before him, and from the opening hymn to the benediction Thursday noon, he was master of the situation, leading, directing, admonishing, retarding and encouraging, always with a kindly spirit of brotherly love, making the conference a business success and a means of grace and spiritual uplift to all who attended.

The preaching was ably done by Brothers Andrews, Cain, Crisler, and Gunn. Inspirational addresses were given by Dr. Lutz on the Educational interests, and by Dr. O. S. Welch on the Centenary interests. Brother Vaughan represented the Orphanage, and Brother Atkinson was there with his Sunday school program. Mrs. R. H. Harper, Conference Elementary Superintendent, brought a spirit of enthusiasm and hopefulness. Prof. L. A. Sims, District Lay Leader, with his associates, O. H. Cline and K. I. Bean, put on a good Lay Activities' program.

The district was shown to be in a good, healthy coudition by the many and varied reports of pastors and laymen.

Pastors' reports showed that there were only five charges that did not have a prayer meeting. Every charge reported that they had either held or were planning to hold a revival before Conference. Two hundred and ninety-three members had been received since Conference. There were 4,127 pupils enrolled in the Sunday school, with an average attendance of 2,647. There were 28 organized Epworth Leagues, 17 Woman's Missionary Societies, and 10 Ladies' Aids. There were 336 church periodicals taken, namely, Nashville Advocate, New Orleans Christian Advocate, Missionary Voice, and Epworth Era.

Mr. Alvin P. Smith, of Hammond, was licensed to preach, and R. L. Armstrong, of First Church, Baton Rouge, and B. W. Waltman, of Natalbany, were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial and for local deacon's orders.

Delegates to the Annual Conference were elected as follows: W. S. Holmes, O. H. Cline, B. D. Talley, J. R. Abels, H. W. Jamieson, K. I. Bean, S. M. Russ, Walter Green; alternates: Mrs. B. W. June, Mrs. W. M. Nettles, Mrs. James E. Selfe, Mrs. J. W. Booth, Miss Stella Murphy.

The host and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Booth, left nothing undone which would add to the convenience or comfort of those in attendance.

All returned to their homes on Thursday, agreeing that it was a good conference.

Resolutions Adopted By The Baton Rouge District Conference.

The following resolution in the report of the Committee on Church Publications at the Baton Rouge District Conference were ordered printed in the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

There has never been a time in the judgment of the committee when the New Orleans Christian Advocate was giving better service to the people of our church than is just now the case. That of which we are justly proud in connection with the paper and the present administration is the fact that it has such a hold upon our laymen. We have repeatedly heard its praises sung from pew as well as from pulpit, and we feel that such is well worth noting.

In the person of Dr. Henry T. Carley we have an editor who is not afraid to take a stand for that which he considers right, and who has never been controlled by petty prejudices. He stands, we believe, four square on the great principles which are the foundation of the faith of our fathers, and he deserves the whole-hearted co-operation of all our members. We entirely endorse the New Orleans Christian Advocate as it now comes into our homes and hearts, and we believe that the continuance of its present staff and policy can but mean substantial advauce in its influence and circulation.

Report of Sunday School Committee.

We, your Sunday School Committee, beg leave to report as follows from 61 schools representing 24 charges:

Enrollment, 4,396; average attendance, 2,932; eight schools had observed the plan of evangelism, and 79 pupils had united with the church in these eight schools.

Only two schools had observed Sunday School Day, but eighteen said they were planning so to do. We urge every school to observe Sunday School Day as soon as possible.

We regret to learn that so few schools have observed the plan of evangelism, and urge all schools to do so in future, for the children are the seed of the church.

We cannot too highly commend the General Board and the Conference Board for the Standard Training Schools held in our district and in all the districts. It is cause for gratification that our church has led the way and has so far surpassed all other churches in this matter; but we must hold new Standard Schools all over the district, so that every church may be reached, and every teacher and every young person wishing to help forward the church of God may have the opportunity of fitting themselves to be teachers in the Sunday schools.

The next great development in religious education is going to be in the field of week-day work. Our Board now has courses nearly completed for primaries and juniors for use in the fall. Courses for vacation Bible schools will also be provided.

Let our people prepare for this great movement so that we shall be among the leaders of it.

Report of Resolutions Committee.

Your Committee on Resolutions beg leave to submit the following report:

1. That the sincere appreciation of the conference is hereby extended to the good people of Ponchatoula for their cordial and excellent entertainment. They havo made our stay a delightful one, and they, together with their pastor and his family, shall live among our pleasant memories.

2. To Brother Brown for his fine spirit and good judgment exercised in presiding over the work of our conference. His able management has manifested itself in good feeling and effective results.

3. To the male quartette for its inspiring music.

4. To all who have in any way contributed to our necessities and pleasures, and to the brethren who have brought to us the uplifting messages of the conference, and to the secretary for his efficient and painstaking service.

We would recommend that all the pastors have their church rolls revised at least once a year, dismissing those whose relation and whereabouts have become unknown, so that our church membership may become a more certain factor.

We should also recommend that our conference memorialize the Legislature to enact laws providing that our public schools be permitted to read the Scriptures and have prayer in the daily conduct of their work. The needful to be worked for is to get teachers of such spiritual qualities and such breadth of mind that they will be able to instil this godly character without prejudice to any one's denominational faith. Instead of ruling out of our educational system the Word of God with his name and spirit.

Be it further resolved, That since the year 1925 will mark the one hundredeth anniversahy of the founding of Centenary College, now located at Shreveport, La., we heartily endorse the move to celebrate this great event with a thank offering and such ceremonies as may be deemed suitable by those entrusted with such authority.

May we at this time and in this place make an appeal on behalf of our boys and girls, through the spirit of our national position? Since the hand of God has been so manifested in the founding of our nation and in the conduct of its affairs to this good hour when we stand out before the world as God-chosen people to carry his will and his spirit to all nations; be it also resolved, That we appeal to our ministers and lay workers to make special effort to get the importance of this fact vividly before our people. God has blessed us according to our spirit of national greatness through the bounty of his own glory, in carrying the sweetness of his spirit and the power of his truth to an oppressed and bleeding world; but we are in danger of losing him and destroying ourselves through influences that are sapping the mental, moral and spiritual vitality of our young people, and these influences, together with other influences from the millions of low and dangerous lives that are flooding the fortifications of our nation, are beginning to lead us from our godly position towards the cesspools of sin and weakness. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Goal for Alexandria District.

1. Reach every woman in our churches through the Woman's Missionary Societies.

2. Large auxiliaries shall help to organize small places and then care for them until they are able to stand alone.

3. Have more auxiliaries on the honor roll for the coming year.

4. Organize as many departments of the work as possible.

5. Go forward!—yes, go forward to the building of the greatest camp ground of the church, "The Bennett Memorial."

The Pauline Randle Loving Cup.

Miss Pauline Randle, Louisiana's own missionary to the Koreans, is at home on furlough, and she brought a present to the Louisiana Conference. It is a most beautiful vase, on the sides of which are etched the plum and lotus blossoms which Koreans love so well. Miss Randle suggested we use same as a loving cup, and as this is to be "Young People's Year" throughout all Conferences, it has been decided the cup shall go this year to the district making the greatest gain in Young People's organizations. (When a full Young People's organization is impracticable, a "Circle" holding regular meetings, paying dues, etc., will be counted, provided it meets the requirements laid down by the Conference Superintendent of Young People.)

The following rules shall govern the contest:

1. Dues paid for at least one full quarter before organization can enter competition.

2. Pledge paid in full before end of fourth quarter.

3. Quarterly reports sent promptly and regularly to Conference Superintendent.

The cup next year shall be given to the Young People's Auxiliary making the largest gain in membership, and shall remain in the possession of that Auxiliary.

Let us as districts let this gift from our beloved Miss Randle serve as a stimulus to us to put our very best into the Young People's work this year, competing graciously for the cup which Miss Randle has so lovingly presented to us. And at the close of the year we shall all share happily in the unspeakable joy that will be ours in seeing our Young People everywhere enlisted in missionary service for our Saviour.

A LAWMAKER'S APPEAL TO MORALS.

The remarkable spectacle of a legislative body enjoining the people it represents to intensify the work of the churches and the agencies of religions education is afforded by the South Dakota Legislature, which, in a series of resolutions recently adopted, acknowledged that a multiplicity of statutes were ineffective in staying the "unprecedented crime wave sweeping America," and asserted that religion only could meet the need. It is said to be the first time that a State Legislature has presented such a formula to its people. Referring to the "crime wave," the preamble charges up the trouble to "the emphasis in recent years placed on material values and the small concern paid to spiritual values in home, school and society." A "great necessity" is recognized "for reform in modern home life, school economy and social practices." Laws are not "effective provisions for producing the end sought," and the Legislature turns to religion, declaring with Washington, that "the strength of a republic is in the character of its citizens, their intelligence and their morals, inseparable from their religion." The remedy for the present situation "must be effected through the inculcation of morality, spirituality and conscience in the young, in church, school and home." Therefore, as we quote the words from the Hamlin County News (Bryant, S. D.) the Legislature at its recent session:

"Resolved: That the people of South Dakota be enjoined to at once address themselves to renewed effort to restore the balance between the spiritual and the material that our children be reared up in the precepts of fundamental righteousness.

"That the churches and Sabbath schools be constrained to intensify their work and to extend it to every child within their respective spheres of influence.

"That parents be adjured to exert every effort to restore the old-time influence of the home in molding the lives of their children, for the development of conscience and morality; that the family altar be restored and that in self-sacrificing love the little ones be trained in the simple virtues of truthfulness, honesty and respect for the rights of others.

"That the schools promptly reform their methods so that the rudimentary studies, as well as the sciences be taught only as subordinate to righteousness. That the emphasis be placed upon morality, good conscience, respect for parents, reverence for age and experience, and that all learning is but the handmaiden of eternal goodness.

"That it is the judgment of the Legislature of South Dakota that only upon the lines herein suggested can the true balance be restored and the crime wave checked, and civilization preserved."

"It's all remarkably sound and sensible," remarks The Continent (Presbyterian), "and if so much rational moral statesmanship can come up to a head at Pierre, why not in other State capitals as well?" But, we are told, the South Dakota Legislature should be more definite in its counsel to the schools. Says The Continent: "They legally control the public schools. Why do they not pass a law requiring the ethical instruction they have recommended? That would make a still better precedent for other States to follow."—Literary Digest.

LAW OBSERVANCE.

Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the "Golden Age of Man." Without reverence for law, nations perish.

Good citizenship requires and demands that what is right should not only be made known, but be made prevalent, and what is evil should not only be brought to light, but destroyed. Abraham Lincoln said, "A man who violates the law is neither a Republican nor a Democrat, but a criminal." If the boys and girls of the present day are taught and trained to observe the law early in life, there will be less need for law enforcement officers a generation hence.

Read some of the following quotations:

"You laugh at the Prohibition Laws. The libertine laughs at the marriage laws. Watch out that your son does not laugh at all laws."—Col. Dan M. Smith.

"The man who patronizes the bootlegger is a grade lower in the moral scale than the bootlegger himself. The bootlegger sins for money; his patron places his love of Liquor above respect for the Law."—Wm. J. Bryan.

The President has requested Congress to appropriate more than thirteen million dollars to combat rum smuggling.

"Prohibition in the United States is both a permanence and a success."—Senator Sheppard (Texas).

"We are in the midst of a great nation-wide effort to drive out alcohol as a beverage, which is the greatest contributor to crime, poverty and disease, and the greatest foe to human welfare."—Congressman Cranton (Michigan).

Miss Mabel W. Wildebrant, Assistant United States Attorney General, said recently in the Anti-Saloon League Convention: "I don't care whether a man is a Republican or a Democrat, if he can see straight down the barrel of responsibility under his oath of office, and shoot straight and steady regardless of how many ward bosses may be trying to jog his elbow."—Save America.

Epworth League

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which was held in the buildings at Grenada College, June 18-21, was one of the most largely attended and most successful in the history of the organization in this territory. There were present, as enrolled delegates and visitors, 246, which taxed the capacity of the dormitories to the limit to take care of them.

Rev. A. Standifer Raper, of Kosciusko, was elected the new president for the coming year and will lead the forces of the young people in their activities and their gathering next June when they assemble for the annual meeting at Grenada College. The outgoing president, Rev. Julian S. Duncan, of Pickens, who has accomplished splendid success in planning and executing the program this year, has been appointed pastor of the English-speaking people in Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, and will sail during the early days of July to assume his new duties.

The Conference at its closing session, Saturday, presented the outgoing president, through Hon. F. E. Whitehead, of Greenwood, a twenty dollar gold piece as a token of their love and esteem, requesting that he secure some memento which would remind him of their interest in him and his work. One hundred and fifty-three certificates were issued to the Leaguers who enrolled for credit work and remained the entire time reporting to every group, three each day, and in the chapel for addresses and business meetings.

The officers elected are: Rev. A. S. Raper, Kosciusko, president; E. E. Whitehead, Greenwood, Vice President; Miss Martha DuBerry, Tupelo, Secretary; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Belzoni, Treasurer; J. W. Finch, Eupora, Era Agent. The following were appointed superintendents: Mrs. J. D. Magruder, Tunica, Intermediate; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Durant, Junior; Rev. J. H. Holder, New Albany, Life Service. The list of District Secretaries has not yet been completed.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The third Annual Assembly of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League opened Monday, June 9, with a registration of almost three hundred delegates in the dormitories the first night.

Mr. Hawkins and his good wife, who was chief chaperone, arrived on the campus Sunday, and were all ready for the reception of the Leaguers when they began to arrive early Monday morning. They came from every nook and corner of our Conference, coming by train, automobile and Ford, and some on foot; and by Tuesday night Whitworth College was overflowing with real live Epworth Leaguers, every one full of Epworth League pep, and ready for any work or play that might come his way.

It was a gathering that would thrill the heart of almost any one. The young people were eager to learn, trying to get something that would be a personal benefit and something that they could carry back to their home chapters. It was possibly the most successful of all the Conferences and Assemblies up to this time. Every one entered into class work as eagerly as he did into the play life, and a very large majority of delegates carried home with them their credit certificates, showing that they had really been at work during the week.

We had some of the best speakers ever on our program and every one, except one, was present to fill his engagement, and it would be hard indeed to say which of the many fine addresses was the most enjoyed. The daily addresses of Rev. Joseph A. Smith were truly a spiritual feast, and had there been nothing else to feast one's soul on, each delegate could have gone home with his vessel well filled. Rev. F. K. Means, of Jackson, and Dr. Carby, of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, [illegible] brought w[illegible] which was almost worth the trip to the college.

Much real constructive work was accomplished in the business sessions. A recommendation brought in by the "Plan of Work Committee"

AFRAID SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Operation Advised, But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made It Unnecessary

Glasgow, Kentucky. — "I was run-down, nervous, with no appetite. My side had given me trouble for five or six years. At times it was all I could do to live, and the doctor said I couldn't live but a short time longer without an operation. That was two years ago. My sister-in-law recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She had never used it herself, but she said one of her neighbors suffered just like I did, and it cured her. After I had taken four bottles the pain left my side. I had a fine appetite to eat anything that was put before me, and I began to do all my work and my washing, something I hadn't done for years. I am a dressmaker, and this last fall I began suffering with my side again, so I began taking the Vegetable Compound again. I am on my fourth bottle, which makes eight in all I have taken. I feel so much better when I take it and everybody tells me I look better. My appetite improves and I feel stronger in every way. I am a very nervous woman and it seems to help my nerves so much." — Mrs. MAGGIE WALLER, Glasgow, Ky.

FROM REV. J. A. WELLS.

Dear Brother Carley: I am just wondering what we'll read in the Advocate after the unification question vanishes into "thin air." So I thought I had better come along with my "report."

I have a few "dots." First, I want to say the last prayer meeting at our church was the best ever! I had announced we would spend most of the time in "Church Gossip"—talking about the church, mentioning only the good things our church had done for us personally, and what it meant to the community at large. Well, sir, I really got shouting, happy tears of joy came thick and fast as I listened to some of the things mentioned. One man who has really been converted in the old-fashioned way tried to tell what the church had meant to him personally, but he couldn't tell it. "It's better felt than told!" I thought of the words of Jesus as this man said he owed the salvation of his soul to the church—"What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Others spoke of the church being instrumental in their salvation. Glory to God! My heart was certainly "strangely warmed" as these testimonies were given. In a peculiar way I was encouraged wonderfully.

Second, I want to say I had another peculiarly gratifying experience recently in conducting the music for the South McComb Baptist pastor in a two weeks' meeting. The initials of this pastor are "R. R."—"Railroad Jones" as I call him, but I told them he was a "broad gauge," and he proved it by asking me to conduct his singing and standing so nobly by me. His brother did the preaching, and how he did hit sin! He, too, is a "broad gauge" Baptist. I certainly did enjoy helping in this meeting, for two special reasons: Because of the courteous treatment of the Baptist people, and because of the part I was asked to take—directing the music. I don't boast of being a singer, but my! how I do love to try! It has been several years since I had done this exclusively in a revival and I did enjoy it.

Third, I am now enjoying Rev. H. A. Gatlin's preaching at South McComb's Methodist church. He is doing the preaching in Brother Oliver's regular revival, and he's shooting his "Gattling gun" right along, too. I am trying to bring up my "end of the stick" in the singing, but I can't do my part as well as Gatlin and Oliver do theirs, but I am enjoying it just the same.

All along the way I have had many things to be thankful for, but never felt more like praising God than these last few weeks and months because of his blessed presence in an unusual way as I study, pray, and visit the people, as opportunity affords. In my last meeting, at Natalbany, La., I cannot remember when I was in a closing service of a meeting so blessed as the last service down there. The attendance and interest were just simply fine. Brother Nelson was with me most of the time, not able to preach, but wonderfully able to sing and pray the fire down! The pastor, Rev. B. W. Waltman, is a fine chap. His wife is great, his people are grand.

This is hardly as interesting as unification articles, but perhaps it will do to "taper off" on until this unification "tomfoolry" is cast into the junk pile forever and forever. Amen!

J. A. WELLS.

NO APOLOGIES.

A wise old preacher is the author of the following advice: "Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, declare it; if not, hold your peace. Have short introductions. Say good things from the first and stop before you get prosy. Do not scream. Thunder is harmless. Lightning kills. If you have lightning, you can afford to thunder.—Selected.

OPPOSED TO THE PLAN OF UNIFICATION.

Mr. Editor: I am one of a great host of laymen who are very much opposed to the proposed plan of unification between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. I love my church and have given it as liberal support as my means would permit, and I want to continue to support it as long as I live. But the adoption of this plan means only contention and strife among our own people and a large secession of members. The race question is settled if it is let alone, but any agitation will revive it in all its fury. Thousands of Southern white people are not going to remain in a church that is controlled even in part by the Negroes. It is to the interest of both white and black, and more especially to the black, that they remain separate. Surely the preachers who advocate this plan do not know the real feeling of the laymen.

tragedy of the world will be in the downfall of our children, and that downfall will surely come if we as a people do not rally to the rescue. We cannot separate our individual life from our national life. We cannot separate the character of our citizenship on earth from the character of our citizenship in heaven. We have come thus far under the star of God's love, but the purity of purpose and the consecration to service of our forefathers enabled God to use us as individuals and as a nation in carrying to the world the greatest demonstration of Christ's spirit that time has ever recorded, and he will continue using us in leading the nations of the earth into his spirit until the world is in the glory of the millennium dawn, with our nation as the brilliant morning star, with its beautiful radiations reaching every point of the human firmament. Such is the direction of God's leadership among us. But woe unto us, our children, and our nation if we lose our position in God's favor. We wonder if we cannot enlarge the vision of our people, and obtain a renewed consecration through the national spirit which must lead unto the necessary personal attitude.

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? ACTION OF THE CALLED SESSION OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The called session of the General Conference, held in Chattanooga, Tenn., July 2-4, 1924, by a vote of 297 for to 75 against, adopted the Plan of Unification between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and handed it down to the Annual Conferences for their action during the year 1925.

The Conference was called to order promptly at 9:30 o'clock, Wednesday morning, July 2, in the Soldiers and Sailors' Auditorium, by Bishop Warren A. Candler, Senior Bishop. All the bishops of the church were present except Bishop E. R. Hendrix and Bishop W. B. Murrah, who were absent on account of illness, and Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, who was unable to be present at the opening session on account of the death of a sister on the day preceding. At the proper time the Conference ordered a message of sympathy sent to Bishop Darlington.

The bishops came upon the platform in a body, led by Bishop Candler, and at their appearance the Conference rose and greeted them with applause.

The devotional exercises consisted of singing hymn No. 5; recital of the Apostles' Creed, led by Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs; prayer, led by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp; the reading of Psalm 84, by Bishop J. E. Dickey; the reading of the third chapter of Ephesians, by Bishop Sam R. Hay; the singing of hymn No. 180, announced by Bishop H. A. Boaz, and prayer, offered by Dr. A. J. Lamar.

The organization of the Conference was effected by the unanimous election of Dr. A. F. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, as secretary, and the election, upon nomination of Dr. Watkins, of F. S. Parker, J. A. Burrow, W. Asbury Christian, W. E. Morris, Robert Selby, R. S. Satterfield, M. T. Haw, J. H. Eakes, L. H. Estes, I. C. Jenkins, and R. G. Mood as assistant secretaries, and the adoption of rules of order for the session.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the work of this special General Conference be limited to the question of unification; and when this special General Conference has taken such action as it may deem wise on the question of unification, that it adjourn sine die."

The adoption of this resolution settled any question that might have arisen as to the work to be done by the special session.

Bishop W. P. Thirkield, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. J. R. Joy, editor of the New York Christian Advocate, were presented to the Conference.

Upon request of the local Committee on Entertainment, the Conference voted to have an official picture taken at the close of the morning session.

The Episcopal Address was then read by Bishop Candler, as follows:

To the General Conference, Assembled in Special Session, July 2, 1924, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Brethren: The General Conference held in Hot Springs, Ark., May, 1922, in a report creating a Commission to meet a like Commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church "for the continuance of negotiations looking toward unification in harmony with the basic principles already agreed upon by the Joint Commission as feasible and desirable or upon such other basis as our Commission may determine," adopted the following resolution:

"Instead of the Joint Convention proposed, we recommend a special session of the General Conference of our Church, when a plan of unification is endorsed by a two-thirds vote of each Commission and approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, then our College of Bishops is empowered and instructed to call the special session of our General Conference."

A plan of unification was agreed upon and endorsed by each Commission in accordance with the provisions of the foregoing resolution.

The plan thus proposed was laid before the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, assembled in May, 1924, at Springfield, Mass., and the College of Bishops was officially notified of the action of that body on the matter by the following certificate, attached to a copy of the "Report of the Commission on Unification to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

"This will certify that this report was presented in this form to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was printed in the Daily Christian Advocate, and adopted by the General Conference on May 7, 1924, by a count vote of 802 to 13."

Signed: Edwin H. Hughes, President; Raymond J. Wade, Secretary.

The original copy of this certificate is laid before you, accordingly.

The following call for a special session of the General Conference was issued:

"By order of a majority of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a special session of the General Conference is hereby called to meet July 2, 1924, to consider the plan of unification as approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"The place of meeting of this special session will be selected and announced by the committee appointed and authorized by the General Conference which was held at Hot Springs, Ark., May, 1922, to choose the place and arrange for the entertainment of the next session of the General Conference.

"Nashville, Tenn., May 20, 1924."

Signed: Warren A. Candler, Chairman; Collins Denny, Secretary.

In pursuance of this call you are here assembled to-day.

The report of the Commission on Unification will be laid before you by the Chairman of the Commission, to which we ask your careful and prayerful consideration.

Praying for you the guidance of the Holy Spirit in your deliberations, and "all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies of Christ," we remain, dear brethren, your servants and fellow-laborers in his kingdom.

Signed: Warren A. Candler, Collins Denny, Edwin D. Mouzon, John M. Moore, W. F. McMurry, U. V. W. Darlington, H. M. Du Bose, W. N. Ainsworth, James Cannon, Jr., W. B. Beauchamp, J. E. Dickey, Sam R. Hay, Hoyt M. Dobbs, H. A. Boaz.

To the Special Session of the General Conference Assembled in Chattanooga, Tenn., July 2, 1924.

Dear Brethren: We, the undersigned, did not join in the call for the special session of the General Conference, because we were convinced that such call was illegal and contrary to the Constitution of the General Conference and of the church to which we have pledged absolute fidelity. The grounds of our dissent have been published, and we do not think it necessary to reiterate our reasons. We still entertain this view, and, therefore, do not waive our previous dissent, but as a majority of the bishops have issued the call and have assumed full responsibility for the legality of the special session, and are, equally with ourselves, entitled to their judgment, we are here to render such service as we can and to discharge every duty that rests upon us in connection with the momentous issues that confront our beloved church.

Signed: Warren A. Candler, Collins Denny, James E. Dickey.

Bishop Candler asked if there would be any objection to Bishop Darlington's signing the statement of the minority bishops upon his arrival, if he desired to do so, and no objection was offered.

It had been generally felt that the legality of the special session of the General Conference would be the first matter for consideration; and this matter was at once brought before the body in the following resolution, signed by Dr. A. J. Lamar, of the Alabama Conference, and Judge Joseph E. Cockrell, of the North Texas Conference:

"Whereas there has been expressed a doubt as to the legality of this special session of the General Conference and whereas, if the plan of unification now proposed is finally adopted by a constitutional method, the result will involve title to all property now owned by our church; and whereas it is certain that if a General Conference is called by the bishops, by and with the advice of the Annual Conferences as the Constitution clearly provides for prior to 1866, there can be no question of the legality of a General Conference so called—therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this General Conference request the bishops of all the Annual Conferences to join in a call for the General Conference to meet on the first Wednesday in May, 1925, to vote on the adoption of the plan of unification of our church and the Methodist Episcopal Church submitted to this General Conference by the Commission on Unification."

The contest was on! By common consent, the debate was allowed to take wide range. Dr. Lamar spoke in favor of the resolution, maintaining that there was sufficient question of the legality of the present session to make it practically certain that endless lawsuits would result from the adoption of the plan of unification if it should be passed upon by the special session and then adopted by the Annual Conferences.

Judge John S. Candler, of the North Georgia Conference, spoke against the resolution, maintaining that the legality of the Conference had been fully and finally determined by the action of the majority of the bishops in calling the special session. Judge Candler also maintained that no property rights were affected by the proposed plan, and that no suit in court would hold with reference to such rights.

At the conclusion of Judge Candler's speech, Dr. W. W. Scott, of the North Alabama Conference, gained the floor to speak in favor of the resolution, but the hour of adjournment arrived before he had fully begun, and the session adjourned with the understanding that Dr. Scott would have the floor at the opening of the afternoon session. Bishop W. P. Thirkield pronounced the benediction.

Bishop Collins Denny presided at the afternoon session, which convened at 3 o'clock. Bishop Isaac Lane, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, was presented to the Conference.

Dr. Scott took the floor and spoke in favor of the Lamar-Cockrell resolution. The resolution was further discussed by Judge H. H. White, of Louisiana (against), Judge Perry S. Rader, of Southwest Missouri (for), and Judge W. L. Dean, of Texas (for).

THE STAR OF HOPE.

By Dwight E. Marvin.

It matters not how dark the day,
Nor hard and rough the upward way;
Lift thou thine heart in faith, and pray—
The star of hope shines in the night
And all is bright, and all is bright.

It matters not how large thy loss,
And though thy gold be turned to dross;
Thy Lord hath won for thee a cross—
The star of hope shines in the night
And all is bright, and all is bright.

It matters not how great thy need,
E'en though thine heart with sorrow bleed;
Jesus will take thine hand and lead—
The star of hope shines in the night
And all is bright, and all is bright.

It matters not though many tears
Bedim thy sight—fill thee with fears;
The prayer of faith the Master hears—
The star of hope shines in the night
And all is bright, and all is bright.

DIFFICULTIES IN POLAND.

By Rev. W. A. Langley.

One of the hardest blows that has come to the Methodist Mission in Poland has been the loss, or the forced sale, of its orphanage, Beauchamp Home, in Pustomyty. There was one paragraph in the deed to this property which stated that unlesss the deed was recognized by the Government Laud Office within three months after purchase by the Mission, the property would go back to its former owner.

Three months passed after the purchase of the property in October, 1922, and the title was not recognized by the Land Office, as provided in the deed. The failure was due to influence brought to hear by a Roman archbishop, who wrote on the margin of the deed that no loyal Polock, or Roman Catholic, would ever allow a Methodist institution to remain in Pustomyty by granting property ownership.

However, we were assured by the man from whom we bought that we would never be given any trouble by him, for, according to law, he could neither sell nor rent the property, without the consent of the Mission. Therefore, he persuaded us to continue in possession of the estate as our own, he believing that we might remain in peaceful possession until the property became ours by that right. We in turn reasoned that we did not particularly care for formal recognition of the title if the property might remain in our ownership and possession. That was all that was necessary for our work, and all that we wanted or asked for.

The man who sold us the property was Senator Lewikowski, of the Polish Parliament. We were led to believe that a man of his influence would finally find a way to give us a clear title to that for which we had paid our own money. The Senator did work very hard to effect the title in our favor; hut his labors were without avail. On the contrary, the Roman clergy, seeing the sympathies of the Senator were with us, went to work and organized a political clique against him, so that he has suffered no little scandal in the political held because he sold a piece of land to the Methodists, hut his political assaulters did not change his position. He stood hy us faithfully, until all was finished; then he said that if he could let us have more property, he would sell us to-day in preference to any other organization he knew.

But the influeuce of one honest man could effect nothing in the face of so many adherents to organized Roman ecclesiasticism. The priests continued to hound the officials in the Land Office. They sent in false reports as to our political position; they tried to create public scandals against us in the press; they spied in on our service, searching for material to use against us; they watched us every time we left the place aud tried to ascertain the whys and wherefores of our every step; they even rumored that they had offered a bonus for the life of the superintendent of Beauchamp Home. These only serve as a few examples of the various difficulties connected with our battle for ownership. Finally, the priests instigated a plot among the peasants, whereby the peasants were led to believe that our lands would be divided among those needing more land. A Government Commission was sent to investigate our property for that purpose; but the Commission was composed of liberal men, and laughed at the idea. Then certain individuals who had influence with the clergy tried to scheme the place into their hands, but this attempt was likewise a failure. A last unsuccessful attempt was made to wrest the property from the hands of the Methodists and make it a home for old Roman priests, who were unable to work.

Not being satisfied with so many failures, the agents of Rome changed their tactics. They subtly worked on certain of the men in the Land Office and influenced them to expropriate the property from us. The methods they used were of the most unfair type. The Land Office wrote us a note in the name of Senator Lewikowski with almost insulting language. This note gave us only thirty days to sell the place, else it would have been expropriated. The blow was a heavy one, but we realized it was not the Polish Government, but the decaying ranks of Romanism behind the threat. We tried to appeal the case, hut we were denied that right; so it was left to us as Christians to suffer the consequences of the uncouth note.

We looked about only a little, and we found a buyer who was able to help us out of the financial side of the question. The property was purchased by us just after the war, when everything was very cheap. As a result, we sold it for almost twice the amount we gave for it. However, then we sold it for only about two-thirds the price we could have got had we had a longer time in which to sell. Besides, we had completed several very expensive items of repair and additions since coming to the place a little over a year ago. We are under contract to give possession to the new buyer by June 1. In order to do that it will he necessary to send most of our boys to our other institutions. We shall retain only about twenty, whom we shall move to Skolimow temporarily. The breaking up of Beauchamp Home will greatly interrupt, if not alter, our orphanage policy. It was our original intention to establish here a large agricultural and industrial home for boys. The plan was to teach the boys to work, and let them be as near self-supporting as possible. They were to make their own food on the farm in the summer time; and in the winter they were to make their own shoes, clothes, etc., in our own shops. At the same time, they were to attend school enough to acquire an ordinary education. But now with the loss of this beautiful piece of property and the shortage of our monthly budgets, we doubt if the original idea of our instiution can be realized at any early day.

The work of such an institution is greatly needed. There are thousands of children who have no parents. Some were left orphans hy the Bolsheviki; some by the Germans; and still others were left homeless by the combined causes of disease, poor homes, and poor clothes; all of which always lay such a heavy toll upon a war-ridden land like Poland. There seems to be little regard for children by the Poles. Especially is there little concern on the part of the Roman church to the poor children. One mother went to the priest and told him that she wanted to give him her boy, for she was too poor to care for him since the death of her husband. The priest told the woman that he could not take the child into their orphanage because of trifling reasons. The woman began to cry, and said that the boy would die for want of food. The priest answered that it would not be bad for the child to die, for there were plenty of children if that one died. The mother then came to our institution and gave us her boy. The priest learned of the action of the woman regarding her son, and he excommunicated her for being loyal to the Methodists. Many such instances prove to us the need of child welfare work; yet at the same time we are conscious of the unappreciative view assumed by the Polish church agencies that would render such aid. Bnt the children themselves are not unappreciative of our efforts. Sometimes their big round, rosy faces are all the encouragement that we have, but that is sufficient in itself to inspire one to greater things. Is s in these children that the Methodist Mission in Poland will do its greatest work now; and it is through these same children that the Mission will do its greatest work in the future.

Also, the conditions in Poland show us the need of a high-grade agricultural school, such as we had planned for here. The country's chief industry is agriculture; yet its methods are so primitive that it can never hope to prosper under present conditions. Last year we orgauized our farm here; and when we had bought everything that there was in the machinery stores, it was so poorly equipped that we did not know how to begin to farm. It was necessary that we add to our farm tools by making in our own shops, a wooden-footed plowstock, a twister, a sweep, a bull tongue, several shovel hoes, and a reaping knife or two. When these were added, it was all that we had to make a crop with. And our farm was better equipped than any farm in miles of us.

The Polish people are opposed to anything foreign. They are prone to consider themselves self-sufficient. This characteristic, however, is explained by the fact that many evils were introduced into various parts of the country during the respective periods of domination by the Prussians, Austrians, and Russians. Now this characteristic is kept alive and nurtured by the clerical party. This party teaches that a man must be a Roman Catholic to be a good Polock. It claims that the Roman church kept the Polish republic alive for the centuries of foreign domination. It undervalues the progressive ideas of the Great West; and is almost opposed to the aggressive measures of social or political reform. This party controls about seventy-five per cent of the population. As a result, education, commerce, industry, religion, and moral forces are two hundred years behind those of western Europe.

At the present time, one can feel a slow evolution, which possesses a tendency to break loose from the age-long traditions and assume an air of progress. So we labor, believing that our religion and teaching are having no little part in the evolution to better conditions of life in Poland. Even though we often meet obstacles, and sometimes we meet defeat temporarily, we know that we are fighting for the right—and that right must win; that the forces which now oppose us will some day lend us a helping hand.

MATRON WANTED.

We are in need of a matron, and would like to correspond with some good Christian woman of mature age, without family incumbrance, and a Methodist. Position is now open. Address Rob't W. Vaughan, Superintendent, Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, Ruston, La.

MRS. ELVIRA A. CARRÉ—AN APPRECIATION.

By Rev. R. H. Harper, D. D.

A life of great usefulness in the kingdom of God was brought to a close when, on May 28, 1924, at the home of a nephew, Mr. Charles Manson, in Audubon Place, New Orleans, Mrs. Elvira A. Carré passed peacefully to her eternal reward.

Mrs. Elvira A. Carre, nee Elvira A. Beach, daughter of Dr. E. D. Beach and Jane Eustick, was born in Lockland, Ohio, on March 31, 1842. When she was but four years of age her parents moved to the city of New Orleans, where the remainder of her long life was spent. At the age of twenty she was married to Mr. Walter W. Carré, a Christian gentleman of Huguenot descent, who served for some time as a steward of Carondelet Methodist Church. He was the founder of the lumber firm which has been a business landmark in the city of New Orleans to the present day. Mr. Carré died when the sons of the home were small, and it was illustrative of Mrs. Carré's force of character and native ability that, when she found that the business left by her husband was declining, she employed some one to instruct her in bookkeeping and, having mastered that and having become acquainted with the details of the business, assumed active charge for ten years—until her eldest son had reached an age to relieve her of responsibility. Mrs. Carré is survived by four sons—Messrs. W. W., D. B. and Tudor B. Carré, who are associated in business, and Henry Beach Carré, distinguished minister, lecturer and professor in the School of Religion, Vanderbilt University, and a large number of grandchildren and other relatives.

It was eminently fitting that Mrs. Carré was buried on Ascension Day, and from the altar of First Methodist Church of New Orleans, for she had been connected with that congregation for nearly eighty years. She and her friend, Mrs. A. A. Bartels, who survives her, were members of the "Infant Class" in the old Poydras Street Church. Since that time Mrs. Carré has been continuously connected with the congregation, which afterward made its home in the fine old church on Carondelet Street, and which has worshipped in recent years in the splendid structure on St. Charles Avenue. Thus throughout a long life she was a faithful and active member of the congregation now known as First Methodist Church. When the Carondelet property was sold and the present magnificent building was erected, she was largely interested in the move and, with her four sons, presented the great organ in the church as a memorial to her husband. Mrs. Carré organized the first parsonage society in the church, a move which resulted in the purchase of a house at the corner of Brainerd street and Jackson avenue, and later in the purchase of the present large and comfortable home in which the pastor resides. She succeeded Mrs. R. M. Walmsley as president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Carondelet Church, and she held that office for twenty-eight years. She was largely responsible for the interest of Carondelet church in the Mary Keener School in the City of Mexico. In these and other ways through the years she rendered a service in the church which it is impossible to measure.

It was natural that such a woman should have been called into the great enterprises of the church at large. Mrs. Carré was the first president of the City Mission Board of New Orleans, a place she held for many years, and she helped to found Mary Werlein Mission and St. Mark's Hall. She was State president of the Woman's Missionary Society for many years. She was likewise connected with several Christian and social agencies allied to the church, being a moving spirit in the organization of the Young Women's Christian Association in New Orleans, serving as its first president from 1911 to 1914, and having a great influence in the building of the present beautiful home of the Association on Gravier street; also serving for many years as president of the Christian Woman's Exchange of New Orleans, and as president of the Woman's Association, Monteagle, Tennessee.

It might be said that this remarkable life of usefulness has come to a close, but such is not the case. Bugle notes may die in yon rich sky and faint on field or hill or river, but

"Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow forever and forever."

Her influence will abide at the altar of the church where she worshipped and served and everywhere that she touched with a soft but firm hand the many things designed to make our earthly earth a better place. She was "strong in will and rich in wisdom;" she had all "the charm of woman" and "all the breadth of man." Mrs. Carré had great executive ability and the power of initiative, but with all there was dignity, a sweetness and a gentleness that made hers a beautiful and perfect womanhood. Like the woman of Proverbs, she was above the price of rubies, and her children rise up and call her blessed. And many, many others beg the privilege, as they have shared the sorrow, of joining with her children in calling her blessed, in voicing their gratitude for the power which her life has been in the church during the greater part of eighty years. And children's children will yet bless the memory of this brave and beautiful woman who lived and wrought and died in a brave and simple faith.

We see about us sin and tragedy and death. But amid all the sorrow and the tears, it is good to know the power of God to use a human life. Many honors came to Mrs. Carré, but this was the glory of all——that God found in her one whom he could employ in a great and noble service. And when she had finished the work God had given her to do she fell asleep at the noon of the day and awoke in the eternal noon. Her eyes closed calmly on this world and she awoke in glory. No furrow of pain lined her face; no shadow rested on her brow. After life's many changes she had found a changeless May. Peacefully she died, as beautifully she had lived and wrought, exhibiting in her more than eighty years all the virtues and the graces of a noble Christian womanhood.

IS GOVERNOR SMITH HIMSELF "FANATICAL AND HYPOCRITICAL?"

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Chairman, National Legislative Committee, Anti-Saloon League of America.

The Associated Press recently issued a statement by Governor Smith, of New York, concerning the Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Act. No one questions the right of Governor Smith to his views on the subject of prohibition, but in view of the very recent strong, sweeping deliverances by several great Protestant bodies concerning that same Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Act, it is in exceedingly poor taste for Governor Smith to indict those great Protestant bodies by saying: "I maintain that the present hypocritical attitude toward the whole question of prohibition would be greatly relieved, etc." One can but inquire if a great gathering of Roman Catholics had made similar declarations concerning prohibition, whether Governor Smith would have denounced them also as "hypocritical," and also may be pardoned for inquiring whether Governor Smith himself is so infallible that he can safely brand others as "hypocrites."

Furthermore, when Governor Smith states, "The clause making one-half of one per cent the legal maximum of alcoholic content was written into the Volstead Act by the Anti-Saloon agents to whom I referred as fanatical drys," he either discloses his own ignorance of the facts concerning "the one-half of one per cent" legislation, or takes for granted the ignorance of his readers.

As chairman of the National Legislative Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America since the organization of that committee in 1913, and therefore thoroughly familiar with the legislation which has been advocated in Congress by the League, the writer flatly denies that the Anti-Saloon League originated the "one-half of one per cent" legislation. The "one-half of one per cent" was not invented or contributed to the Federal liquor laws by the Anti-Saloon League.

It had been specially held under the Federal laws for many years that a tax was required to be paid on all fermented liquor made from malt or any substitute therefor containing one-half of one per cent alcohol. (See Treasury decisions 1235, 1307, 1360, 1757, 2351, 2370, 2410.) Before the adoption of the Federal Prohibition Amendment, there were bootleggers and moonshiners engaged in unlawful competition with distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers, who had paid taxes and a license fee to carry on their business. These licensed liquor dealers insisted that a higher alcoholic content than one-half of one per cent for non-intoxicating beverages would make it practically impossible to enforce the law, and to protect those holding license, from the moonshiners and the bootleggers.

No one has ever insisted, not even the "fanatical drys" of the Anti Saloon League, that one-half of one per cent was an accurate definition of "intoxicating liquors." But this standard of one-half of one per cent has been sustained by the courts, including the United States Supreme Court, as sound in principle, and as necessary to effective enforcement, and as showing the purpose of Congress to carry out Section 2 of the Eighteenth Amendment, which calls upon Congress to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment "by appropriate legislation." Why did not Governor Smith and those who hold his view denounce the one-half of one per cent as a "legislative lie" when it was the standard set by the Government for the protection of the licensed liquor dealers? Certainly, if it is a "fanatical" standard now, it was a "fanatical" standard then, long before the "fanatical" Anti-Saloon League advocated the passage of the Volstead Act by Congress.

Nothing shows the lack of logic and utter fanaticism in anti-prohibitionists like Governor Smith more clearly than the present situation concerning the speed laws. Over 15,000 persons were killed last year, and multiplied thousands more were injured by the violation of the speed laws by reckless, selfish drivers. No such heavy toll has resulted from the violation of the Volstead Act. Do Governor Smith and these "fanatical" anti-prohibitionists demand the repeal or the modification of speed laws on the ground that they cannot be enforced? Nay, verily. They cry for speedier convictions and heavier penalties to put an end to the "slaughter of the innocents." That is just what is needed to secure the enforcement of the Volstead law—speedier convictions and heavier penalties. The modification proposed by Governor Smith and men like him would inevitably result in greater liquor lawlessness.

As chairman of the National Legislative Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America, the writer flatly denies that he is either "hypocritical" or "fanatical," notwithstanding the dogmatic statement of the "wet" Governor of New York.

RESOLUTIONS BY CLASS OF FOURTH YEAR, SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

We, the members of the class of the Fourth Year, feeling that we have been mentally and spiritually benefited by the instruction which we have received, both in the classroom and auditorium, and by association with our fellow-students and brethren, desire to express our thanks to the officers of the Seashore Divinity School for every kind consideration given us. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we sincerely thank our Dean, Dr. H. H. McNeill, and the faculty for their untiring efforts in our behalf.

2. That we pledge to the School our support and influence in creating further interest in our Conferences.

3. That we unqualifiedly indorse the work and methods of the School.

4. That we pledge our support to the Board of Directors in carrying out the enlarged program as planned by them for another year.

Signed: M. C. Abercrombie, Alabama; T. M. Ainsworth, Mississippi; M. L. McCormick, Mississippi; J. M. McKinney, Alabama; L. J. Snelgrove, Mississippi; B. D. Watson, Louisiana.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. J. V. Bennett, conference evangelist, assisted Brother R. H. Clegg in a meeting at Marshall, on the De Soto charge, in June. A fine meeting was reported, several united with the church, and a Men's Bible class was organized.

The Meridian District Conference, which was held at DeKalb in May, was the best the writer ever attended—perfect harmony, peace and love abounding. Our beloved presiding elder dispatched the business of the conference with ease. Brother White and his good people did everything they could to make the members of the district conference happy. The district conference was followed by a good revival, conducted by Brother Moll, Conference evangelist.

Rev. Dan Kelly, Conference evangelist, held a very successful revival at Waynesboro with Brother Hays, pastor. He had large congregations all the way through, and much good was accomplished for the Kingdom of God. Brother Hays is in high favor with his people and doing a great work.

* * *

Rev. R. H. Clegg has recently assisted Brother Baggett at Clara, on the Buckatunna charge, in a successful revival, and much good was accomplished.

A union meeting was held in June at Electric Mills, on the Lauderdale charge, Brother J. H. Grice, pastor. A great revival is reported, with some fifty members uniting with the various churches.

Rev. H. C. Castles, pastor of Seventh Avenue Church, Meridian, is in the midst of a very gracious revival now, with Brother C. A. Schultz, of Anguilla, Miss., doing the preaching. Brother Castles is doing a noble work on his charge.

* * *

Rev. P. D. Hardin, our efficient presiding elder, dedicated the handsome new church at State Line, on the Buckatunna charge, on the fourth Sunday in June.

The new church at Scooba is now completed and the new pews have been ordered. It is said that the beautiful new church is a credit to any community, and the people of Scooba have a right to be proud of it. Brother Ulmer is the happy pastor of these good people. He has recently organized a Sunday school at Glenwood schoolhouse.

Brother W. L. Linfield has been spending a few weeks at his summer home on the coast near Biloxi. The writer had the pleasure of visiting in the home recently and found Brother Linfield greatly improved in health. He will soon be back at his beloved employ for the Master. May the blessings of God rest upon him and his family.

We are told that Brother O. B. Matheny, on the Vimville charge, is making preparations for repairing the parsonage, and also the church at Pleasant Hill. The lumber is now being placed on the grounds for the purpose.

* * *

Rev. J. Loyd Decell, our most popular pastor at Central, is happy over the results of the great revival held in his church the latter part of May. Brother Miller, one of our general evangelists, did the preaching, and it was great. It is said to have been one of the greatest revivals held in that church in many, many years. Every department of the church was revived, and Central is moving forward for the glory of God as never before.

Revs. J. H. Jolly and W. H. Lewis are both making preparations for their revivals, and they are moving forward in their work regardless of the hot weather and summer vacations of so many members.

Our presiding elder informs us that all the pastors in the district are doing well; some have held their revivals, while others are making preparations to do so. Through faith, fasting and prayer much will be accomplished for the glory of God.

JAMES M. LEWIS, Reporter.

WOODVILLE CENTENNIAL.

By Henry G. Hawkins.

The celebration of the one hundredth year of the Woodville church building was held June 8th. A section of the membership were very much in favor last spring of rebuilding, or remodeling; but it was finally decided to repair the house in the present shape, which, with the exception of the addition some years ago of a Sunday school room and some changes of the windows and inside gallery, is just as it was built in 1824. Accordingly, in preparation for the celebration, a new roof, foundation repairs in concrete, concrete steps and connection with the street sidewalk, repainting outside, recalcimining inside, and a new electric light system, caused the church, with its pretty lawn of shade and grass, to present a very attractive appearance, both within and without. The interior improvements were made by the ladies; the exterior, under the guidance of a committee, composed of J. M. Session, D. H. Wallace, H. A. Allen.

The congregational singing was good, and special numbers had been prepared under the management of Mrs. George Argue, who is a granddaughter of Colonel and Mrs. John S. Lewis, donors of the lot on which the church stands. It happened, too, that Mrs. R. E. L. Coon, a great-granddaughter of William Winans, first pastor of the Woodville station, was chairman of the committee on decorations.

The town greatly enjoyed the visit of Bishop Ainsworth, both in his public deliverances and where opportunity was given for the personal touch. He spoke on Thursday evening, following an address by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough on "Methodism for a Hundred Yeas." He also preached Friday morning. Earlier the same morning a small party, including the bishop and some of the other guests, were taken in automobiles to view the graves of the mother of Jefferson Davis, two miles east, and of Edward McGehee, two miles south. At the latter place, in front of the present residence, stand four of the columns of the original Bowling Green Mansion, in which Edward McGehee entertained Bishop William McKendree on several occasions, and where most of the bishops of the earlier day and pioneer preachers of the Mississippi Conference found a home. The mansion was destroyed during the Civil War by a regiment of Negro soldiers.

Friday at 6:30 p. m. a lawn party was held on the church lawn, and at 8 p. m. Rev. W. H. Huntley, D.D., of Port Gibson, spoke with appropriateness on "The Work of Our Hands," and Rev. J. D. Ellis, a former pastor, on "The Natchez District of Colonial and Territorial Times." Brother Ellis is a native of the Natchez country, and knows its history.

Saturday evening Rev. David Holt, pastor of the Episcopal Church of Woodville, spoke thoughtfully on "Our Youth and the Future;" Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Brandon, gave an illuminating address on "Unification, or 1844 to 1924"; and Hon. W. J. Stockett, of Woodville, spoke in a masterly way on "Distinguished Men of Wilkinson County in Church and State." There is a long list of them, with many achievements to their credit.

On the Sabbath at both the morning and evening hours all denominations of the town united in one congregation to hear what proved to be an inspiring sermon on "The Changeless Christ in a Changing Century," by Rev. Isaac D. Borders, a native Mississippian, now of Kansas City, and interesting "Reminiscences" by Rev. H. W. Featherstun, D.D., of Jackson, Miss., who labored years ago in Woodville as college president, pastor and presiding elder. It was considered appropriate that this veteran of fifty-one years' service should make the closing address. Sunday's program also included in the afternoon a talk by S. W. Sharbrough, District Lay Leader, and the holding of the third quarterly Conference by Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder.

As Rev. H. W. Featherstun says in a booklet, "Woodville Methodism," [illegible] thirty-three years ago, "the State of Mississippi contains no spot more sacred than this Church lot, and the bright where stood the [illegible] of thunder' Stubbs Soule Capers [illegible] Winans and Marshall, where for two years preached the scriptural [illegible] would add the names of [illegible] and others.

For eleven years after the church was built Woodville was a part of the Williamson circuit; it has been a station since the first session of the Mississippi Conference held in the building and presided over by Soule.

Counting four assistant or junior preachers, fifty-three men have served the charge as pastors during the one hundred years, their names being as follows: F. R. Cl[illegible] [illegible] William Sprull, R. Pipkin, W. V. Douglass, [illegible] L. Walker, Thomas Clinton, W. V. Douglass, J. P. Th[illegible], Richard Pipkin, Andrew Adams, [illegible] A. Cotton, John C. Burrus, William Winans, C. K. Marshall, Robert S. Collins, Elijah S[illegible] Benjamin Jones, R. Kennard, J. H. Muse, E. A. [illegible] M. Gray, H. M. Bottha, Levi Pearce, W. H. W[illegible]kins, George C. Light, J. L. Forsythe, W. P. B[illegible]n, W. B. Hines, J. J. Wheat, J. A. Godfrey, W. G. Millsaps, E. M. Marvin, W. T. Sullivan, P. Lam[illegible], C. Chamberlin, T. B. Holloman, J. P. D[illegible], T. S. West, B. F. Jones, F. M. Featherstun, H. [illegible] Featherstun, R. W. Bailey, B. F. Lewis, J. W. [illegible] Crisler, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, C. A. Powell, W. [illegible] L. Linfield, H. W. Van Hook, E. W. Barrington, W. W. Hopper, J. D. Ellis, W. J. Dawson, J. [illegible] Galloway, H. G. Hawkins.

Several, after serving the limit of two or four years, were returned years afterwards for a second pastorate. One, F. M. Featherstun, is buried in the Woodville "Evergreen" Cemetery. There is the grave of a preacher on the church lot; doubtless it holds the dust of one of the above, but the writer has been unable to learn the identity, though making considerable inquiry.

One may well wonder how things will be in 2024. That depends somewhat upon the actors of to-day.

Woodville, Miss., July 3, 1924.

PRAYERS.

The following prayers were offered during the opening session of the General Conference at Chattanooga, the first by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, the second by Dr. A. J. Lamar:

Thy will, O Lord, be done, and not ours. May we this day, and every day as we gather to consider this matter which concerns thy kingdom and our church, the evangelism of the world, may we seek, O Lord, each day to do thy will! It is not in us, our Father, to rise above human prejudices and passions, but thou art able to do far more abundantly above anything that we can ask or think. We pray thee, O God, to lift us out of human passion and prejudice into that serenity of spirit and soul which characterized our Lord while he dwelt among men. May our hearts be open to every impulse of thy Spirit during these days, and grant, O Christ, that we may earnestly seek to please thee, that we shall by thy grace not only have an increasing faith in our heavenly Father, but an increasing faith, the one in the other! Lift us, we pray thee, by the power of the Holy Spirit, above all human suspicion. May thy Spirit be so manifestly present with us that this atmosphere shall be as that of the upper chamber in the days that are gone. We pray thee, our Father, that we may have a mind to fulfill the prayer of our Lord, that we all may be one, even as thou art, O Christ, with the Father; and grant in this hour, when there comes for the consideration of this body this great problem and this great plan, the unification of American Methodism; grant, we pray thee, O Christ, to be very present with us in this consideration. We thank thee, O Lord, that during these years of a wonderful history this Methodism, called the child of Providence, has been so guided and blessed of thee, until to-day, as we meet the message that this people carry has gone across the world, and its touch has girdled the earth. O Lord, we pray thee, rebaptize Methodism in this hour! We thank thee for the fathers, who in utter unselfishness, and with a spirit and a mind to serve, faced suffering and self-denial and death itself to make Christ known to men on this continent and on other continents. We pray thee, our Father, that we may be worthy of those fathers. Abide with us now, and grant that every member of this General Conference and every officer may so seek for himself and herself immediate union with our Lord, that Jesus Christ may be to our hearts manifest in such power that we cannot run across his will. We seek, O Christ, to be well-pleasing to thee. Give us thy grace and thy spirit, that we may please thee. Wilt thou this day, O Lord, be with the presiding officer and our senior bishop, with every officer who shall preside and with whatever else may happen during these days. Grant, O Lord, that every one of us shall go from this place with the consciousness that God was with us! And may we not forget now, as we meet, that the best of all, the very best, is that God is with us! Help us so to live, so to believe, so to toil, that we shall companion always with thee, and hear us as we say the prayer which he taught us to say: Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

Our Father and our God, feeling at all times our weakness, our proneness to error, we come to seek thy guidance in every crisis of life, especially on an occasion like this, of so great moment to thy church. We feel that we cannot move without asking that thou shalt lead us. We come this morning, Lord, with one burden to our petition. We come to implore the divine presence in every heart, the divine guidance in every act, to pray that thou wilt help us while we are together here, while we are discussing this great question upon which all of us not only think so earnestly, but feel so deeply. We come to beg that the spirit of the Master may be ours, and that no word may be said, no act performed which shall transgress the law of love. Help us, we pray thee, as in the sight of God, to realize the tremendous responsibility resting upon us as a Conference, as individual members of the Conference. Help us to address ourselves to the business of this session in such manner that whatever our conclusion may be, whether we shall continue to live as the Methodist Church, South, or whether we shall live in a united church help us, Lord, that we may come out of this ordeal in such form as shall redound to the glory of God, the spread of thy gospel among the people in the future, in such spirit that thou thyself be pleased with our labors and bless them in the future as thou hast blessed them in the past. Bless the presiding officers, each one of these honored brethren of our church. Help them, Lord. Give them the wisdom which comes from above. Give them the spirit of the Master. Give them the realization that they are servants of the most high God and of his church. May that realization come to every one of us; and, strong in thy strength, trustful, faithful, may we devote ourselves to the duties which await us! These and all other needed mercies, Lord, we ask for the sake and in the name of him who loved us and has given himself for us. Amen.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

The faith of the early church was an earnest, whole-hearted faith. Dungeon, fire and sword had so forged and welded the mighty dogmas of the divine life into the very lives and characters of those who followed Christ in the dawning years of Christianity, that all else seemed utterly valueless to them. They were fully, entirely persuaded, wholly committed by all the evidences possible to their range of consciousness, as to the truth and power of their holy confession. Persecution only added to their number. Death to them was but an admission to the glory of the just made perfect. The martyr's crown, to their spiritual vision, glowed clear and brighter than the noonday sun, amid the murky smoke of a thousand kindled fires, whose flames only lighted the way to heaven.

Such utter abandonment, such mighty convincement won the day and planted the cross in every part of the vast Roman Empire. Caesar, Rome and her legions might will otherwise, but the onward march of those who counted all loss that Christ might live and move in the heart of the world was irresistible. The old Grecian myth of the hero, who, fallen and slain in battle, touched earth and lives again was reversed—these heroes of the cross touched heaven and lived evermore, and by their example left a token on earth of life eternal to others.

This deathless faith, this absolute convincement to its truth and power, has characterized every great forward movement of our holy religion in history. Nothing less would have served the hand and inspired the heart of the great leaders and evangelists of these epochal periods so familiar to every student of these times. The danger incurred, the burdens borne, the incredible labors undergone, could have been met in no other way. In fact, we may say that the wonders accomplished by these are the miracles of grace backed by a victorious faith, that was only limited by the ability to believe. And this is a boundary line that no man has ever marked, and the Master never mapped its boundless sweep and range.

Men are writing just about everything about the Christian religion to-day. A subtle propaganda, the principles of which spring from the effete philosophy of Oriental mysticism, is being exploited in some of our popular magazines, in which and by which invidious comparisons are made against the morale and ethics of the Bible.

If once these rationalists, if they deserve even the dignity of this term, can succeed in doing away with those principles of righteousness that are the foundations upon which all our civil, legal and social life is built, ruin and desolation will follow. Life and Law, righteous law, are the two great doctrines of the Bible, and all may rest assured that our present status as a nation can only be maintained and perpetuated by a recognition and enforcement of the same. To this end let us pray and toil, and for this stand, yes stand, having done all.

R. H. B. GLADNEY AND HIS GREAT WORK.

I have recently had the pleasure of attending my own district conference, held at Booneville, Miss., and also Brother McIlwain's district conference, at Columbus, Miss. Both of these conferences were great occasions. They were deeply spiritual from start to finish. In connection with these conferences, a Sunday School Training School was conducted, presided over by Rev. R. H. B. Gladney. The interest in the Sunday school work that has been aroused among our people under the leadership of Brother Gladney is phenemenal. This man is not only one of our strong preachers in the North Mississippi Conference, but he is also a great teacher. Then, too, he has the ability to carry with him teachers who are not only deeply spiritual, but safe and sound on the great fundamentals of the Bible. I always feel safe when I send a young person to one of Brother Gladney's training schools. I feel sure that he will not hear anything there of a nature to weaken his faith. I have rarely ever seen any one have his heart in his work like Brother Gladney. Christian education is his hobby, and he is doing his dead level best to send out through the North Mississippi Conference teachers better equipped for Sunday school work. He is, indeed, the right man in the right place. Not only has Brother Gladney grown as a teacher and preacher, but in the deep things of God. I have known him for thirty years, and I have never touched him at any time that he was not an inspiration to me. Being associated with him a good deal during our conference at Booneville brought up many sweet memories of other years. Some of the greatest seasons of prayer and sweet fellowship have been spent along with him while praying for some great victory in a meeting. I am glad to see him in such fine physical health and to know that he is able to keep up with the pack. He is not living his life of forty years ago, but he is able to adjust himself to the conditions of the present. May God's richest blessings rest upon Brother Gladney, and may he be spared to teach and preach the unsearchable riches of God's grace for many years to come.

OFFERS PRIZE FOR ESSAY ON CHRISTIAN CO-OPERATION.

A prize of one hundred dollars for the best article on the subject of the importance of federation and co-operation among the churches is offered by Mr. E. H. Seward, a Virginia layman, who believes that the movement for Christian co-operation needs much wider popular interpretation throughout the rank and file of the churches. This offer is made by Mr. Seward for the purpose of securing the best available statements for distribution concerning the reasons for larger unity.

The conditions of the contest, as announced by Mr. Seward, are as follows:

"In order to secure a symposium and a comprehensive compendium of the best reasons for federation and co-operation of the churches, I will give the author of the best article on this subject a prize of one hundred dollars. The award is to be determined by a committee to be appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches. All articles must be submitted to the Federal Council of the Churches, 105 East Twenty second Street, New York, not later than Dec. 1, 1924. The articles should not exceed three thousand words in length.

"All articles submitted will be available for the use of the Federal Council, and a synopsis of the winning article is to be published in the Federal Council Bulletin."

AN IDEAL PREACHER AND SERMON.

By Payton A. Sowell.

It was written of Prof. Elmslie, by one who was present when he preached his first sermon at Rayne, Aberdeen, Scotland:

"He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight
The picture fair—the World's Great Light;
That gazing up—the lamp between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"He held the pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink, when sick and faint!
He drank—the pitcher thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"He blew the trumpet soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear;
And then with bolder note and bold,
To raze the walls of Satan's hold!
The trumpet coming thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"But when the captain says, 'Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant—come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
Lay down the trumpet—leave the camp,'
The weary hands will then be seen,
Clasped in these pierced ones—naught between."

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

AT LEAST $500,000 SHOULD BE COLLECTED FROM SPECIAL EFFORT PLEDGES DUE JULY 1.

Yes, the first payments on Special Effort pledges were due July 1. Did you make the collections? If you have not done so, will you attend to the matter at once? Please remember that subscribers do not generally pay their subscriptions to anything until they are notified that the time has come to pay.

When any worthy movement fails, it is due to neglect by those who have it in hand. Most any reasonable goal can be reached on time, if the price of success is paid in hard work. Special Effort dollars will be paid when a special effort is made to collect them. I have never seen a dollar on legs running to urge me to take it. Dollars are shy and have a tendency to stay put until they are persuaded to change hands.

Right now is the time to persuade the dollars pledged to Superannuate Endowment to enter service for the benefit of the Forgotten Man. Many of them will be easy to convince, and they will readily fall into your hands. But you will have to argue the case with some of them. Whatever is necessary to win them, do it. The case is urgent and you are fully justified in putting forth your best effort in order to succeed with the task.

LOST MOTION MEANS LOST INCOME.

When you collect the Special Effort dollars which were due July 1, don't let them loaf around in your bank doing nothing for the cause which they represent. Send them post haste to the Board of Finance, St. Louis, Mo., so they can be put to work earning other dollars for the support of the Forgotten Man. Endowment dollars uninvested are dollars without a punch.

There ought to be a large sum of money paid to Special Effort treasurers during the first two weeks of July. This will undoubtedly be true, if the Special Effort committees function as they should. Thousands of people have given solemn pledges to pay at this time, and I am sure they will keep their vows. The pastor of every charge should urge his committee forward on this important matter. Nothing ever just happens—everything worth while takes place in the world's work-a-day because it is caused to take place. Now is the time to make something happen in the movement for Superannuate Endowment.

The July collections on Special Effort quotas should amount to a total of at least $500,000. That is a lot of money, but the people have pledged it to a sacred cause, and I believe they will make good their promises. It all depends upon the spirit that the Special Effort committees put into the work of making collections. Such a sum collected and sent to the Board for investment would yield $30,000 annually for the old veteran preachers.

THERE'S A PACKAGE ON THE WAY TO YOU.

A few people like to give something, but all people like to get something. Well, cheer up, for you are about to get it. The Sixth Annual Bulletin will be in the mails going to all the pastors of the church before these lines are published. When your copy arrives don't throw it into the waste-basket. It has a message for you. Some people are long on criticism of the General Boards, but short on reading the records of what these Boards are doing. Read the Sixth Bulletin of your Board of Finance.

And, by the way, you will find an interesting insert in the package which brings your Bulletin. If you will not take the time to read the booklet, by all means read the insert. It has a message that should appeal to preachers, for it deals with a subject that is a serious problem in every preacher's life. If you were famishing in a desert, you would not throw away a jug of water that somebody brought you. Some day you will be hungry in Forgotten Man's Land—don't throw away the Sixth Bulletin or the insert it carries.

AVOID THIS TERRIBLE BLUNDER.

My secretary asked me recently why I published the same thing several times. I told her it was necessary because many people were so constituted that they refused to believe a statement until it was choked down them. You may think this foolish drihble, but it is positively true. You have to tell some folks a fact ten times before they will believe it once. It is comforting to realize that what is about to he told again has already been stated nine times on this page.

Here it is: Please do not make the mistake of paying Special Effort money to somebody outside the Board of Finance. All payments on quotas must come to the Board, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo. Checks can be made to The Board of Finance, or to any officer of the Board. And remitters should he sure that they have the money in the bank before they draw a check on the bank. You would be amazed to see how many checks are not collectible on account of "insufficient funds."

The Annual Conferences will soon be holding their meetings. Don't carry Special Effort money with you to Conference; send it to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., before you go to Conference. And send it soon enough for you to receive the receipt to carry with you to Conference. All you will need at Conference, so far as the Special Effort is concerned, will be the receipts for payments made to the Board on your quota. Then you can fill out report blank number 4, and hand it to the Statistical Secretaries. You will have your receipts to prove that you have made the payments which you list in your report.

The Board of Finance will send an official statistical report for each District to the Annual Conference Secretary, immediately upon the adjournment of the body. This report will reveal exactly what payments on quotas every Charge of the District has made during the Conference year, and it will be published in the Annual Conference Minutes as Statistical Report number 4.

A JOLLY CROWD AT ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

When your Conference meets this Fall, you will see a happy group of preachers chatting merrily under the big tree on the church lawn. They will be the men whose Charges have paid one-fifth or more on quotas for Superannuate Endowment. Don't you want to be in that crowd and enjoy the fun? Then get busy right now, and see that your Charge remits the fifth or more before your Conference meets.

There will be another group of preachers whose faces are about to break into smiles. They will have some fun too, but not the rollicking kind of the first group. They will be those whose Charges did not remit to the Board as much as one-fifth of their quotas, but did pay something. Their feast of merriment will be such as they can enjoy from a part-loaf, but it will be much better than no laugh at all.

Yet a third group will assemble on the lawn of the church in the rain—and they won't have even umbrellas, 'or nothin'! They will be the men whose Charges paid absolutely nothing on quotas during the first year of the great movement in behalf of the Church's veterans. They will spend their time telling each other of their respective alibis—the excuse making crowd. O, men of the ministry, don't he in that group if there is any way on earth to keep out of it!

In addition to those Charges which have paid one-fifth or more on their total quotas, as previously published on this page, the following Charges are now listed as having done this good thing:

University (Austin), West Texas, Austin, Rev. K. P. Barton, pastor. Total assumed quota, $5,000; amount remitted, $1,176.20.

Kingsville, West Texas, Beeville, Rev. S. L. Batchelor, pastor. Total assumed quota, $3,350; amount remitted, $947.

Bishop, West Texas, Beeville, Rev. A. W. Wilson, pastor. Total assumed quota, $2,694; amount remitted, $871.50.

St. Johns (Goldsboro), North Carolina, New Bern, Rev. R. E. Atkinson, pastor. Total assumed quota, $1,280; amount remitted, $256.

Shacklefords, Virginia, Rappahannock, Rev. J. E. Brooks, pastor. Total assumed quota, $1,762; amount remitted, $475.

PINKER AND PINKER EVERY WEEK.

And now come certain other presiding elders having their respective Districts 100 per cent on the Pink Leaf Report. We enter their names on the honor roll, numbered in order as they achieve this distinction:

221. Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Rev. H. N. Brown, P. E.

222. Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Rev. R. W. McKay, P. E.

223. Northwest Texas, Lubbock, Rev. E. E. Robinson, P. E.

224. Northwest Texas, Plainview, Rev. C. S. Hardy, P. E.

225. Texas, Galveston, Rev. R. W. Adams, P. E.

The Home Circle

THE STORY OF SILKWORM CULTURE.

By Willie C. Page.

It was a sunny day in the month of May, Miss Weaver, teacher of the natural history class, was having a picnic in the woods. Some of the girls were roaming about searching for rare flowers to press and photograph. The older boys were taking kodak pictures and gathering plants for their specimen cases.

Miss Weaver was busy with sketching materials, when little Robert West came to where she sat, holding in his hand a twig on which was fastened a cocoon of a silkworm.

"Miss Weaver, please do tell me what this is?" he begged.

After lunch was over and the crumbs scattered about for the birds and little people of the woods, the children gathered around their teacher to hear the story of the "Woven Wind."

"I have been studying this subject for some time and will only be glad to tell you some of the facts I have learned about them.

"Twenty-six hundred years before Christ, Si-ling, wife of the Emperor of China, discovered that a tiny worm spun a soft silken thread. She collected a large number of these insects and began to feed them. Thus she became the goddess of the silkworm and mothar of one of the greatest industries that the world has ever known."

"What did the worms eat?" cried a chorus of voices.

"Mulberry leaves," replied Miss Weaver, as she held the cocoon where the children could plainly see it.

"It is one of the most wonderful things that nature has to unfold to her lovers. It reads like an enchanting fairy story.

"For many centuries people have striven to increase the worm's production of silk, and have been successful, for both the worm and moth are much larger since domesticated. They have lost their power of flight and have changed their color from brown to creamy white.

"It is thought that Si-ling, wife of Hoang-ti, of China, found that the silkworm was the larvae of the moth or caterpillar. The Bombyx mori is the most important known. These moths are to be found in the land of the Orient, India, China, and Japan."

"How do the cocoons wind themselves in their cocoons?" asked Phil.

"The eggs are deposited in early summer, but they do not hatch until the following spring. One ounce of eggs will produce one hundred pounds of cocoons. The baby silkworms have twelve rings, sixteen legs, nine black spots on either side for breathing. It eats a great deal for the first ten days, then loses its appetite and sheds its skin. It does this, or moults, four times; then it becomes very restless and throws its head about and begins to spin its web or cocoon," explained Miss Weaver.

"How long does it take for the worm to spin its web?" asked Helen.

"From three to five days, and it does this when it is about four weeks old. The natural length of the thread is from two to three thousand feet. This thread is so fine it requires one thousand miles of it to weigh a pound," said Miss Weaver.

"That is a wonderful little insect," exclaimed Robert.

"Another strange thing about this is, the color of the thread is always the same as that of the silkworm's legs while spinning," continued Miss Weaver.

"Do these little insects make all the silk that is used?" questioned Helen. "Did they spin the silk for the ribbon on my hat?"

"Yes," replied Miss Weaver, "every thread of pure silk is woven by these hard-working little fellows. It requires a great, great many of them to produce enough silk to meet the world's demand."

"How are the cocoons unwound?" asked the children eagerly.

"Only experts are able to do this. They place the cocoons in a basin of water in which soap has been dissolved to loosen the glue-like substance. Then they stir briskly with a broom. The strands are caught on the brush of the whisk broom, then combed. It is passed through a brass eye on the edge of the basin, fastened to a reel, then wound in a single skein. The silk is of beautiful luster, said to be the strongest fiber in its raw state in the world," explained Miss Weaver.

"Why does not our country produce silk?" asked Philip.

"It has been tried, Philip, but the cost of labor is too great. In the land of the Orient, people are able to live on very little."

"We thank you for the interesting story of the woven wind, and will watch for cocoons," said the children.

CURIOSITY-PRODUCING ADVERTISING.

The proprietor of a tanyard was anxious to fix a suitable sign to his premises. Finally a happy thought struck him.

He bored a hole through the door post and stuck a calf's tail into it, with the tufted end outside.

After awhile he saw a solemn-faced man standing near the door looking at the sign. The tanner stepped outside and addressed him.

"Good morning, sir," he said.

"Good morning," said the other, without taking his eyes off the sign.

"Do you want to buy any leather?" asked the tanner.

"No."

"Perhaps you've got some hides to sell?"

"No."

"What are you, then?"

"I'm a philosopher. I've been standing here for an hour trying to find out how that calf got through that hole."—Tit-Bits (London).

ONE APPLE.

In an orchard from which 12,000 barrels of apples are shipped every year one individual apple does not seem worth thinking about, says a writer in the Youth's Companion. Yet in just such an orchard not long ago the foreman of the packing force made a determined search for one apple.

"We've got to find it!" he declared. "Come on, now."

The men soon learned that the apple was in one of two barrels that had just been headed up. Into the first went a packer; he took out the first layer and the second and third and so on down through half the barrel before the desired apple appeared.

"See!" cried the foreman, turning the fruit bottom up. "Note that speck of rot? That's why I was so insistent."

One of the pickers had found the apple on the ground. It was a singularly large and well-shaped wiresap, and it weighed half an ounce more than the biggest apple ever found in that orchard, but it was a windfall and was bruised.

"These barrels go into cold storage," explained the foreman. "They are for late winter and early spring trade and will bring high prices. That speck of rot would have spread on that apple and then would have infected others near by. The whole barrel of apples might have been rotted before the retailer could dispose of them."

So should we cope with bad habits. Run down that evil trait; its infection will spread. Summary treatment is the cure. That is the teaching not only of religion, but of psychology. Go to the bottom of the barrel if necessary.—Christian Advocate (N. Y.).

DANGEROUS SPORT.

Poor Peter was burnt by a poker one day,
When he made it look pretty and red;
For the beautiful sparks made him think it fine play
To lift it as high as his head.

But somehow it happened, his finger and thumb
Were terribly scorched by the heat,
And he screamed out aloud for his mother to come,
And stamped on the floor with his feet.

Now if Peter had minded his mother's command
His finger would not have been sore,
And he promised again as she bound up his hand
To play with hot pokers no more.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

ACTION OF THE CALLED SESSION OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The hour of adjournment arrived, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Isaac Lane.

The Conference convened at 9 o'clock Thursday morning. Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon presided over the morning session. Dr. Bascom Anthony, of South Georgia, gained the floor and spoke against the Lamar-Cockrell resolution. Following Dr. Anthony's speech, Dr. T. D. Ellis, of South Georgia, spoke against the pending resolution. Dr. Ellis read into his address the statement by a majority of the bishops concerning the legality of the special session. Following the speech of Dr. Ellis, the previous question was moved by Judge E. F. Story, of Virginia, and the previous question was ordered. The vote was then taken on the pending resolution, and it was overwhelmingly defeated. The question of the legality of the special session was thus disposed of.

On motion of W. A. Cooper, of Florida, the Conference then heard the report of the Commission on Unification, read by Bishop John M. Moore. This report was simply a recital of the action of the Hot Springs General Conference in appointing a Commission on Unification, an account of the meetings of the Joint Commission and the adoption of a plan, and the presentation of the plan as agreed upon.

Following the report of the Commission on Unification, the reading of a minority report was begun by Bishop Denny, but before he had concluded, the hour of adjournment arrived, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Mouzon.

Bishop John M. Moore presided over the afternoon session, which convened at 3 o'clock.

By general consent, an article by Bishop Collins Denny, "Is the De Facto Called Session of the General Conference De Jure?" was made a part of the record of the Conference. The views expressed in this article were concurred in by Bishops Candler and Dickey.

Bishop Denny then resumed the reading of the minority report. This report was an exhaustive review and discussion of the whole question of unification, and Bishop Denny took nearly three hours in reading it. It opposed the adoption of the plan of unification, and at the conclusion of the reading, Dr. A. J. Lamar moved that the minority report be substituted for the majority report. The motion was seconded—and the contest over unification as provided for in the proposed plan was on!

Judge John S. Candler, of North Georgia, was recognized by the chair, and he spoke in favor of the majority report. Following Judge Candler, Dr. George R. Stuart spoke in favor of the majority report. The hour of adjournment arrived with the conclusion of Dr. Stuart's speech, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs.

Bishop W. F. McMurry presided at the Friday morning session of the Conference. In honor of the day—July 4—"America" was sung, and a large American flag was placed on the rostrum.

Bishop E. G. Richardson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who happened to be passing through the city and had dropped in to see the Conference, was recognized in the audience, called to the rostrum and presented to the body.

Dr. A. C. Millar, of Arkansas, and Dr. C. C. Selecman, of Texas, spoke in favor of the majority report. Dr. A. J. Lamar followed them in support of the minority report, and he, in turn, was followed by Dr. H. N. Snyder, of South Carolina, and Judge Perry Rader, of Missouri, in favor of the majority report.

At the conclusion of Judge Rader's speech, on motion of T. D. Ellis, seconded by A. J. Lamar, 5 o'clock that afternoon was fixed as the hour for taking the vote on the pending motion and on the whole question of unification.

On motion of L. H. Estes, a Committee on Resolutions was appointed.

The Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Richardson.

Bishop U. V. W. Darlington took the chair for the afternoon session, which convened at 3 o'clock. On motion of T. D. Ellis, seconded by A. J. Lamar, the vote by which the hour of 5 o'clock was fixed for taking the vote was reconsidered, and the hour of 4:30 was fixed as the hour for voting.

Mrs. J. H. McCoy gained the floor and spoke in favor of the majority report. R. P. Shuler, of California, followed Mrs. McCoy, speaking in favor of the minority report.

Just before the time for taking the vote arrived, Bishop Darlington, who was presiding, stated that he had conferred with Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, who would take the chair after him in regular order, and both of them had agreed that it would be fitting for the Senior Bishop, Bishop Warren A. Candler, to be presiding at such a momentous time, and he turned the gavel over to Bishop Candler. As Bishop Candler took the chair, the entire assembly rose, and gave him such an ovation as is seldom witnessed. Whether it always agrees with his views or not, the church respects, honors and loves Bishop Warren A. Candler.

The hour fixed for taking the vote having arrived, a standing vote on the motion to substitute the minority report for the majority report was taken, and resulted as follows: 67 for, 275 against—and the minority report was rejected.

A vote by roll call was then taken on the adoption of the majority report, and resulted as follows: 297 for, 75 against—and the plan of unification was approved by the General Conference and handed down to the Annual Conferences for their action, the vote in the Annual Conferences to be taken during the calendar year 1925.

Such further action as was necessary to carry out the plan in case it receives the required majority in the Annual Conferences was taken, and the first special session of the General Conference in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, adjourned sine die.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the North Mississippi Conferences were well represented by visitors, both clerical and lay, during the sessions of the Conference.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb was seated as an alternate in place of Dr. R. A. Meek in the North Mississippi delegation, and W. M. Buie in place of Dr. Rolfe Hunt in the Mississippi delegation.

The representatives of the press were given an automobile trip to Lookout Mountain by the local committee, and were entertained at dinner on Thursday evening by the Chattanooga Press Association.

Rev. R. P. Shuler, of Los Angeles, made the last speech before the Conference, in opposition to unification. The effectiveness of his address was largely destroyed by his removing his collar and coat during the course of his remarks.

Mr. H. H. Ahrens very efficiently represented the Times-Picayune, of New Orleans, and Rev. E. H. Cunningham likewise represented the Commercial-Appeal. We know of no better reporters of church gatherings than are these two brethren.

The Louisiana delegation voted solidly for the plan of unification as submitted. The Mississippi delegation voted, four for and six against. The North Mississippi delegation voted, three for and seven against.

The auditorium in which the sessions were held has a seating capacity of 5,500. It is said to be one of the finest buildings of its kind in the country. It was dedicated on Nov. 11, last year, as a memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the World War.

The addresses of welcome, delivered at an evening session on Wednesday, were very happy in content and delivery. The mayor of the city was especially felicitous in his expressions. Bishop H. M. DuBose made a characteristic speech in reply.

Ample accommodations were furnished for the representatives of the press. The editor of the Advocate had the pleasure of sitting between Rev. W. A. Brooks, of Jesup, Ga., representing one of the great Georgia dailies, and Dr. J. R. Joy, editor of the New York Christian Advocate.

Men who have attended many sessions of the General Conference were heard to say that the arrangements made by the local committee on entertainment were the best they had ever seen. Absolutely nothing was left undone that would add to the comfort and pleasure of delegates and visitors.

The speech of H. H. White, of the Louisiana delegation, was generally spoken of as one of the most effective delivered before the Conference on the legal aspects of the question. Judge White was the only member of the delegation from the patronizing territory of the Advocate to address the Conference.

In order to provide for the expenses of the special session, the Committee on Budget increased the assessment on the church for General Conference expense for the next two years from $55,000 to $100,000. This amount will be distributed among the Annual Conferences in regular order.

The gavel used by Bishop Candler in opening the General Conference has great historic interest. It was made of oak wood from the George Arnold House, in Spottsylvania County, Va., where Francis Asbury died, March 31, 1816. It has been used by bishops presiding in eight General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and by bishops presiding in six General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The names of forty bishops who have used the gavel are engraved on it.

The acoustic properties of the auditorium were not good, and delegates and visitors who were not near the rostrum had great difficulty in hearing what was being said. At the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the same difficulty was experienced until an amplifier was installed, at a cost of $90 a day. A member of that Conference stated to the editor of the Advocate that the amplifier worked perfectly and that it was abundantly worth the cost involved.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. E. Selfe, our pastor at Hammond, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week.

Rev. W. R. Lott, our pastor at Amory, Miss., has recently undergone an operation for appendicitis at Gilmore Sanitarium of that city. At last report he was speedily recovering.

A complete directory of the general evangelists and evangelistic singers of the church has been issued by the Bureau of Evangelism, and may be had free of charge upon application to Dr. R. L. Russell, Secretary, Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn.

On Sunday evening, June 29, Rev. A. W. Turner, superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, spoke to a large mass meeting in the Baptist Tabernacle, Ponchatoula, La., in behalf of the temperance cause. He gave a fine message, which was well received.

The sympathy of the nation goes out to President and Mrs. Coolidge in the death of their son, Calvin Coolidge, Jr., who died on Monday night of this week. His death resulted from an infection of a blister on his foot received in playing tennis.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, our pastor at Boyce, La., writes: "We have just closed a two weeks' meeting here, with some gratifying results. The preaching was done by Rev. W. C. Swope, general evangelist. He was very entertaining, hewed to the line, and the people generally liked him. Rev. A. L. Harper was in charge of the singing, and rendered very acceptable service."

Rev. H. H. Smith, of Blackstone, Va., who published a "Character Sketch of Robert E. Lee" some time ago, has recently brought out a similar sketch of Stonewall Jackson. Both of these pamphlets are well worth reading. The sketch of Stonewall Jackson sells for 15 cents a single copy, or 10 cents for five or more copies, and may be had of the author.

A Bible and Evangelistic Conference will be held at Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., July 27-Aug. 3, under the auspices of the Bureau of Evangelism of our church, Dr. R. L. Russell, secretary. Bishop W. A. Candler, Bishop W. F. McMurry, Bishop Sam R. Hay, Dr. Henry W. Bromley, and Dr. Clovis G. Chappell will be the principal speakers.

The church at Iuka, Miss., sent eight representatives to the Epworth League Conference held recently at Grenada. These delegates were: Mrs. W. W. Jones, Mrs. I. M. Jackson, Miss Mary Leslie McRae, Miss Flora Lee Craddock, Miss Dorothy Smith, Miss Freda Bonds, Miss Minnie Jourdan, and Miss Martha Lee Barnett. It was a great investment for the church.

The Sunday school at Amory, Miss., has maintained the highest average during the last quarter in its history. Mr. J. M. May is superintendent of the school. The church has raised a subscription and is steadily securing the cash to build a commodious annex for Sunday school purposes. They hope to begin building by late summer.

The death of Col. J. C. Hardy last week removed from the First Methodist Church of Gulfport, Miss., one of its most faithful members, superintendent of its Sunday school for many years. Col. Hardy was an eminent educator and a great Christian citizen. He will be sadly missed, and the Advocate joins in the sorrow caused by his passing.

The membership of the Felicity Methodist Church, this city, is greatly saddened by the death of Mr. H. T. Monroe, on last Sunday. He was a good man, and the large attendance at the funeral, which was held at the church, attests the esteem in which he was held. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Mrs. F. W. Harrison, Bastrop, La., 5; Rev. A. J. Davis, Hattiesburg, Miss., 4; Rev. S. Q. Bass, Corinth, Miss., 2; Rev. J. S. Maxey, Winona, Miss., 2; Rev. J. W. Booth, Ponchatoula, La., 2; Rev. S. F. Harkey, Meadville, Miss., 4.

BOOKS THAT ABIDE.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

When I was in my twenties, it would have been worth much to me to have had some one to guide me in the purchase and reading of books. Had I been so fortunate, numerous musty tomes, and especially certain expensive "sets" that now encumber my bookshelves, would not be there. Subscription book agents, in urging us to buy the high-priced "fulll Morocco binding," were wont to say, "A book that isn't worth keeping isn't worth buying." On the contrary, many books are worth buying and reading once; but comparatively few are worth keeping. Besides, "full Morocco" is very inferior material in which to "keep" a book. Buckram or a substantial cloth is the best practical binding for a book; and a man who cannot "keep" a good cloth-bound book doesn't need books anyhow.

It will be seen that I am not commending indiscriminately books that abide on one's shelves. Many are likely to abide there long beyond their day of usefulness. But I wish to commend, particularly to the young, certain books whose contents abide in the mind and have an abiding value in the world of thought. I wish that I might especially help young preachers and young college men and women, who want to get at the heart of things most vital, in these days of mental restlessness and intellectual and spiritual groping. I shall discuss from time to time books that have helped me—mostly books but recently read. In this paper I wish to commend two which I have read this year. Neither book is now before me; so I write only of the impressions made by them, impressions that abide.

1. "What Christianity Means to Me," by Lyman Abbott. Dr. Abbott, writing at the age of eighty-five, did not attempt to tell what Christianity means; but only what it meant to himself. So, a personal Christian experience is at the heart of the book. Thorough scholarship and the fruits of prolonged study, meditation, and observation, enter into this work. Yet the style is terse, limpid, easy and simple as can be found anywhere. The author's handling of his theme is so engaging that one finds it difficult not to rush on from chapter to chapter, as in reading a romance. But the book is worth re-reading many times.

"What Christianity Means to Me" traces the author's own evolution from a crude Calvinist to an evangelical Christian; from an Old Testament Puritan and Pharisee to a New Testament saint, although he is far from laying any claim to sainthood. With unerring insight, he cuts through the non-essential, and lays hold upon what is vital; peels off the husk and grips the kernel of Christian faith and life. Brevity, directness, simplicity, clarity and sincerity mark every discussion.

One does not, of course, have to agree with everything in the book. But every thoughtful Christian—especially every thoughtful young Christian—should read it. You will be a wiser, bigger, truer, tenderer, and more trustful child of the Heavenly Father and disciple of his blessed Son, when you have read, digested, and laid to heart the contents of this book.

2. "Sixty Years With the Bible," by William Newton Clarke. If Dr. Abbott's book takes Christianity out of the cage of dead dogma and reveals it as a free, living Angel of Light, Dr. Clarke's book reveals the Bible, not as a reliquary full of the sacred bones of dead spiritual epochs, nor a mausoleum for the repose of mummified authority, but a "wide-spreading, free-flowing river of truth, divinely appointed to fertilize all the soil of human life." The author is a profound scholar, having seen long service as professor in a theological seminary, as well as many years in successful pastorates. He is qualified to deal in both a critical and reverent way with the Bible, if any man is.

The book is in seven chapters, the first setting forth the "Motive" of the book, and the other chapters dividing his experience with the Bible into decades, "The Fifties," "The Sixties," "The Seventies," and so on down to chapter seven, "The New Century."

Here again, one may not agree with all that the author says. But he does two things that will greatly enlighten and encourage every earnest young Bible student. He traces the growth of his own conceptions of the Bible, which runs directly parallel to the development of scientific Biblical knowledge within the same period. He has grown as the Biblical world has grown. Steadily, naturally, with no startling new departures and no great mental or spiritual shock, he has received light as light has dawned. At the same time he has suffered in nowise in his simple trust in Jesus Christ and his vital Christian experience; but has grown in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior.

This is just what the Christian student of today needs; a key to the confusing and perplexing problem: How honestly and candidly to meet and appreciate the fuller knowledge of this enlightened day, and at the same time retain a simple, childlike faith and assurance in the eternal verities of divine inspiration which are our heritage from those who, whatever their limitations in worldly knowledge, were deeply versed in the things of God. Abbott's "What Christianity Means to Me" and Clarke's "Sixty Years With the Bible" are keys unlocking two gates that open on the same highway of light.

A DIFFERNCE.

We are beginning to realize that the unity of believers can never be achieved through the uniformity of beliefs. Men cannot think alike because of their differences in intellectual capacity, in their peculiar character and temper of mind and their various points of view. Unity will come only by loyalty to a common Lord. Not what we believe, but "whom we serve" will bring the real unity of Christian believers. Christian unity is growing wherever this fact is being recognized.—Bishop John M. Moore.

"GOSLING DAY."

Dear Dr. Carley: The article appearing in last week's Advocate, entitled "Gosling Day," I feel is unjust to the young people who met at Louisville, representing 110,000 Methodist students, and I would appreciate an opportunity to say a word in behalf of "Youth."

In the very outset, I want to identify myself with that class of students called college graduates, which our friend so copiously bestowed anathemas upon. I am proud to be classed with them, not that I may repudiate the work of the seers and sages of our church, but because God, through his Providence, has made it possible for me to be a beneficiary of truth, that I may better serve my world. But I must hasten to the primary part of this article, namely, the Methodist students' conference.

Evidently our brother has had very little information as to the object and purpose of the conference. These facts may be of interest: The idea of the National Students' Conference was born in Indianapolis, Ind., in December, 1923. One of its documents described its origin as follows: "Several hundred students affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, gathered at Roberts Park Methodist Episcopal Church, to consider as a denominational group, the Christian service program of Methodism. In a dramatic moment, the students of one family of this denomination filed into the room occupied by the students of the other. The fellowship was almost instantaneously complete. As if by magic, a current of enthsiasm as electric as that which has precipitated other great movements in the past, swept through the entire gathering. The young crusaders, facing each other as Methodist students of America, asked the one question, 'Why not face the task together?' One answer—and only one was given. It was this: 'We will!'" This was the genesis of the Louisville conference. It was a new day for Methodism. It was an epoch in the cause of Christianity.

At the Louisville conference, youth and experience met together. Experience, the elderly member of the confrence, frankly admitted it could learn something from youth. Youth, representing idea and an eagerness to know the will of God, approached the greatest problems of our church and openly and reverently discussed them. There was no note of finality about these discussions, but there was an earnest endeavor put forth to find the way of Christ in these matters. Bishop McConnell spoke a significant truth when he said to those students: "You don't know it all. That is the advantage of it." There is food for thought in that statement, which some of our friends seem not to have considered.

The conference was marked with frankness and an outspoken attitude in spirit and action. These things were given earnest attention: 1. An intense desire to learn and know the will of Christ. 2. A deep and eager interest in world problems. 3. Courage and sincerity. 4. Devotion to church and country. 5. Toleration. The conference had those qualities of toleration and freedom of speech and thought which it approved for universal adoption. Now, I ask the question, could any gathering have had more sincere objectives?

Our brother assailed these young people for discussing great themes of national and international interest, but he did not give any definite reasons to show where there is any law against such a thing. If this is a democracy, surely they have the privilege of speaking. If they had spoken on such subjects twenty-five years ago, thousands of lives might have been spared the horrible death they had to meet on the battle field. Did youth bring about the war? Has youth held before the people of our country un-christian attitudes toward race? Can youth be charged with making "mechanical robots" of men and women who are victims of our industrial system? The answer to these questions is perfectly obvious. It is time for youth to speak! We have seen the futility and imbecility of war; we have come to see that the racial prpblem cannot be solved by antagonism and hatred; we have also come to the conclusion that the lives of the men and women of our industrial systems should be protected. If the youth of our land, upon whose shoulders the future welfare of church and State is to rest, cannot speak for themselves, who is going to speak for them?

It might also be of interest to know that youth has figured in some of the greatest events of history. Alexander the Great conquered the world when he was twenty years old; and when the Carthaginians wanted some one for commander-in-chief of their army, they sent for Hannibal, a young man of twenty-six. Joan of Arc led the army of France when she was seventeen; she had finished her work and was burned at the stake at the age of nineteen. Martin Luther started the Reformation when he was thirty-one; John Calvin joined the Revolution at the age of twenty, and completed his greatest work at twenty-three. Patrick Henry delivered his great address at twenty-six. Alexander Hamilton was thirty-one when he laid down the basis for our entire banking system. John and Charles Wesley were college boys when they began their great work that changed the whole course of English history. Jesus Christ himself was only a young man when he finished his work.

In the light of these facts, it seems to me that youth is not so insignificant after all. Let them speak, and if they can help solve the problems that confront us, we ought to bid them Godspeed. Call them "Goslings," "Tadpoles," or anything you please, but there is one thing more you must call them—you must call them Christians.

FROM MATHISTON, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just finished one of the best Sunday school normals at Mathiston that we have had in the history of Methodism here. It was conducted by Miss Edna Lock, of Kilmichael, Miss., and we would recommend to one and all who intend to have one of these girls from Grenada, that they get Miss Lock, for we have tried her and know she is the true-blue.

We are now planning reorganizing our Sunday school and beginning anew, as our eyes have been opened this week in this fine piece of work conducted by Miss Lock.

J. E. LAWHON, Pastor.

MRS. H. F. TOLLE WRITES ON UNIFICATION.

Dear Brother Carley: The "Union Debates" in the Advocate are very interesting to me. Since I have lived twenty-eight years in the Northern Church and seventeen in the Southern Church, I have loved ones and relatives in both. I have had plenty of time and opportunity to observe that the ratio of scamps and suspicious characters and the brave and true runs about 50—50. We have lived in Illinois, where the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had built in towns where it was not at all needed, only overlapping and hindering God's work; also we, living now in Tampa, are very much opposed to, and do not at all need, the new Methodist Episcopal Church which we read is to be built here soon; and so it goes. As far as I can see, both churches have made mistakes along this line, also about 50—50.

I notice in all the Advocates that people who live along the borderland or in the far Northwest and have, in travel, etc., had opportunity to know whereof they speak, are not at all afraid that "all men are liars," especially if they happen to have been born "somewhere else."

We spent many happy years in the Mississippi Conference and found many true friends, as also we found in California, Arizona, Kansas, and Illinois, where we belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Conference. This propaganda of each other's getting the "other by the throat," forcing "white Conferences to have a colored bishop," etc., is, to my mind, not worthy Christian people who make up the rank and file of both churches. As far as I am concerned, I am already "united," and have been for years, and my advice to all on both sides is to "come on in—the water's fine." I am certainly unafraid, and can trust God's people anywhere. North, East, South, West; but look out for those who have "hate" in their hearts. Love only will win, as Jesus tried to teach us; but there are none so blind as those who will not see.

MRS. H. F. TOLLE.

O God within, so close to me
That every thought is plain,
Be Judge, be Friend, be Father still,
And in thy heaven reign!
Thy heaven is mine—my very soul!
Thy words are sweet and strong;
They fill my inward silences
With music and with song.

AFTER BABY ARRIVES

Many Mothers Weak, Nervous

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps to Restore Health

A great many letters similar to the following recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a wonderful medicine for bringing the new mother back to normal health and strength.

It is an excellent restorative, contains no harmful drugs, and can be taken in safety by a nursing mother.

Thousands of mothers who have regained their strength by taking it are its best recommendation. Why not take it yourself?

Now Well Again

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"After I had my second child I felt sick and nervous and could not do much. Then after the other baby came I was worse than ever. I suffered this way for a long time and did not know what to do. I was looking over my cook books, and found one of your little books and I sat down and read every page. Then I bought a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took four bottles of it before I stopped, and now I am well again. I always recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends." —Mrs. JOHN MITZKE, 773 8th Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"My health got worse after my little girl's birth, and my mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as it had done her so much good. I had headaches and tired feelings, with no ambition, also pains at times so it hurt me to walk. With the Vegetable Compound I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I have been greatly helped. I do hope you will use my letter as a testimonial as it will help other women."—Mrs. GEORGE SHOEMAKER, 349 Emslie St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Followed Friend's Advice

Vienna, South Dakota. — "After my second child was born I was completely run-down and didn't care for anything. I had sharp pains in my sides and a white discharge and was nervous and weak. I didn't seem to care how I neglected my work. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took it for two months the first time and one month the last time. It has helped me in a great many ways and the pains have left me entirely. I certainly wish you to know how much benefit I have received."—Mrs. G. W. FREEMAN, Vienna, South Dakota.

Such letters and a successful record of forty years convince Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the [illegible]. For sale by druggists everywhere.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The idea of the Sunday schools of the Conference to endow the chair of Religious Education of Grenada College is being received with enthusiasm wherever mentioned. Rev. J. A. Randolph, pastor at Sardis, has sent in the first check for $100. I expect another hundred to go in before long. The plan of having the Sunday schools do this piece of work will show what the Methodists think of the worth of religious education. There are hundreds of people who can given ten dollars each, who cannot give a thousand dollars, but it is worth more to the college and to the people for a large number of people to contribute than for ten or a hundred men to endow this chair. If you love the college, if you desire to see the Kingdom of God go to work—do not wait for some one to ask you. Let individuals, classes, departments, schools take the matter up and send checks to J. E. Stephens, Grenada, Miss., saying that the amount is on the $50,000 endowment of the chair of Religious Education. A check for $10 has been received from Mrs. Valcour McDonald, Lake Junaluska, N. C.

The Columbus District Standard Training School, held in connection with the District Conference in the city of Columbus last week, was a success in every respect. Our official enrollment was 85, and we issued 66 credits. We do not count any one unless they attend half the time. A number of the delegates to the district conference attended from two to four class periods to see the nature of the work. They were interested and expressed themselves in glowing terms as to the character of the work. Fourteen preachers and five superintendents did work for credit. We make special mention of these two classes, because they are our official leaders, and the church is looking to these men to lead in the work of the kingdom. Revs. A. T. McIlwain, E. S. Lewis and Del Longgrear did some hard work to make the school a success. The people of Columbus were generous in their hospitality toward the school and the conference.

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

The fifth Sunday in June was a red-letter day in Sunday school work in the Ruston District. The Men's Bible classes of the Ruston District had what we would call a "One-Day District Bible Class Federation." The Ruston Bible class acted as host for fifteen or more Bible classes in the district, inviting the other classes to meet with them at the regular 10 o'clock hour, and secured Dean R. E. Smith, Conference Superintendent of Adult Work, as teacher at this hour. Dinner was served at the Orphanage Park.

The Homer class had the largest delegation, 125 men, with Ruston coming second. The total attendance was 522 men. The following pastors came with their delegation: Rev. R. W. Tucker, Homer; Rev. W. C. Childress, Minden; Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Haynesville; Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, Arcadia, and Rev. J. F. Dring, Sibley. The other ministers present were: Presiding elder, Rev. K. W. Dodson; Rev. N. E. Joyner, Rev. Robert Vaughan, and Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of Calhoun, and the writer. Rev. N. E. Joyner preached the 11 o'clock sermon. They voted to hold their next meeting at Minden, the fifty Sunday in August.

Final arrangement has been made for the Ruston Standard Training School, Sunday, Aug. 3-8. The first lesson period opens Sunday night at 7:30, with the following instructors and courses:

Dean R. E. Smith, Bible (Old Testament); Mrs. J. M. Henry, Principles of Teaching; Mrs. Byron Harwell, Primary Pupil; Miss Nannie Baker, Junior Lesson Material; Rev. H. L. Johns, Intermediate-Senior Agencies.

This is the third session of the Ruston school, and the leaders, Rev. N. E. Joyner, the Educational Director, and Rev. K. W. Dodson, chairman of the Board of Managers, both say the prospects for this school, in interest and attendance, are better than the two former schools.

The date for the second school in the Ruston District is Oct. 5-10, at Minden. The Educational Director of this school, Rev. W. C. Childress, is very much interested, and no doubt the record of this school will be a credit to Minden and the joining co-operating schools of that section of the district. The next great Bible Class Federation, to be held at Minden on the fifth Sunday in August, will help to promote this Training School.

The writer was in the Baton Rouge District, July 2. There was a rally of the Sunday school leaders of the Central Sub-district. This meeting was held near Hammond, at Natalbany church. The leaders there decided on a Standard Training School for that section of the Baton Rouge District, during the first week in September, the school to be held at Amite. They elected the board of managers and other officers, including the pastor at Amite, Rev. B. H. Andrews, as Educational Director. The presiding elder, Rev. H. N. Brown, was not able to be at this meeting, but Dr. C. W. Crisler took his place and read a fine message from the presiding elder to his co-workers in that section of the district. Mr. O. H. Cline, District Superintendent of Teacher Training for the Baton Rouge District, was present and took part in the conference.

One of the mosst enthusiastic messages that were delivered in favor of Standard Training Schools was made by the faithful superintendent at Hammond, La., Dr. L. D. McGehee. Rev. J. E. Selfe, pastor from Hammond, read a splendid report on the Standard Training School of 1923, which was held at Hammond. The pastor at Ponchatoula, Rev. J. W. Booth, moved that the conference adopt as a policy the holding of this sub-District Standard Training School annually from place to place. The school was voted to go to Amite for 1924.

The pastor at Natalbany, with a committee of young people from his church, served this conference with a delightful luncheon in the Sunday school room. In the afternoon the following officers for the Central Sub-District were elected:

Mr. J. R. Ables, District Secretary; Mrs. Roy Stewart, Elementary Superintendent; Miss Carrie Vineyard, Young People's Superintendent; Mr. Herbert Broyles, Adult Superintendent; Mrs. J. B. McGee, Intermediate-Senior Superintendent; Miss Lula Pipes, Teacher Training Superintendent.

The Mount Sequoyah Leadership Training School is now in session. Mrs. J. M. Henry, our Assistant Conference Superintendent, writes: "Mrs. Culpepper and I are having a good time, and studying hard. Miss Gunby is here from Monroe. * * * I went to a meeting of the Conference Superintendents last night, called by Mr. Sensabaugh, and he explained many worthwhile things. * * * This is a very beautiful place. The faculty is excellent. I am taking Young People's work under Miss Foreman, and Sunday School Administration under Mr. Schisler. I could not become an official 'checker' without this credit. * * * Mrs. Culpepper and I had Miss Kennedy go over the Elementary Standards, and she will approve us to do this work in Louisiana. Mrs. Culpepper attended the Elementary Council. She is taking two credits in Junior work, and is well pleased."

The date of the Junaluska Training

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

A non-Standard Training School was conducted for the charges adjacent to Braxton the last week in June. We conducted classes in "The Program of the Christian Religion," with Miss Russell as teacher; "The Organization and Administration of the Sunday School," with Rev. Irl Sells, teacher; "The Principles of Religious Teaching," with myself as leader. We had a good enrollment and much interest. We met at 7:30 p. m., the first class running to 8:20, with a ten minutes recess in which we conducted a devotional. The last period ran to 9 p.m. Seventeen took the examination. It was a real fine venture.

Below is given the program from the Harperville Circuit Institute, which was held at Contrell church, the fifth Sunday in June, with all but one who were asked to serve on the program taking part. This is given to show that a circuit can hold its institute without outside help. The report from the institute was very good indeed.

Song, "God Will Take Care of You;" Scripture, 1 Tim., fourth chapter; prayer, by the pastor, Rev. W. W. Murry; song, "The Fight Is On." Mr. M. M. Mapp gave a talk on the training class held at Harperville: J. C. Marler gave a talk on "The Ideal Sunday School Superintendent;" song, "Give Me Thy Heart," Miss Audie Bishop; "An Organized Class and How It Functions," Miss Rose Taylor; "Organized Class Acitivities;" a solo by M. M. Mapp. Dinner.

Song, "Can the World See Jesus in You?" prayer, by M. M. Mapp; "The Relation of the Teacher to the Pupil." Rev. W. W. Murry; "Why Should Sunday School Day be Observed?" M. M. Mapp; "Why Is It Necessary to Have Trained Teachers?" Frank Smith; quartet, "Just a Little While;" an outlined program for an Ideal Devotional Period, I. A. Williamson; open discussion and Round Table; benediction by the pastor.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT TRAINING SCHOOL.

We have just closed the third district training school for the Columbus District. There were between ninety and one hundred persons who attended the classes more or less regularly, and sixty-six received certificates showing that they had been present every time and had done the required work. Miss Bruce McDonald, of Columbia, S. C., had a splendid class in junior materials. She did most acceptable work. Mrs. W. W. Adams, of Memphis, taught Beginners' Worship. She had the largest class in the school, and everybody was delighted with her work. Dr. A. W. Milden, of the University of Mississippi, taught a large class in Principles of Teaching. He is a jewel of the first water. Rev. W. W. Woollard taught the Life of St. Paul. Many remarked: "Why send out of the State to get some one to teach this course when Brother Woollard can equal the best in the land?" Brother Gladney taught The School. The finest type of work was done, and all pronounced this one of the very best schools. It had the enthuisastic support of every part of the district. Four ladies from Macon motored seventy miles every day for six days to attend the school. Twelve people came from Starkville every day, a distance of twenty-eight miles. Their superintendent, Mr. Whitman Davis, came with them and got his certificate. He had practically as many with him at Grenada school the week before. Sixty-six certificates for one district school is not a bad showing. All honor to Rev. A. T. McIlwain, the presiding elder, and Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, the Conference superintendent.

In addition to the school we had the district conference going on at the same time. Dr. Clovis G. Chappell, of Memphis, preached twice a day throughout the week. It was a great week for us. We are all tired but happy.

E. S. LEWIS.

A SITUATION FACED BY EVERY MISSION SUPERINTENDENT IN KOREA.

We are still greatly in need of small buildings to house new groups. It is more than can be expected that a village just emerging from heathenism should suddenly be possessed with a spirit of great liberality, and out of its poverty contribute enough to build a house of worship. It makes us sad to see large groups of believers spring up and because of no place in which to meet for worship gradually fall away until all is lost. In this district alone, the Wonson, we need $5,000 to meet present urgent demands. Any part of this amount would be used to advantage. I wish our people at home fully realized what our situation here is. At no time in the past has the Gospel message met with better reception than at the present time.

V. R. TURENR,
Superintendent, Wonsan District, Korea.

NOTE OF THANKS.

Through the Advocate, we desire to thank the preachers and all others who have been so kind in sending us letters of sympathy and comfort as we have been passing through our day of sorrow. These letters and kind words have helped us so much. Our sorrow could not have been borne had it not been for God's presence and the sympathy and help of our many friends. The people here in Shaw have been untiring in their sympathy and help, and we shall never forget them. May God's richest blessings rest upon one and all.

J. D. SIMPSON AND CHILDREN.

And I can bless thee, too, for every smart,
For every disappointment, ache and fear,
For every hook thou fixest in my heart,
For every burning cord that draws me near.

LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT MEETING.

The Lake Charles District missionary meeting was held in the Lafayette Methodist Church Tuesday afternoon, April 29, 1924, at 3 o'clock, with twenty-two present. Mrs. J. N. McDonald, the new district secretary, efficiently presided.

The meeting was opened with the hymn, "The Rock that is Higher Than I," followed by prayer and Scripture reading by Mrs. Kennedy, with singing by the assembly in conclusion. Mrs. McDonald welcomed the delegates and called the roll. Different societies were represented as follows: Crowley 1, Eunice 0, Lafayette 5, Gueydan 0, Indian Bayou 0, Lake Arthur 1, New Iberia 2, Rayne 11. Mrs. Moore, of Crowley, gave a splendid paper on the mission study work, and the importance of a standard mission training class. Mrs. Holt talked on Bible study work in Rayne and how to organize classes.

Mrs. Davidson reported that although their mission study was not a standard class, they held very interesting meetings. Reading of the Leesville meeting minutes by Mrs. Judice followed.

Mrs. Wynn showed how social service might be accomplished most successfully by co-operation of all organizations.

The best thing done by the societise during the year was reported: Lafayette, Bible study; Rayne, Mission study; Lake Arthur, social work; New Iberia, Bible study; Crowley, inter-racial work and Friedship Community Club.

Development of young women for religious work was urged. Rev. Mr. Walton, of Rayne, pronounced the benediction.

The Tuesday evening session was happily opened with a bright song rendered by the Lafayette Juniors. Miss Frances Wynn, of Rayne, gave a well chosen devotional on the parable of "A Tree Sower," stressing the point of sowing good seed in young hearts, which will reap an abundant harvest. Mrs. R. C. Webb closed with an earnest prayer. Further talent of Lafayette Juniors was reproduced in three delightful readings. Miss Ruth Stodgill charmed the audience with a beautiful rendition of "The Holy City." The evening offering was taken by the Juniors.

Mrs. McDonald then introduced Mrs. C. C. Carver, State treasurer. Mrs. Carver soon transported the audience into the beautiful settings at Tampa, Fla., where the Council meeting was held, mentioning the wonderful hospitality of that city, and the great privilege of association with the fine, consecrated Council workers. Prominent on the program was "Gibson Day," when Miss Maria Gibson, Principal Emeritus of Scarritt, was honored. The Belle Bennett Memorial, or the Greater Scarritt, was the question of the day, and the reason for Nasbville being chosen for the new location was its adjacency to Peabody College, where Scarritt pupils may take advantage of the opportunities offered for their necessary preparation in training. Mrs. Carver told of the interesting missionary reports. As guests of the Council were lovely Christian girls from China, Brazil, Japan, and Korea. Each extended an invitation to the Council to meet in their respective countries. The beautiful story of the true saerificial gift of Miss Wong of China, and the result was a most touching one as told by the speaker. Outstanding features of the Council were talks made by Miss Daisy Davies on "Consecration;" the noon hour Bible lesson given by Dr. W. W. Alexander; the consecration of three deaconesses, and the final inspiring consecration service, where twenty-four young women marched in, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and, being seated on the platform, each told why she had chosen this as her life work. A touching fact was the tribute to their mothers as an inspiration for giving their lives to the Master. Tulsa, Okla., was chosen as the place of meeting for 1925.

The meeting was dismissed by a beautiful and inspiring prayer, led by Mrs. F. M. Miller, of Abbeville.

The last session of the district conference opened at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, with District Secretary Mrs. J. N. McDonald in the chair. Following an opening song, Mrs. Hoffpauir, of Lake Arthur, led an inspirational devotional, using the 34th Psalm. Sentence prayers formed a suitable conclusion.

Mrs. W. H. Moore, of Crowley, sang "Give of Your Best to the Master." Mrs. Segura, of New Iberia, presented the subject of "Stewardship," showing in a very clear way how giving of one's best consisted in a wise stewardship of wealth, time, and talent for the Master, which brings blessings and reward.

Mrs. L. I. McCain, of Lafayette, reported work done by the Lafayette Juniors and the organization in general.

A subject of long standing and general interest was that of correlation of Leagues and Young People's Missionary Societies, which was openly disenssed. Mrs. Carver gave official information, showing the results of committees representing both. Questions sent out to the various conferences by the Council brought varied answers. The consensus of opinion was expressed that the value of both should be preserved, but favored the missionary training given through the Young People's organizations.

Much interest centered around the budget plan of financing an auxiliary, as explained by Mrs. R. E. Holt, of Rayne.

A round table discussion of "Is It Better to Keep Experienced Officers or Replace with New Ones," brought out a number of phases of the subject, as did the important question of "How to Gain and Hold New Members."

Rayne was chosen for the meeting place for the conference of April, 1925.

Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Lafayette, honorary president of the Louisiana Conferenee, and president of the Lafayette Auxiliary, stirred the hearts of the women as she spoke of the work wrought through the Woman's Missionary Society.

Mrs. McDonald voiced the sentiments of delegates in expressing appreciation to Lafayette Auxiliary for their hospitality, and the session was closed.

Noted at the conference were the Adults and Young People's Societies of Abbeville and Rayne, also the Junior Societies of Lafayette.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

"Save America"—is a wonderful pamphlet gotten out by the Woman's National Committee of One Hundred for Law Enforcement, in which our Council is represented by Mrs. F. F. Stephens. The work of this committee is to be sustained by the sale and study of this pamphlet, which is propaganda for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and prevention of a modification of the Volstead Act at the coming Congress.

"Save America" is rich in spicy paragraphs, short articles, parables, stories, and quotable sayings. You will want to read it.

The superintendent of Social Service urges all members of the Missionary Society to help carry on this work by buying and studying this pamphlet.

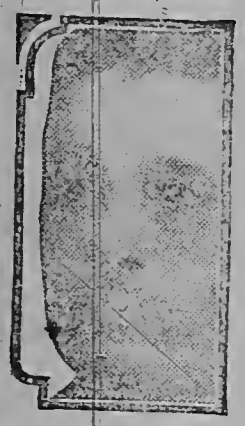
Now Well He Used PE-RU-NA



Mr. Charles S. Many, 12 Water St., Ossining, N. Y., writes:—"I had catarrh for ten years. tried a lot of medicines, spent a lot of money but it did me no good. Instead of getting better I grew worse. My eyes were bloodshot, my nose smelled bad, and I would get so dizzy I would be forced to catch hold of something to keep from falling. I used about ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and am cured of catarrh, the dizzy feeling has left me and I am not bothered any more. I keep Pe-ru-na in the house and when I feel a cold coming on I take a little. It does me good."

THE UNIFICATION QUESTION.

The unification question which now confronts Southern Methodists for settlement marks a grave crisis in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It does not require great learning or keen perception for one to realize that union according to the present plan means the absorption of the Southern Church by the Northern Church, because the latter is about twice as large as the former. The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, is a most bitter partisan in politics. When such a church has gained complete control of the Southern Church, it will be in a more strategic position to antagonize and destroy Southern ideals. Also the Northern Church is more under the dominance of modernism than is the Church, South. The union of these two churches constitutes a real menace to the best interests of our beloved South.

The separation of the Northern and Southern Churches was brought about in 1844 because the Northern Methodists tried to force Bishop Andrew to free his slaves. In making such an attempt, without the least show of authority for their conduct, they rode rough-shod over the constitution of the church. Have they ever admitted that they were wrong in doing this? If not, how can our church unite with the Northern Church without compromising the principles that its dead leaders stood for years ago? The slavery question is no longer an issue, but it is not safe to unite with a church that has no regard for law and which will kick the constitution into the waste-basket if it happens to stand in its way. If the Northern Church had no regard for the constitution once when its interests went contrary to it, what assurance have Southern Methodists that it will act differently if tested again in a similar manner? We have no way to judge the future but by the past.

I am disposed to think very highly of the stand taken by Bishops Candler, Denny, Darlington, and Dickey on the calling of the General Conference before the Annual Conferences had a chance to elect new delegates. One cannot praise the position of these worthy bishops without condemning and severely censuring that taken by the other ten. The latter have proceeded in a high-handed way, without giving due regard to the rights of the Annual Conferences, and their action ought not to help the cause of unification. I strongly exhort all loyal Southern Methodists to line up back of Bishops Candler, Denny, Darlington, and Dickey. These men have taken a courageous and noble stand for the right, and they deserve our gratitude and love. Our people should pray that the Lord will strengthen these leaders in the position that they have taken and that he will give a final victory to their cause.

CLAIBORNE METHODIST CHURCH, SHREVEPORT, LA.—AND THEN SOME.

Claiborne Methodist Church is the 17th church of our denomination in the city of Shreveport. It was built under the direction of our far-seeking presiding elder, and the City Church Extension Boards, the lots being purchased and the buildings being erected with seats for 200. This is an exclusive residential section, composed of mechanics, railroad men, and others. The building has never adequately met our needs for Sunday school, and plans are under way now whereby we will have more room before very long; now, we are using the "big outdoors" for a number of our classes. There is no other church of any denomination within a mile of us, and we are striving to make ours a community center.

Oranizing Sept. 16 without a member, we now have 85, most of whom are "true-blue," with a pianist who has been absent from three services in the ten months of our work. Our midweek prayer meetings are the feature of our work, having averaged 43 in attendance since Jan. 1. How many churches can average 50% of their membership at prayer meeting for a period of six months?

We closed yesterday a two weeks' meeting, the preaching being done by the various pastors of the city, each coming to us for one or more nights. We did not have the results that we had hoped for, but we have gained some in membership and our people have been strengthened.

The greatest good that seems to have been accomplished was our day service. We called it a "Daily Vacation Bible School." It might not have measured up to the standard set by those who started the movement, but we conducted it in our own way, the pastor being the director, with very able local assistants, all of whom volunteered their services, giving two weeks of Bible stories and drills, directed play, singing, and devotional training, that was greatly enjoyed by the instructors as well as the pupils. We had an average attendance for the ten days of 52 between the ages of 5 and 13, with a total average, including instructors and visitors, of 68. This was my fourth series of services of this kind, two for my own church and two for other brethren. I believe it to be at least a part of the solution as to the needs of our young people and boys and girls, tying them to the church as nothing I have ever seen does. It takes hard work, but it amply repays for all the energy that it costs. In this one just held, we did not make it a church affair, but rather a community matter. We had those of five different denominations and two Jewesses in attendance. I have had at other times, when it seemed wise to do so, a course in Methodist doctrine, etc., and have found that it has been very helpful. Everywhere it has been tried out it has not only brought the children and young people, but their parents as well, into closer touch with the church. I am writing thus fully to urge that you try it, Brother Pastor, and if I may be of any assistance in making suggestions or otherwise, shall be glad to help you. I am completely "sold" to the idea.

Shreveport Methodism seems to be still going forward. From all the churches we hear good things. Cedar Grove and Johns became too large for their house, and have just completed a great Sunday school building that is already full, only open a month. Bossier City and Roy both are rejoicing over a great revival just closed. Mangum Memorial has made some adjustments of their church debt and are ready for work, as never before. Watch Smith, Texas Avenue and Alford have just "growed" so that they have almost all their plans ready for a new building to be built about four blocks from the present site. Noel Memorial and Holmes seem to be the only ones that have adequate room at the present, but if they continue to grow, they will have to spread out somewhere; they are said to have one of the best plants in Southern Methodism for Sunday school and church work. First Church and Goodrich seem just to have been made for each other, except that they are planning to knock out the sides of this great building and double the size of their plant. The folks who want to get in to hear Goodrich are turned away by the hundreds, even on these hot days. We, his brethren in the ministry, feel that Texas sent to us their best, and we feel that he is a brother beloved. We are anxious that he remain for a long time with us. Our aggressive presiding elder, Dr. R. H. Wynn, is completing his fourth year, and we are all hoping that the coming special General Conference will remove the time limit on the elder, so that he may remain with us for some time to come.

And we have a "real-live bishop" living with us. That means much more than it sounds, for he is very much alive and lives in Shreveport. We have already felt the effect of his presence among us, and we are glad to have him where we can at least "see" him occasionally.

W. F. HENDERSON, Jr., P. C.

Why You Need Iron—

To Make You Strong and "Brainy" and Put the Power Into Your Blood To Overcome Disease Germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—it is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

Impoverished blood corpuscles highly magnified.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact almost any disease or disease germs is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance and the greatest energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

Healthy blood corpuscles highly magnified

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

FROM THE FRENCH FIELD.

Dear Brother Carley: I have just closed two great and fruitful revivals —one at Bayou Blue, and one at Eagle Island.

At Bayou Blue, Brother Hebert and Brother Picone did the preaching. Brother Serix, a student of Emory University, did the singing. I must say that Brother Serix put both soul and body in this French field.

Just a few years ago, Brother Briethaupt came in this field, and he had to pay one dollar for a hall to preach every service; he had to preach to two deaf persons, and had to preach so loud to those two presons that he frightened the others nearly to death. That was about all he had to preach to. But to-day I have every reason to believe that we can pitch a tent anywhere in Terrebonne and Lafourche Parishes and draw a big crowd. Yes, brethren, we are moving with God's speed in this French field.

Brother Hebert preached to at least one hundred and twenty-five persons every night at Eagle Island last week. I have heard Brother Hebert preach several times, but never as I heard him last week. He preached with the power of the Holy Spirit. Nine joined the church, and about five Roman familles were very greatly interested in our meeting. I am sure with much prayers and eour age we will win them for Christ.

I am glad to state that the Revs. Martin Hebert, Adrien Serix and Leon Picone are not modernist preachers, but 100 per cent orthodox; that is what we need in our church to-day, without which we will fail to win the world for Christ.

I want to thank those good women of De Ridder for the "portable organ" that they have given to the French field. It was a great help for us in those revivals. Miss Maggy Martin was the pianist during the two revivals; she surely was a great help to us; God bless her.

And I thank also all the good missionary women who sent those boxes of clothes to give to these poor people in this field. I am glad to see that the missionary women of First Church, of Shreveport, are interested in our French field.

Brethren and sisters, help us to save these poor, dying souls for Christ.

I remain as ever your co-worker in the principles of our Saviour,

JAPANESE EVANGELIST CONDUCTS GREAT MEETING IN HIROSHIMA.

From Rev. I. L. Shaver, missionary, in a letter dated April 29, we received the following account: "We have just closed a great meeting at Matoba, conducted by our Rev. T. Kugimiya. We had made thorough preparation, having visited 5,000 homes, distributed 15,000 handbills, and about 5,000 tracts. We had also been conducting a 'Sotenki Kitokai,' early morning prayer meeting, on a neighboring mountain for one week before the meeting began. This was continued during the meeting. Brother Kugimiya brought us seven wonderful messages, wonderful in power and simplicity. Large crowds attended all the services. We had to open the kitchen in order to accommodate the large number who wished to hear. Brother Kugimiya is a wonderful evangelist. He compares well with many of our American evangelists. He preaches a straight gospel that grips, convinces and converts his hearers. As a result of the meeting there are thirty-nine new believers, several of whom will be ready for baptism soon. The church also was greatly blessed. The Japanese Christians are certainly praying people. It seems natural to them. Practically all Japanese Christians will lead in prayer in public, and they carry their Bibles and song books to church, too. Last night after the close of the service, while we were upstairs having tea, one of the new believers came in. He had gone home from the service and to bed, but being so happy in his new experience he said he had to come back and tell us about it. The light of a new-born soul was in his eyes, and the happy expression was indeseribable. Thank God for such a salvation."

LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT.

On Suuday, June 29, several Leaguers from the Lake Charles League, includiug the delegates from that League who weut to the Mausfield Assembly, and Miss Julia Reid, new State treasurer, aud Mr. Clyde Creagh, new district secretary of the Lake Charles District, motored over to Lafayette and joiued the Lafayette Leaguers in an echo meeting (eehoes from the Assembly). There was a group of the Lafayette Leaguers present to greet the Lake Charles visitors, and all seemed to enjoy the meeting and seemed to be iuspired to do better work, and send more delegates to the Assembly next year. The meeting was led by Miss Julia Reid. The Lafayette Leaguers promised to come to Lake Charles some time soon and put on a program for the Lake Charles League, thus forwarding the work of our district.

Yours in the work,

YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE USE OF MONEY.

The theme of the recent Epworth League Assembly at Mansfield, La., was "Christ's Teachings Regarding the Use of Money." The slogan was: "Money talks: What does yours say?"

That readers of the Advocate may know how well this theme was impressed on the Epworth Leaguers who attended, the writer gives here a symposium gleaned from a class paper written by a group of Intermediate boys and girls.

Mary Camp, Hayuesville: "Tithing was an Old Testament law of the Jews. Christ took the old law and made it better. We should give God his share. Non-tithing is the seedbed of theft. God puts us on our honor to give him his share."

Lois Stansbury, New Orleans: "We must remember that everything that we have belongs to God, so we should give him his share. Some people think that they give too much to the church. They do not give too much, but not euough. If a person is a good Christian and loves Jesus, he will give freely."

Sarah Lyles, Bunkie: "Tithing is a great blessing to any one, for the one who tithes has that blessed assurance that God will take eare of him. Some people try to dodge and ignore God's part, but if every one would stop and think of the source, and of God's eall, no one would hesitate; for only iu God's keeping ean our burdens be made lighter."

Grace Johnson, Cedar Grove: "Tithing is necessary, beeause as Christians we realize that God is the owner of all things."

Azile Swann, Shreveport: "Without God, everybody would be helpless. God only asks for a tenth. If you want to give more you can."

Mary Kilgore, Shreveport: "Stewardship means giving God his share of everything you possess. He promises us many blessings if we do his will in this matter, and God always keeps his promises."

Hubert Young, De Ridder: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, which makes him the rightful owner, and through his goodness and mercy has placed us on his property. We must let him use our money. Of course we are all God's, and everything is his, but he leaves us entirely ou our honor as to our decision. We may tithe at least (if not more than that) with our money. We may also give our lives into his service. This is what he expects of us."

Mildred Glass, Vivian: "I realize now what stewardship means to the churches as I never realized before. * * * Coveteouness is another thing I have come to realize. I knew it was a sin. I did not know it was such a terrible thing."

Krin Crawford, Shreveport: "We owe a tenth as God's part. We steal if we do not pay it."

Catherine Pace, Many: "I never knew before what wonderful promises God had made to those who would tithe."

Fairy Lynn Brown, Shreveport: "Why should we pay a tenth? God is the biggest factor of production. Society and the individual demand their share, but God is patient and puts his children on their honor because he loves us. There are many excuses given why people do not pay the tithe, but there is no real excuse. Some think just the rich people should pay to the church, but God helps every one, and every one should give a tithe."

JUNALUSKA FEATURE.

We have the following good news to pass on to those Epworth Leaguers who are planning to attend the Epworth League Assembly at Junaluska, August 14-26. The Kirby Brothers' Quartette of the North Alabama Confereuce will be on hand. They will sing at the vesper services and on special occasions. If you have never heard this fine quartette of Epworth Leaguers sing, you have missed a great treat; if you have heard them, you will want to hear them again. Get ready now to go to Junaluska!

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

PROHIBITION LEGISLATION IN THE LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

In spite of the fact that there seemed to be a determination on the part of some of the members of the Legislature that hast just closed to enact legislation that would practically annul the Hood, prohibition measure and that would give aid and comfort to the advocates of light wines and beer, the results of the recent session are gratifying to prohibitionists throughout the State. Instead of the Hood bill's being weakened, it was amended so as to cure material defects, and, thus amended, it remains on the statute books. Another bill was also passed, making it a penal offense to use poisonous substances in bootleg liquor, so that those who engage in the illicit manufacture or sale of liquor will be subject to double prosecution. It is fitting that those who sponsored and worked for these salutary laws should be commended for their vigorous and successful efforts. Among the leaders in the Senate were Hon. T. L. Hood, of Monroe, and Hon. Delos R. Johnson, of Franklinton; in the House, Hon. T. W. Holloman, of Alexandria, and Dr. Harrison Jordan, of Rayville. To these and their stalwart supporters much credit is due for strengthening the prohibition cause in Louisiana. In addition to these, Rev. A. W. Turner, Legislative Superintendent of the State Anti-Saloon League, deserves great credit for his labors and influence in promoting the cause of prohibition. Brother Turner is admired, respected and feared—even by those who differ from him in their views on the liquor question. It is impossible to estimate the value of his services in connection with the present status of prohibition legislation in Louisiana.

THE PLAN OF UNIFICATION.

There ought to be, and we presume there will be, a very careful study of the plan of unification now before the church, pending the vote upon it at the sessions of the Annual Conferences in 1925. This study should be carried on by all the members of the church, both men and women, including, of course, all the young people, in order that there may be a thorough understanding of all that is involved in the plan.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the need of studying the plan as it has been submitted by the Joint Commission on Unification, approved by the General Conferences of both churches, and handed down to the Annual Conferences for their action. No member of the church is prepared to express an intelligent opinion concerning this plan of unification until he has studied it carefully and has come to an understanding of what is in the plan itself. We do not say that it is so—but we have read some articles and heard some oral expressions concerning the question of unification that seemed not to be based at all upon what the plan provides, but upon what the writer or speaker imagined would be found in it.

It ought to be a great advantage in the discussion of unification to have a definite plan before us for study—the plan upon which the union is to be based if it is brought about at this time. Before the Commission acted, the discussion, of necessity, had to be in more or less general terms; now, we have the exact conditions upon which the union is proposed, and the discussion ought to deal with these specified conditions. It is hardly fair to read into the plan what is not there, or to leave out of consideration what the plan actually contains. The plan itself is before us; interpretations of its provisions may differ, but these provisions are laid down in black and white.

While our constitutional process provides only for a vote by members of Annual Conferences, we believe unreservedly that every member of the church has a right to his opinion concerning the plan, provided he has taken the trouble to inform himself as to its provisions. There should not be—and we do not believe there has been, or that there will be—any attempt to "jam" the plan through the Annual Conferences without giving the laity a chance to be heard. Since the plan has been before the church only a short time, it is not reasonable to suppose that the great rank and file of the church membership are thoroughly familiar with it; certainly, therefore, they should not hastily commit themselves either for or against it. We know of at least one case where the names of little children were signed to a petition against unification when, by the most charitable construction, they could have known nothing of what was really involved in the plan. No reasonable person surely would expect such a petition to have much weight—and the same would be true if the petition had been in favor of the plan. A fair-minded person always wants to hear both sides of a question before he makes up his mind concerning it; certainly, with this momentous issue before us, every effort should be made to get both sides before an opinion is formed. We may remark, in passing, that the church press is, without exception so far as we know, open to both sides in this discussion, and if there ever was a time when church members should be taking and reading their church papers, now is the time.

The weakest of all arguments is the one based upon fear and prejudice. We hope the discussion of the plan of unification will be based upon a higher plane than that which involves these weaknesses of human nature. That we cannot utterly divest ourselves of them may be true; yet it is possible, when we set ourselves to the task, to subdue them to the point where they will not cloud our vision or warp our judgment. The great question of unification is not one to be settled merely upon the basis of our personal fear and prejudice, but upon the high ground of the best interests of the Kingdom of God. Conference and judgment should rule out fear and prejudice.

The church should be in such a spirit of prayer during the next few months while this matter is under consideration that a great spiritual revival would result, whether unification be consummated or not.

"OUR MINISTRY OF TOMORROW."

In the Advocate of July 3, under the above caption, there appeared an article by Dr. R. H. Bennett, Secretary of the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training and Life Service in our Church, that deserves a careful reading by all our people, especially by our young preachers. There are just two points in that article to which we wish to call particular attention. The first is the statement that there has been no improvement in the number of preachers who are admitted into the traveling connection under the two-thirds rule—that is, the provision of law by which young preachers who do not meet the educational requirements of the church may, in exceptional cases, be admitted by a two-thirds vote of the Annual Conference to which they apply. The very highest ambition of the church is that all applicants for admission into the traveling connection shall have at least the equivalent of a high school education. It would seem that this requirement is low enough for men who, by the very nature of the case, will be placed in positions of leadership in communities where most of the people, especially the young people, will have at least a high school education, and many of them will have college training. If the church does not provide to furnish an educated ministry for an educated constituency, it will have to give up the hope of furnishing a leadership for the social, moral and religious forces of the age. The two-thirds rule is a good provision for cases that really are exceptional, but such cases are, or ought to be, few and far between.

The second statement to which we wish to call particular attention is this: "Last year, out of 1,310 undergraduates, 107 failed to pass their examinations. This year, out of 1,501 undergraduates, 325 failed." These figures show an improvement this year over last year, but they are still far from showing a satisfactory condition among the undergraduates. We know perfectly well that there are circumstances under which a young preacher is excusable for not bringing up his course of study during the Conference year; and we have not a word of censure in such

LIFE—I AM READY.

Life—I am ready,
My tears are sent;
Grief is so futile,
So vain lament.
Life—I am ready;
Come whatever will;
I have met the Comforter
Out upon the hill.

Out in the clean winds
His voice I heard.
Sorrow makes one more keen
To catch His word.
"Let not your heart be troubled!"
The winds breathed it low.
And now I understand—
And now I know!

Life—I am ready;
Not baffled and dismayed.
I met Him on the highest hill,
No more am I afraid.
A heart for any fate is mine,
There were thorn prints on His brow!
And nail scars on His tender hands!
Life—I am ready now.

"OTHER REFUGE HAVE WE NONE."

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

There is a widespread conviction that nothing but the return of the people to God will suffice to correct the condition of disorder and demoralization which has followed the war.

Sensible men see that there has been a fearful decline in morality, which threatens gravely all other interests, and they refuse to allow the charge of "pessimism" to repress the expression of their convictions.

Men widely separated by distance, and more widely by class distinctions are speaking out clearly and cogently. The most eminent editors, educators, economists, and statesmen unite with one voice in pointing out the perils of sin to civilization and in declaring religion to be the only force able to avert the dangers which arise from it.

Recently the St. Louis Globe-Democrat said:

"A state of almost universal degeneracy is apparent in the decline of moral standards throughout the world. The destructions of the war that are counted in blood and treasure are perhaps the least of its disasters. The clock of civilization has been turned back. How are its great hands to be turned forward so as to recover the loss and to proceed with progress? We say it with solemnity that it can only be done by the recovery of consciousness of God and of responsibility to God in the hearts and minds of men."

The degeneracy to which the editor of the Globe-Democrat refers is not confined to any class of people.

It is manifested in the form of highway robberies in our cities perpetrated in open daylight, and it has broken forth at the national capital in an eruption of political corruption that smells to heaven. Some may say there has been less wrong-doing upon the part of high officials at Washington than the press reports have indicated, and that politicians have exaggerated for partisan purposes the whole situation. That does materially alter the case; for we are forced to admit that colossal frauds have been perpetrated on enormous falsehoods uttered. In either case, prominent men in the government are guilty of the grossest immorality. Perhaps both fraud and falsehood have mingled in the foul flood of evil which has filled the federal capital.

In many directions are evidences of the prevalent degeneracy which the St. Louis editor so vividly described and so justly deprecated. They are visible in commerce, social life, literature and education. During the war many men rose to unusual heights of heroism who were without sufficient moral force within themselves to sustain them at such lofty levels, and when the inspiration of the conflict ceased, their high purposes collapsed, and they fell lower than the moral grade from which they were lifted temporarily by the stimulation of a transient enthusiasm.

Others were not inspired by the war even. They were our profiteers, who, like vultures, feasted and fattened by feeding on both public and private interests while the attention of others was directed to nobler things. These were they who acquired habits of corruption which they were too weak to break off when peace came. They became, if anything, more bold in their thieving and more shameless in their villainy.

There were yet others who in a period of inflation became addicted to the wildest extravagance, and who now continue their efforts to indulge such wastefulness. To gratify their pampered appetites and satisfy their worldly vanity requires an amount of money which they do not possess and cannot earn. Hence some of them incur hopeless indebtedness and some fall to stealing.

To remedy such conditions nothing less than a great revival of religion will avail.

The gods of greed and pleasure must be dethroned and the God of heaven enthroned in the hearts of the people. They have been deifying their lusts and crucifying the Lord, and now the whole current of their natures must be reversed by the supernatural power of the regenerating Holy Spirit.

Shallow and spasmodic reformation will not suffice to meet the needs of the hour. Superficial treatment of outward symptoms will irritate far more than it will cleanse the evil away. The life of the people calls for constitutional rather than cutaneous remedies. Social salves cannot take the place of divine salvation of the souls of men.

In fact, porous-plaster reformers have paraded their worthless nostrums long enough. The people must turn away from these sociological quacks, and go for healing to the Great Physician.

Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, put the case well when he said recently: "After the experience of the past five years people are coming to the opinion that the only salvation of the world lies in a return to old-time religion." A large body of evangelical Christians assembled in Germany a few weeks ago, sounded the same true note. The old religion alone reveals saving power.

The religion that was true and necessary yesterday is true and necessary to-day, and will be true and necessary to-morrow. The saints of former generations did not follow cunningly devised fables. Our fathers were not fools, and the men who seek now to substitute rationalistic speculations for "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints" are as conceited as they are back-slidden.

Men of their sort have never brought deliverance to men and nations in periods of darkness and despair. With all their prating of progress, it is simply the truth that they have always and everywhere led backward the people who have heeded their misleading cries.

When has a Martin Luther, a John Knox, a John Wesley or a Jonathan Edwards risen from their ranks?

Isaac Taylor said of the leadership of just such men that when Wesley appeared "the people of England had lapsed into heathenism or a state hardly to be distinguished from it."

In our own times we have seen the religious life of Luther's Germany blighted and blasted by the same sort of rationalistic leaders, and now a large company of the most devout and wise Christian men in that land of disaster and distress are calling the German people to return to God as the only remedy for all their woes.

Why then should we admire and imbibe the diluted Christianity which has cursed the people of Germany, enfeebled their faith, and wrought their ruin?

We want not a religion that has been watered down by infusions of rationalism. Such Christianity cannot answer the imperative needs of our imperiled civilization.

A great Christ, whose redeeming grace is preached with unfaltering confidence, is required to master and overthrow the monstrous forces of evil in our day. Insatiable lust, armed with incalculable millions of money, cannot be conquered by a babyish type of theological sentimentality. We need a great salvation.

The present is no time for preachers to be reducing the stature of our Divine Redeemer by denying his Virgin Birth and dissolving the body of his resurrection glory into a mere mist. It is no time to disperse the angelic host which gladdened the hearts of the Shepherds of Bethlehem with the seraphic strains of their heavenly anthem. It is no time to seek to obscure with clouds of murky criticism the beams of the star by which the wise men of the East were guided to the manger where was lying the new-born King, at whose feet they poured out their treasures of gold and frank-incense and myrrh. When the whole earth is filled with Rachels weeping for their children and refusing to be comforted because they are not, and when in all the crowded cemeteries of the world millions of disconsolate Marys are crying, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him," it is no time to order away as intruding spectres of superstition the angels of the resurrection.

It is rather a time when each and all should with Thomas cast away our doubts and fall at his feet in adoring love, crying in joyous confidence, "My Lord and my God!"

Let us have done with rationalistic charlatans and charlantry and embrace the divine Christ "whom the glorious company of the Apostles, the goodly fellowship of the Prophets and the noble army of the Martyrs praise; whom the Holy Church throughout the whole world doth acknowledge; who is the King of glory, the Everlasting Son of the Father."

Coming to him a weary world shall find rest for its soul, even the peace of God passing all understanding. There is no relief for it except in him.

"Other refuge have we none."

A TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Doctor Carley: Here we are out on the Mediterranean finishing the second week of continuous going over the wastes of blue. We have still more than a week until we leave the ship. To me there is a monotony of travel which all the thrill of the sea cannot relieve. Despite the fine and congenial fellowship of our party, the morning brings to one a sort of "and must we see each other's face."

Regardless of what may be the individual reaction to it, ocean travel supplies many novel experiences for any thorough-going American. For instance, one faces at the table a battery of wine bottles, and women smoking cigarettes with a nonchalance not altogether characteristic of the same practice in America. On the decks of Mediterranean liners one's ears are assailed by a pandemonium of gabble that would have put to shame the closing phase of the builders at Babel. For there are Zionist pilgrims on their way to Palestine, Greeks returning to the classic isles, Syrians, Persians, Egyptians, and other crusaders for whom we have not been able to find a solution. When you add to all this the fact that the ship has a French crew from stem to stern, you can begin to understand that an American with a single-track speech would be completely marooned. But we have been able to get plenty to eat, and we have been saved the humiliation of knowing the polyglot expressions of the barbarians about us.

We went ashore twice in the Azores and also at Lisbon, Portugal. Both in the Azores and at Lisbon there are places of local and historical interest. But there were several things of special interest to me. First was the native's repudiation of his own money, and his insistence upon being paid in American money. One of the bills used in the Azores is the 5 reis, and according to our calculations it would take 64 of these bills to make a penny. And of the 10 centimes bill, used in the Azores and Portugal, it takes three of them to make a penny. Even the beggars seemed to be offended when they were offered one of these pieces of money. I imagine that if Mark Twain's man Blucher had received his bill for the dinner in 1921 he would not have survived to tell the story.

Another matter of interest is the very marked contrast in the social and economic condition of the people. There seems to be no well defined middle class. One sees on every hand the stately mansions of the rich, while he hears the insistent and unceasing trade cries of the poor. It is inconceivable that the primitive customs and methods which prevail in Portugal should have survived to this day. The very street life of Lisbon presents a hopeless combination of ignorance, indolence, and primitiveness.

The religious life of Portugal appears to be, as one would expect, on a parity with the social and economic condition. We were in the Azores on a religious holiday and in Portugal on Sunday, and in both the stately Catholic cathedral and the Protestant chapel the altars seemed to be quite deserted. And even those who were there, with a single exception, were of the peasant class. We are in no wise disposed to discredit the religious experience of even the humblest soul; but one cannot help feeling discouragement for a people who have had centuries of contact with Christian ideals and with such little result. So much for Portugal.

Passing into the Mediterranean we saw the "Pillars of Hercules" on one side and Gibraltar on the other. We looked for the insurance sign, but it wasn't there. Neither was there much in the present appearance of the fortress to anchor one's faith in the business which uses it as a symbol of its dependableness. We doubt if Gibraltar could stand very long against our modern high explosives. But looking to the "Pillars of Hercules" on the African side, we could but see in these grim but undefended heights monuments to Livingstone and Stanley, who, without sword or musket, established defenses in the very heart of the "Dark Continent," against which "the gates of hell shall not prevail."

THE CASE FOR PROHIBITION.

By George Cleaton Wilding.

There are so many assaults made on prohibition, from so many angles, that it may be worth while to take a look at some of them. It is asserted, over and over, by editorials and contributions in the columns of our daily papers, that the Eighteenth Amendment was "put over" on the American people by a few long-haired fanatics, in a sudden spasm, a bit of hasty, hysterical sentiment, under the excitement of the World War.

How about the facts in the case? Could anything be further from the truth on every count? There has been no haste. The movement toward prohibition has been slow and gradual, step by step. Its advocates considered this creeping progress tedious and often discouraging. The first prohibition amendment was offered in the United States Congress by Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, more than fifty years ago. For a half century we kept pegging away. First, local option by towns, then by counties; after this, State prohibition; then, at last, the national amendment. But before this final and complete triumph, 33 States had adopted amendments, 25 by an unhampered, free vote of the people, and 8 by vote of the Legislatures, which had been elected largely on this issue. A "few fanatics" could not "put over" such a radical step. A great nation does not change its constitution in a hasty, feverish manner. And this Eighteenth Amendment was adopted in a perfectly legal manner, 45 of the 48 States voting for it. Nearly everything connected with this amendment, all of the preliminaries, were completed before we entered into the war, and its victory was already assured before a soldier crossed to France. It was a great blessing to our troops; and leading Englishmen now admit that similar action would have greatly protected and helped their soldiers.

It is claimed that "temperance" would have been a better solution of the saloon problem than prohibition. What a misty word is temperance! It does not mean the same thing to any two people. To one it means total abstinence; to another anything short of a dozen drinks a day. It looks to me as if we have tried temperance movements pretty thoroughly. We had the days of Father Matthew Societies, Good Templar, and Sons of Temperance Lodges, and the so-called emotional Murphy Movement. Did they halt, hamper or in any wise cripple the saloon? Not noticeably. This wicked old institution, unhindered, went roaring along.

A daily paper editorial recently asserted that a steady progress was going on, and if we had kept our hands off, the saloon evil would have worked its own cure. Had anybody noticed this wonder-worker in operation? The license system in our country is almost 200 years old; and, up to a few years ago, the amount of liquor consumed, in bulk and in the ratio per capita, has been steadily increasing. At this rate of improvement the saloon would have been in full blast when the millennium came marching in. No, reforms do not come about in that manner. Neither slavery nor Mormonism would have cured themselves. A little prodding from outside greatly hastens results. Dr. Parkhurst once truly said: "'The wicked flee when no man pursueth,' but he makes better time when you get after him with a sharp stick." This has been especially true of that hoary old evil, the saloon.

Our friends, the enemy, have given up all hopes of repealing this amendment. It is too big a job to undertake, and would take too long a time to bring it about. Noise and bluster would not accomplish it. So they have taken another tack. Their idea is to cripple it, break its backbone, by bleeding to death the Volstead law, the enabling, enforcement act. Leave the amendment stand, but have no strong act left for its enforcement. Of course this would practically make the amendment null and void, a dead letter on our statute books.

Their way of bringing this about would be accomplished by having Congress legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and wine. The idea is that the present bunch of law-breakers would be loyal citizens if there were no law to break, in so far as their beer and wine were concerned. The past has demonstrated that the more leeway you give criminals, the more brazen and defiant they become. In the old saloon days they were allowed a good deal of indulgence. Did they obey the law? In many States the saloons had nothing but a beer license, and yet nearly all of them sold the heavier liquors. The truth is that about 90 per cent of the stuff sold in the legalized saloons was beer.

To legalize the sale of wine and beer simply means the return of the saloon. There must be some place fixed for its sale. That place, call it what you may, practically becomes a saloon, and it will be as law-breaking as was the old saloon. Soon it will become as intolerant and overbearing as in the days of yore, when it ruled our cities with a "high hand and an outstretched arm." It will again become a dictator in politics, write platforms, nominate candidates, plump a solid and dangerous vote, and rule the roost once more. The fact is, we should be back where we were fifty years ago, and have that long, hard battle to fight all over again. Can we afford to take this dreadful risk? There is no middle ground. It is either prohibition or the saloon. We have tried everything else. Which do you choose?

Other compromisers are urging us to compromise on the Quebec plan of State control, and management of the sale. We tried that out in the Carolinas. It is "weighed in the balance and found wanting." We know to our sorrow how deceptive is that alluring cry of big returns from license fees. It takes out of the State treasury much more than it puts in. And, after all, it is the patrons of the saloon who pay these license fees, not the saloon. And the end is not yet, up in our northern neighbor. Reliable witnesses certify that they saw drunken men on the streets of Montreal recently as they used to be witnessed on the streets of our cities in the days of the old saloon. The only good saloon is a dead saloon. We take no chances. We already have the best thing possible. Let us stick to it through thick and thin. It will grow better every day. "The darkest hour is just before dawn!"

Loud complaints are being made about the lawlessness of the bootleggers, and the debauchery and death that follow in their trail. The reckless assertion is made that these orgies are worse than anything in the past; and, if we can't enforce this law we would better modify it, and they incline to the view a very welcome view to many of them that it cannot be enforced. It might be well to consider that if there were no patrons of these greedy bootleggers, there would be no bootleggers. How much better are the patrons of these foreign, alien bootleggers than the bootleggers themselves? And, after all, is not the Eighteenth Amendment about as well enforced as the laws against theft, robbery, burglary and murder? Would we repeal these wholesome laws because they are not enforced?

Have our wet friends forgotten the terrible past, when 10,000 distilleries and breweries and 200,000 saloons ran wide open, day and night, with their debaucheries, brawls, robberies and murders going on almost undisturbed? We had become so used to this dreadful state of affairs that we became sodden, and paid but little attention to it all. Our daily papers made but slight note of this saloon output; it was a matter of common occurrence; was not news. Our city policemen made but few arrests, sometimes, indeed, good-naturedly steered homeward easy-going drunken men.

Now this law is on trial, and violations are keenly noted; it is now news. We are under prohibition, and the daily press seems determined to show us that it is not enforced, and that it can't be. The news is not only published; it gets on the front page and demands black headlines. There is a difference, you see. Let us pray for the conversion of the daily papers.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT NOTES.

The joint quarterly conference of the New Orleans churches, held at First Church on July 10, was well attended and helpful. The reports of pastors showed that nearly five-hundred members have been added to our churches in the city since Conference. An interesting and inspiring incident was the recommendation of three young men for license to preach, one each from Carrollton, Parker Memorial, and St. Mark's.

The Union Epworth League for July, which met at Rayne Memorial on July 8, was remarkably well attended, and showed that the young people are enthusiastic and are making progress in their work. A steamboat picnic is planned for July 31.

The Parker Memorial Church has just completed extensive repairs and improvements on their church. Brother Lee reports good congregations and an accession of more than fifty members since Conference.

* * *

Rev. B. C. Taylor, who is to take his A. M. and B. D. degrees at Southern Methodist University next year, is filling acceptably the pulpit at Rayne Memorial during the absence of Dr. Duren, who is touring the Holy Land. He reports good congregations for the summer season.

The pulpit at McDonoghville is being filled by various preachers during the absence of the pastor, Rev. F. B. Hill, in Great Britain. Besides the presiding elder, Revs. J. G. Snelling, R. H. Harper, H. H. Ahrens, E. N. Evans, W. G. Evans, J. W. Lockhart, J. L. Williams, and others, including several laymen, have served from time to time.

The Daily Vacation Bible School at First Church, in which several of our Sunday schools co-operated, was very successful in its work. The workers were all volunteers and did faithful and excellent service. The school at St. Mark's reported an enrollment of 232 on the second day, and was crowding the place as well as taxing the strength of all workers. Rev. J. A. Alford, the pastor, regards this as a great opportunity to reach the people of that section. The Lonisiana Avenue Church, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. G. Snelling, is also planning a similar school.

At Wesley House, in Houma, a successful Vacation Bible School has recently closed, and we understand that the Morgan City church is also having one. This work is growing in the district from year to year.

The revival season is in full swing in the out-of-town section of the district. Rev. A. J. Martin reports a good revival at Port Barre, in which he was assisted by Brother Sanden, of De Ridder, resulting in twenty-four accessions.

Rev. Martin Hebert is being assisted in his evangelistic work by Rev. A. M. Serex, who has just completed his course at Emory University. His help in singing and otherwise is very effective. He is also preparing some valuable literature in French for our work. After holding successful meetings at Bayou Blue and Eagle Island, which have already been reported, these workers are now in a meeting at White Chapel with Rev. J. A. Knight.

Rev. A. D. Martin reports the reception of 27 members recently, who came in during several brief meetings of a few days each, held in homes along Bayou Lafourche and Bayou des Allemands. All of these, practically, are French people.

The presiding elder recently, in company with the pastor, Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux, made a "foreign trip." Taking the mailboat at Abbeville at 10 a. m., we spent the day along the winding Bayou Vermilion, the Intercoastal canal, and the wide reaches of White Lake, arriving at 7 p. m. at Pecan Island. Congregations of more than a hundred people, out of a population of 300 or 400 on the island, attended services. One subscription was taken for the Advocate, a beginning was made toward organizing a League, and three sermons were preached and a quarterly conference held. Five days were occupied with the trip, which was very interesting.

Rev. E. V. Duplantis, of Berwick, was married on June 25 in the Bunkie church, the presiding elder officiating, to Miss Dorise Kelly, of the White Chapel neighborhood. They will shortly be at home in Berwick. May the Divine blessing be on their union.

CENTENARY HONOR ROLL, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following is the list of churches that are on the Honor Roll in the Mississippi Conference, having paid 70% or more of their pledge, some having paid 80%, some having paid 90%, and some having paid out in full. There are several churches that could pay out if just a little effort was made, as they lack only a very small amount of having paid their entire pledge. Which of the churches of this number will be first to pay out?

Churches Paid in Full.

Old Crystal Springs, Sandy Hook, Brookhaven District; Andrew's Chapel, Oakvale, Jackson District; Hiwanee and Long Branch, Meridiau, District; Logtown and Wesley Memorial, Seashore District; Carlisle, Oak Ridge, and Porter's Chapel, Vicksburg District.

Churches Paying 90% or More.

Fernwood, Brookhaven District; Harrisville, Jackson District; State Line (Bucatunna charge), Meridian District; Forest, Newton District; Glen Chapel, New Chapel, Shiloh, Seashore District; Bradley, Chapel, Holly Bluff, Midnight, and Mizpah, Vicksburg District.

Churches Paying 80% or More.

Magnolia, Meadville, Brookhaven District; Mozelle, Mount Olive, Pine Grove, and Vossburg, Hattiesburg District; Brandon, Galilee, Mount Carmel, Ridgeland, Jackson District; Fedora, Hebron, Lauderdale, Pleasant Ridge, Meridian District; Harperville, North Bend, Newton District; Columbia, Van Cleave, Lumberton, Seashore District; Port Gibson, Vicksburg District.

Churches Paying 70% or More.

Bethesda (Scotland), Brookhaven Church, Gallman, Osyka, Hinton, and Ovette, Hattiesburg District; Bolton, Brownsville, Capitol Street, Galloway Memorial, Edwards, Fannin, Flora, Soule's Chapel, and Thornton's Chapel, Jackson District; Bucatunna, Quitman, Sageville, Soule's Chapel, and Union Church, Meridian District; Conehatta, First Church (Laurel), Walnut Grove, Newton District; Bay St. Louis, and Lyman, Seashore District; Cane Ridge, Carpenter, Crawford Street, Liberty, Mayersville, Rolling Fork, Roxie, and Silver City, Vicksburg District.

I trust that in our summer campaign the workers, with your hearty co-operation, will add many churches to the Honor Roll. I am at your service to help bring this about.

Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Field Secretary-Treasurer.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

In the American school survey it was shown that it would take 3,000 million dollars to bring American schools up to top-notch efficiency in the matter of housing and equipment. This is shown by a government survey of the situation.

It is claimed there are a million children who are unable to attend school full time, on account of shortage in accommodations, and eight millions attending in obsolete buildings. How long can a Republic last with these conditions? We must wake up. The Republic needs intelligent citizens.

The religious condition of childhood is still more appalling. All the more need for Christian colleges. Our Christian people must voluntarily support their church schools. "All at it, and at it all the time," must be our cry.

Religious wars have always been on hand, not because of too much religion, but for lack of it. Here in America the question is bobbing up in every sort of convention. It is a rather peaceful war, compared with others, but it is fast coming to be very bitter. No telling what the end will be.

The universal study of the Bible is needed. Knowledge will bring light and power. Hence, Christian Education must be pushed to the front. It will pave the way to permanent peace.

Our Christian colleges are the salt of the educational world. They are like the city on the hill that cannot be hid. More and more is Christian Education coming into its own.

Our people are coming to see that their youth can only have Christian character as you put the warm evangelistic atmosphere about our colleges. In the same way, will they have to realize that their money must be put into these institutions for equipment in order that the very best results may be obtained in our church schools.

During the summer months is a good time to pay up your Christian Education pledge. Hunt up your collector and pay your pledge in full, if possible. Some are successfully paying by the month and in this way making headway in reducing the pledge, and at the same time keeping it where it can more easily be paid out. We are counting on our Methodist people paying all their pledges.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conference Secretary of Education.

SINCERITY AND TRUTH.

By Rev. J. E. Godbey, D.D.

Sincerity is love of truth. One is not sincere who does not desire to know the truth. Neither is he sincere who does not obey the truth, so far as he knows it. Sincerity fulfills all known duty. It is integrity, and the limit of responsibility. In the performance of duty no one can go beyond his knowledge of duty. No man is sincere who does not live as he believes, morally—putting his creed into his deed.

We cannot say to any one, "You should not make conscience your guide"; you should not always do what you believe to be right," else what shall one do? By what rule should one guide one's conduct? Should a man ever do what he believes to be wrong?

You tell me that sincerity does not avail to save men, and that, in material things and temporal interests, a man, seeking welfare, health, happiness, may fall into ruin on what he thinks to be the right path. The analogy is defective. The illustration does not illustrate. Sincerity is not a mental, but a moral state. Conviction of truth is often wrong, but sincerity is always right, in itself considered. One should often think differently, but one should always be sincere. Sincerity is good purpose, not good judgment. Sincerity may be guided by wrong judgment—that does not destroy its moral quality. He who does me an injury in seeking to confer on me a benefit is still my friend, and I will hold him as such. Sincerity is moral principle and is not simply honest conviction about things, especially things involving no moral issues, such as the best way to promote temporal gain or comfort—the best way to preserve health, or to raise corn or potatoes.

Sincerity is a duty in all, and preserves its moral quality through all changes of judgment. The sincere seek to serve God. They use the talent given, and they attain salvation, though it be "as by fire"—all their works being burned up. Such condemnation and destruction of one's works is final and fatal in temporal spheres, but in spiritual things, sincerity obtains pardoning grace; for the Scriptures plainly teach that where little is given little is required; and, in the spiritual realm, they that sincerely seek, find.

Sincerity is not a term to be applied to mere mental conviction or obedience to conviction where no moral relations are involved. Conception of moral truth and duty relate us to God; for who can say, "This is moral truth, but it is not of God?" "This is duty but it is not God's will?" Sincerity is honesty of aim in sight of God.

But from whence does the value of sincerity arise? Its value is relative, and depends on the intrinsic worth of Truth which it seeks. Can the love of truth be of value if truth itself is valueless? Sincerity has its value solely in the intrinsic excellence of truth itself. The sincere man may be on the wrong path, but his sincerity is a promise of all good, for it is earnest seeking of the right path. It is docility under instruction. Only the sincere man can ever come to the knowledge of the truth. The sincere soul is in God's school. Go into the school and ask the teacher which pupil is dearest to her. She may point out one in the beginners' class rather than one in the graduating class; but she will point out the most docile. Docility becomes a pupil—a searcher after truth. It is docility, the desire to learn, that suits the relation of the pupil to the teacher. But teachableness has value in respect to that which is taught. So is sincerity related to truth.

Truth is the high and safe way, the satisfying food, the pearl of great price. He who is guided by it builds upon a rock. What he builds will abide. In truth he establishes a higher plane upon which coming generations will stand, and from which they will have clearer vision of God. He who has found the true path will never need to turn back—will never be disappointed.

There is a body of truth which the sincere are seeking and of which they are learning more and more. To be sincere, to be docile pupils, is the duty of all. The love of truth demands that we love and highly esteem all seekers after truth, for it is truth that at last must make us free. Truth is the good we seek, sincerity the path by which we seek it. The seed is fruitful that is received in an honest heart. All promises are to sincere seekers.

OPPOSED TO UNIFICATION.

I have kept silent on the subject of unification till now, and have been reading and studying each article written on the subject; but now I must speak, though only a few sentences.

There are several reasons why I am opposed to the uniting of the two churches.

In the first place, Jurisdiction No. 1 fixes a boundary line around Jurisdiction No. 2 under the present plan; leaving the Church South without any room for expansion whatsoever. We must therefore prune our grapevine so it will not retard the growth of the surrounding crop, or cross the boundary line.

In the next place, I am opposed to the present plan because it gives to the Negro all the rights and privileges of our Conferences, for in the sixth article, "The bishops of the two churches as at present constituted shall be the bishops of the united church without further action," thus taking in the two Negro bishops of the Northern Church. The colored membership of the Northern Church has been granted an equal standing with all other members on all connectional boards.

This action was taken at the last General Conference of the Northern Church; previously he had been only a ward of that church, but in order to insure his vote for the present plan of unification he was granted this new concession. This little bit of news has recently come into my hands, through a member of the Northern Church, a preacher, which bit of news bids us beware, and think twice before we leap.

I note that one writer of our church asks the question, "Shall we take what we can get?" and answers, "Yes, provided the cost is not too great."

The cost means, compromise: compromise not of principle, but of preference. It seems to me that it would be compromise of principle, too, when we yield to something which brings the Negro on an equal standing in our Conferences, after we have held out these years against it.

It is not sectional prejudice, as the writer seems to think, but it is a question of justice and right, of principle and superiority.

The same writer gives some principles by which we must stand, as follows: "The unquestioned and unquestionable constitutional guarantee of rights of the minority." Yes; and what are the rights of the minority? In the first place, to remain as we are to-day and our rights will be unquestioned. In the next place, if the two churches unite, give us an equal showing and that guarantee of unquestioned and unquestionable rights, and the control of property; and the preservation of the integrity of social life, hold to our doctrinal standards, our articles of religion, and general rules.

There seems to be a spirit of inconsistency on the part of the Northern Church—they wanted to depose Bishop Andrew because he owned a slave; and yet, they hold on to the Negro.

The bone of contention in Bishop Andrew's case seemed to be expediency, that it was "expedient" to depose him, not so much from any great harm that might result from a slaveholder, but it was "expedient" that he be deposed.

Now if it was expedient that he be deposed, it is just as "expedient" for our Northern brethren to cut loose from their Negro constituents, and if not willing to set them aside "under their own vine and fig tree," then it is just as "expedient" for the Church South to remain as it is to-day. We have prospered under the guiding hand of Providence, and I believe it was the will of the Almighty God that the separation took place, and I furthermore believe it is his will that we remain so to-day. We are on fraternal relations with our Northern brethren, we love them and wish for them great prosperity; and we would not say or do anything that would cause any friction between the two great churches; but we have had a slap in the face from the very beginning when they rejected Dr. Pierce as a fraternal delegate from our Conference in 1848. It seems to me that we have disregarded the final and parting message of Dr. Pierce to that General Conference: that if the proposition of fraternal relations was ever renewed, it must be by the Church North, and if ever made on the plan of separation, as adopted by the General Conference of 1848, the Church South would cordially entertain the proposition.

Yes, I said disregarded; we were compelled to cut loose, and then after years of prosperity come back and knock at the door of the Northern Church and say, "We are heartily sorry that we have been naughty children; won't you take us back?" This reminds me of the story that was told of a tramp, who approached a house and said to the lady, "Will you please give me a drink of water, I am so hungry, I don't know where I am going to spend the night."

I do not believe the time is ripe for uniting of the two great churches. It is going to hurt the church. We will lose more just now than we will gain. I fear that we will relinquish our rights to our property, which our people have worked hard for; therefore I am unwilling, nor am I ready to walk up and sacrifice all this on the altar of the Northern Church.

When the time comes that we will have equal rights and an equal representation in our Conferences, and the Negro is left out, and the Northern Church will meet us half way, and all, both North and South, will lay all on the altar of consecration, and there will be no gobbling up of property by either side, but will consecrate all to the service of God; then I would be willing, if it was God's will, to join hands with my Northern brethren and sing that blessed old hymn, "Blest be the Tie."

Brethren, "my heart's desire and prayer to God is that both churches be saved."

DR. BRISCOE CARTER APPOINTED CENTENARY SECRETARY FOR LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Owing to the heavy burdens incident to collecting and adjusting the Centenary pledge in the Alabama Conference, it has been deemed advisable to request Rev. O. S. Welch, D.D., to give his entire time to the Alabama Conference. In view of this, Bishop Hay has appointed Rev. Briscoe Carter, D.D., as Centenary Secretary for the Louisiana Conference.

Dr. Welch has been cordially received by the presiding elders and pastors of the Louisiana Conference, and has rendered very efficient and effective service.

Dr. Carter will announce to the preachers of the Louisiana Conference at his earliest possible convenience the place of his secretarial headquarters.

W. G. CRAM, Directing Secretary.

Referring to the above: I have consented to undertake this work, relying upon the co-operation of all the pastors and treasurers of the Conference. We made these pledges to further advance the kingdom, and upon them the church has built a program of extension that is honorable to God and honorable to us.

With the same spirit that inspired the pledges let us go forward to their redemption for the great cause.

For the present, address all correspondence relative to the Centenary to me, care M. and P. Park, Pinkie, La.

BRISCOE CARTER.

LAKE ARTHUR CAMP MEETING.

Kindly announce through the columns of the Advocate that the Lake Arthur camp meeting, Lake Arthur, La., will be held Aug. 21-31, with Rev. Benjamin L. Sutherland, of Hollywood, Calif., formerly of the Mississippi Conference, evangelist, as preacher, assisted by W. B. Yates, leader in song.

Very truly yours,

J. W. FONTENOT.

NOTICE.

The Appropriations Committee of the Board of Church Extension will meet at the Board of Church Extension building, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky., Aug. 13, at 9:30 a. m.

T. D. ELLIS, Secretary.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.

The Cleveland, Miss., Holiness Camp Meeting will be held Aug. 7-17. Rev. R. H. M. Watson, of Meridian, Miss., district superintendent of the Nazarene church in Mississippi, and Rev. L. J. Foreman, pastor of the Nazarene church at Davis' Chapel, near Cleveland, will do the preaching.

This camp is undenominational, and has been held annually for more than twenty years, and has been the means of helping many souls to Christ. The large tabernacle is situated in a beautiful shady grove, with plenty of pure water. A hearty welcome awaits all who come in the right spirit.

Pray for this meeting.

MRS. M. J. BEEVERS, Secretary.

Cleveland, Miss.

TO EVANGELISTS OR PASTORS.

Mr. Harmon Lee Smith, a member of my church and a student at the University of Mississippi, will have time to assist in revival meetings as choir leader from August 10 to September 14. He has led the song service in two meetings for me in a very satisfactory manner. Any one interested may write him at Ellisville. J. B. CAIN.

Ellisville, Miss.

PIPE ORGAN FOR SALE.

If any church desires to purchase a two-manual pipe organ at a bargain, they may write Dr. W. A. Borum pastor First Baptist Church, Natchez, Miss.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

SIT STEADY IN THE BOAT AND KEEP ON PULLING AHEAD.

We are divided in our opinions concerning unification, but united in the conviction that our Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment must succeed in full measure or its failure will shame us throughout the succeeding generations. If unification is not decided upon, the necessity for adequate Superannuate Endowment will continue to urge its claim with even greater emphasis. On the other hand, if the two churches unite under the plan, the Southern Jurisdiction will continue to function for many years practically as before, and superannuated preachers of our Jurisdiction will be dependent solely upon the support provided for them by our Jurisdiction alone. And if the day should ever come that unification should develop into union, we could approach such a state in better conscience with $10,000,000 Superannuate Endowment to our credit to match the $25,000,000 of such endowment to the credit of our sister Methodism.

In the light of the above, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, should throw herself with greater abandon than ever into the wonderful movement now in progress in behalf of the Forgotten Man. Let us not be misled into indifference by any influence which threatens our morale on this subject. So far the response to the great cause has been such as to give promise of a notable achievement. May the good work go on unhindered until we have completely removed the stain on our banners for neglecting those preachers who were used up in making us what we are.

GOING ON TO PERFECTION.

The plan of the Special Effort required the quarterly conference of each charge to approve a definite quota to be raised in five years for the cause. There are approximately 6,500 charges in the whole church. To date, 6,213 charges have sent to the Board of Finance the Pink Leaf Report showing the quotas assumed by the quarterly conferences. The total amount thus officially approved to be raised in five years is already in excess of $10,000,000.

Concerning the charges which have not sent in the Pink Leaf Report, 115 of these are in the Baltimore Conference, which was not held until April, and has not had sufficient time to complete the work in the quarterly conferences. This leaves but 172 other charges in the remainder of the whole church that have not sent in this report, and these delinquent charges on this matter are located with respect to the Annual Conferences as follows: Arizona, 11; Central Texas, 4; East Oklahoma, 6; Holston, 6; Kentucky, 1; Little Rock, 4; Louisiana, 2; Mississippi, 2; New Mexico, 7; North Alabama, 4; North Arkansas, 9; North Carolina, 9; North Georgia, 2; North Mississippi, 4; North Texas, 8; Northwest, 1; Northwest Texas, 4; Pacific, 9; South Georgia, 13; Texas, 53; Virginia, 7; West Oklahoma, 9; West Texas, 3; Western North Carolina, 3.

The following Annual Conferences are 100% on the Pink Leaf Report: Alabama, Denver, Florida, Illinois, Louisville, Memphis, Missouri, St. Louis, South Carolina, Southwest Missouri, Tennessee, Upper South Carolina, Western Virginia.

The Episcopal District of Bishop W. F. McMurry, President of the Board, is 100%. The Episcopal District of Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, member of the Board, lacks but one report of being 100%.

EXPENSE OF THE MOVEMENT.

The total expense of the Special Effort from May 1, 1923, to March 31, 1924, was $141,070.38. Of this total amount $83,157.36 was spent for printing and general publicity; $23,994.09 for publicity in the Conference organs; $12,315.39 for postage; $6,603.93 for express; $2,953.11 for office equipment; $2,388.60 for traveling expenses; $2,079.91 for office supplies; $2,023.50 for clerical help; $1,885.38 for special service; $1,795.84 for secular press publicity; $500 for office rent; $585.73 expense of committee meetings; $233.91 for wire service; $110.91 for office sundries; $438.72 for interest on money borrowed for expenses.

When it is remembered that by far the largest amount of expense for this movement is included in the first year, the above showing is remarkable. The amount necessary for expenses in succeeding years of the Special Effort will be greatly reduced, as it is not expected to send out literature to the whole church in succeeding years as was done the first year. It is the aim and expectancy to bring the total expense of the movement for the five years within $350,000, which would make an average expenditure per year of $70,000. Can the church ask more of the Board of Finance which is directing a movement looking to collect withiu the period stated a total of $10,000,000?

INVESTMENT OF THE MONEY.

Just as rapidly as money is received from the Annual Conferences, it is invested in first class securities. The most careful attention is given by the Executive Committee in making these investments. A strict policy of conservation is followed in this matter. While it is the aim of the committee to secure as high a rate of interest as possible, yet it is demanded that the safety of the loan must have first attention.

In this connection it is pleasing to state that after six years of operation, the Board does not have on its books a single foreclosed loan. Furthermore, there is not a single investment about which the committee is troubled. The interest on all investments is collected promptly, so much so that for four years in succession the Board has come to the end of the fiscal year with every interest account paid. What financial institution to-day can make a better showing?

The money now being paid to the Board of Finance for Superannuate Endowment is invested in all sections of the territory covered by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. There is scarcely a State in our entire connection which is not in some way receiving the benefit of the investments the Board of Finance is making of the Superannuate Endowment Fund.

WHY THE MOVEMENT IS SUCCEEDING.

The Special Effort in behalf of the Forgotten Man is forging ahead because those who are interested in its success are giving such faithful service to push it along. The movement is without special secretaries to guide it in the various Annual Conferences. It depends solely upon the fidelity of every preacher and lay member.

The bishops, without exception, have done everything in their power to help the movement. The presiding elders have given a most noteworthy co-operation in every instance, so much so that it is amazing to see what they have accomplished. Practically all of the pastors have done their duty to date and continue with enthusiasm to carry on. The Special Effort Committees of the charges are functioning effectively and the result of their earnest work is plainly manifest in the returns. The church papers and the secular press have given valuable assistance, and preachers serving in connectional positions and schools, etc., have not failed to take a practical interest in the success of this work. The movement is succeeding because all of us are working for it.

WE CANNOT FAIL IF WE DO NOT QUIT.

What will be the final outcome of the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment? It all depends upon you and me. If we are big enough, strong enough, and determined enough, to go on with this thing as we have started, undoubtedly the $10,000,000 will be raised. On the other hand, if we let up in our loyalty to the cause, or in our enthusiastic application of the plan, or in our disposition to carry through, the movement will fail in proportion to our letting up. We must not quit. We must go on and on and on—to complete victory.

The following additional charges have paid one-fifth or more on their total quotas:

McKendree (Nashville), Tennessee, Nashville, Rev. L. P. Sensabaugh, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,051; amount remitted, $2,131.70.

Santa Anna, Pacific, Los Angeles, Rev. Moffett Rhodes, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,060; amount remitted, $619.

St. Paul's (Louisville), Louisville, Louisville, Rev. R. W. Raaf, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,100; amount remitted, $432.

Mount Washington, Louisville, Elizabethtown, Rev. H. D. Ryan, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,140; amount remitted, $392.

St. Paul's (Orangeburg), South Carolina, Orangeburg, Rev. T. G. Herbert, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,320; amount remitted, $1,420.

Trinity (Savannah), South Georgia, Savannah, Rev. Silas Johnson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,100; amount remitted, $2,000.

Centre, North Alabama, Gadsden, Rev. C. C. Godby, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,055; amount remitted, $411.

The Home Circle

ELMER'S LESSON.

Having five children and the house and garden and hens to look after, mother was busy from morning till night.

Of course the children helped and were as good as they knew how to be—that is, all of them except Elmer. Eleven-year-old Wesley and Ruth, who came next, worked or played happily all day long; so did the twins, Ardis and Alice, who were only six. Elmer worked or played too, but he didn't want to share things as children must do when there are many. He didn't want any one to pick a single flower in his little garden, no matter how many there were. With his playthings, too, he was selfish. None of the other children must touch his wagon or play with his toys or read his books or hardly even look at his kite.

Sometimes mother coaxed, sometimes she scolded, and Elmer became sulky and stubborn, and then things were very disagreeable.

One day Cousins Albert and Helen came for a visit. The boys began a game of ball outdoors while the girls played in the house.

"Oh," said Cousin Helen, "there are some tenpins! Let's have a game! Albert and I have lots of fun at home playing with his tenpins."

"But," said Ardis, "the tenpins belong to Elmer."

"Why, he's not using them now, and we can't hurt them," said Cousin Helen.

"Maybe Elmer won't mind if Cousin Helen wants to play," said Alice.

So the tenpins were set up, and the little girls played happily until Elmer came in for a drink. How cross he was about it!

"They are my things, and I don't want any one to touch them!" he shouted.

Cousin Helen was much astonished and a little frightened, and Ardis and Alice felt so bad that they cried.

Mother looked sorrowfully at her little boy. "Elmer," she said, "the tenpins are yours, and you may have them; hereafter none of us will touch one of your things."

Elmer, a little ashamed of himself, played with the tenpins, and the little girls went into the kitchen to help Ruth make candy.

By and by the other boys called Elmer out to finish the game of ball, and he went and stayed until mother called them in to supper.

Elmer was surprised to see his tenpins scattered round just as he had left them.

"Pick them up, Ruth," he said. "I'm too hungry."

"Ruth did want to pick them up," said mother, "but I told her that they were yours, and you didn't want any one to touch any of your things."

Elmer without a word crawled about under the table and chairs and picked up the tenpins.

That night while he was undressing for bed two buttons came off his trousers. He tossed the trousers down to mother. "Two buttons came off, mother," he called.

"Here are needle and thread, Elmer," she said. "Of course you will want to sew on your own buttons."

Elmer had an uncomfortable feeling, but he didn't say anything. He sewed the buttons on as well as he could, but the needle pricked him and the thread became tangled, and the next morning the buttons came off again because he hadn't sewed them on firm enough. Then he put pins where the buttons should have been, and they pricked him.

He wasn't happy all that day, though not one of the other children touched any of his things.

A queer lump came into his throat when mother gathered flowers from every garden except his and took them to a friend who was sick. She made a wonderful salad for supper and never even looked at his lettuce, which was so crisp and tender.

At night he found his corner of the big room that he shared with his brothers just as untidy as he had left it in the morning; his cot bed had not been made up, though the others were as plump and smooth as ever.

All that week no one except himself touched any of his things. He watched Wesley try to fasten a wheel on an old wagon so that Ardis and Alice might take their dolls for a ride. He wished they would ask to use his wagon; he even pushed it toward them, but they did not seem to notice.

Mother answered pleasantly whenever he asked anything, but the house didn't seem like home. All day long those pins pricked him; and when he crept into his tumbled bed at night, he was a most unhappy little fellow. He buried his face in his pillow and sobbed. Then a gentle voice asked, "What's the matter, Elmer?"

"Oh, mother," he cried, "I don't want any of my things! Please take them all and let me be your boy again."

So mother cuddled him and kissed him and then asked, "Don't you see, dear, that every one must give as well as take?"

"Oh, yes," he replied.

Then mother smoothed the tumbled bed and sewed the buttons on and made things beautiful and happy again.—The Youth's Companion.

HER COMPENSATION.

It was a bright, warm day that came to us in the weary heart of winter. I was walking through a little park, and paused to rest a moment on a rustic bench. Two women, sitting a few feet away, were engaged in earnest conversation. One was richly clad, and was evidently wealthy; the other one was less elaborately gowned, and bore evidence of sorrow. I could easily hear every word that was spoken, and, as I lingered there for a little while, these words reached my ears:

"But I cannot see"—the well-dressed woman speaking—"I cannot see where Christ has ever stood by you! You have always had a hard time! You have always been poor! You have always worked hard! I cannot remember when you were not stooping beneath some kind of a burden! Yet you are constantly talking about the kindness, goodness, and gentleness of Jesus! Well, where is your compensation? In what way has he helped you? When did he stand by you?" Her words were edged with steel.

"O, if I could only make you see!" said she of the faded dress. "He has bridged over a thousand rough places in my pathway! In moments of pain he has made my heart sing! When my baby died, I sorrowed not as the hopeless sorrow! In spite of poverty that sometimes pinched and hurt, he has filled my soul with richness and enabled me to say: 'I have all things, and abound.' Often from a sleepless pillow, in the deep, still hours of the night, I have heard his whispered voice of hope, comfort, and love! While he has not kept the hard things away, he has done something far greater—enabled me to meet and conquer them bravely and gladly! And in all the seeming dark and tragic things in my life, there is not one that has failed to leave a good thing for my soul! I feel so cleansed and purged, and the future is so wonderful and glorious!"

As I turned away, I glanced—not without awe—at the speaker. On her face was the glow and gleam of the morning. The other woman was weeping softly.

As I walked, my heart was full of gratitude for this unknown defender of the faith. I felt refreshed and strengthened for my task. I had heard a brave word of Christian testimony spoken by strange lips—but O, so well spoken!

I thought of one who in the old days said: "We glory in tribulations also!"

"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Yes, verily, and in the most unlooked for places!—Florida Baptist.

THE MISER'S HEADSTONE.

He strived and contrived to beat the band,
And every dollar that he could land,
He'd clinch it,
He'd pinch it.
He gathered in dollars for years and years,
Dollars and cents in stacks and tiers.
He'd hoard 'em,
He adored 'em.
He died with a fortune that was immense,
But he hadn't a soul worth thirty cents!
He'd pinched it,
He'd stinched it.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 312 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page, leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

cases—only sympathy; but we do not believe there is any good ground upon which a little more than 21 per cent of our undergraduates can explain their failure to do the work the church lays upon them within the time they are expected to do it—twelve months. It is not especially to the credit of any young preacher, whether he has been admitted under the two-thirds rule or in regular order, to fail to complete satisfactorily, year by year, his Conference course of study.

In this connection, we should like to remind the members of the first and second year classes that they will not have the privilege of voting upon the question of unification at the Conferences of 1925 unless they pass their examinations so as to be admitted into full connection by the time the vote is taken.

DECREASE OF LYNCHING.

It will be satifying to every friend of law and order to learn that the number of lynchings for the first six months of 1924 is the lowest for the first six months of any of the forty years during which the record has been kept. The figures for the first six months of the past four years are as follows: 1921, 36 lynchings; 1922, 30 lynchings; 1923, 15 lynchings; 1924, 5 lynchings. It is devoutly to be wished that this marks the beginning of the end, and that the time will soon be at hand when the blot of these illegal executions will forever be wiped from the pages of American history.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Hollingsworth, of Kilmichael, Miss., announce the birth of a son, Robert Thomas Hollingsworth, Jr., on June 24. Blessings upon the young man!

Rev. W. E. Thomas, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but now engaged in evangelistic work, assisted Rev. H. W. Jamieson in a good meeting at Pearl River, La., last week.

The Grenada (Miss.) Sentinel, of which Mr. O. F. Lawrence is the able editor, publishes in its issue of July 11 the complete plan of unification between the two great Methodist churches, with an editorial favoring its adoption.

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald celebrated its sixtieth anniversary by bringing out on July 3 a magnificent "Anniversary Edition," which reflected great credit upon both the editorial and the mechanical departments of the paper.

Rev. O. W. Bradley, of Alexandria, La., after visiting the General Conference at Chattanooga, continued his journey to New England, where he is becoming acquainted with the many places of historic interest in that section of the country.

Rev. W. H. Giles, of the Kurthwood charge Louisiana Conference, is having great success in his work. Two new churches have been organized, pastor's and presiding elder's salaries are paid in full to date, the quota for the Superannuate Endowment Fund has been subscribed and the money is in hand, and 75 members have been received since Conference.

Bishop W. F. McMurry has accepted the presidency of Central College, Fayette, Mo., to which he was unanimously elected by the board of trustees after the death of the lamented Paul H. Linn. This new work will not, of course, interfere with the performauce of any of his episcopal duties. Bishop McMurry is a great administrator, and the future of Central College is assured under his leadership.

At the joint quarterly conference of the New Orleans churches, held at First Methodist Church on the evening of July 10, three young men were recommended for license to preach, as follows: R. A. Cross, Jr., of Parker Memorial; Fred W. Campbell, of St. Mark's, and O. M. Johnson, of Carrollton Avenue. New Orleans is thus maintaining its notable record of furnishing an unusually large number of preachers to the church.

Rev. E. L. Shettles, a superannuate member of the Texas Conference, a native Mississippian, honored the Advocate office with a call this week. He was en route to Pontotoc, Miss., where he will renew the friendships of youth. Brother Shettles is the official representative of the Southern History Collection of the University of Texas, in which capacity he has been instrumental in adding to that collection a large amount of valuable material.

The July number of the Methodist Quarterly Review contains articles by Rev. N. G. Augustus, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Prof. A. H. Shannon, of Ocean Springs, Miss. The article by Brother Augustus deals with the Einstein theory of relativity, and it displays a degree of erudition that is simply amazing. The article by Prof. Shannon is a review of a recent book, "The Racial History of Man." We wish all our people, preachers especially, would read the Review.

Rev. L. L. Roberts, presiding elder of the Seashore District, Mississippi Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of this week. He gave an encouraging account of the work under his charge. He is especially delighted with the interest that is being shown in the approaching camp meeting on the Seashore Camp Ground. Inquiries are being received from various sections of Louisiana and Mississippi, and indications point to a great meeting this year. The dates, as previously announced, are August 8-15.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate will be found an announcement of the appointment of Dr. Briscoe Carter as Centenary Field Secretary for the Louisiana Conference, succeeding Dr. O. S. Welch, of the Alabama Conference, who had undertaken the work temporarily upon the resignation of Mr. Stephen S. Thomas. Dr. Welch rendered splendid service to the Centenary cause in Louisiana, but the demands of the work in his own Conference made it impracticable for him to continue the work in Louisiana. He won the respect and confidence of all our workers during his brief association with them. Dr. Carter is splendidly equipped to carry on successfully the work to which he has been appointed, and we bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of the pastors, Centenary treasures, and all the people as he enters his new field of labor.

In last week's Advocate we inadvertently stated that the North Mississippi delegation voted, three for, and seven against the plan of unification; we should have said that the vote was three for and five against. The vote of the delegations from our patronizing Conferences was as follows: Louisiana, clerical: F. N. Parker, R. H. Wynn, W. W. Holmes, Geo. S. Sexton, all for; lay: H. H. White, R. O. Randle, A. M. Mayo, W. S. Holmes, all for. Mississippi, clerical: M. L. Burton, I. W. Cooper, for; J. T. Leggett, Robert Selby, J. R. Jones, against; lay: W. M. Bule, J. B. Holland, for; M. M. Satterfield, W. "SHOOT THE WHOLE WORKS."

By Rev. Charles E. McLean.

In the language of certain of the disciples of Fortuna, the Roman Goddess of Chance and Good Luck, the above title phrase indicates one's willingness to rest one's right of ownership and enjoyment of all the wealth in sight upon the chance conjunction of certain numbers on a pair of spotted cubes as they end their career along a blanket or along upon the earth. So often does this phrase presage disaster that it is almost an axiom that the gambler always loses. If he should escape the loss of his money—a thing he seldom does—he loses the fine sensibility of stewardship and that respect that always should and always does accompany usefulness.

But we wish here to draw attention to the fact that the gambling spirit is no more evident—and possibly not nearly so dangerous—in the man who "carelessly shoots the whole works" against a few pieces of silver, than in those individuals who, scarcely realizing what they do, stake their destinies for eternity against a few years of shallow pleasure and depend for their chance of winning upon their ability to control their lives when the shadows of old age deepen, no matter what circumstances their latter years may bring. Wagers involving money are bad enough, but those dealing in souls and eternities are unspeakably vile. The basest presumption imaginable is that which would give the lie to the whole tenor of Divine Revelation by drinking to the full at the fountain of sin and trusting to luck, a supreme final effort, or to the heretofore rejected love of God to escape the penalty.

There is an incident in Scripture that we sometimes think of as the "Gambler's Feed-bag." We refer to the story of the thief on the cross. Though perhaps the story is given as an example of salvation in extremity for encouragement to those in like circumstances, it has been seized upon eagerly by the careless and venturesome as a toothsome morsel to nourish their fond hope that they, too, may fare as did the thief.

The story of the thief is unique in Scripture—at least we do not remember having seen a parallel case anywhere. And though, having no scholarly attainments, we cannot be critical, we venture to call attention to the fact that the only Gospel writer who records the conversion of the thief was hardly an eye-witness. The other writers know nothing of that feature of the incident recorded only by Luke. Of its authenticity we do not doubt, but we wish to suggest that it can never support the hopes of the careless. We say nothing of the difference in the opportunities for salvation in the experiences of the thief and

On Tuesday, May 27, Millsaps College awarded Joint Certificates in Religious Education to the five young men mentioned above.

Some years ago an agreement was reached between the General Board of Education and the General Sunday School Board that a standard course in Religions Education be outlined for the colleges of the church. This course was to serve the purpose of providing a vocational and prevocational preparation in this subject, looking to the demand now being felt by the church for workers to man its widening educational program. It was also provided that those students finishing twelve year-hours of work stipulated by this agreement be awarded a Joint Certificate in Religious Education representing the Boards and the college involved.

The courses stipulated are: Bible; Principles of Religious Education; History of Religious Education; Organization and Administration of Religious Education; The Curricula of Religious Education; The Christian Religion; Teaching the Christian Religion; Church History, and The Expansion of Christianity.

While this arrangement was being worked out by the two Boards, Mr. W. S. F. Tatum, of Hattiesburg, Miss., establisbed at Millsaps College "The Tatum Chair of Religious Education," making a gift of $100,000 to the college for this purpose.

Prof. C. A. Bowen, formerly connected with the Woman's College of Alabama, was elected Professor of Religious Education at Millsaps College in broad lines laid out by the church. In 1922 Prof. J. L. Ferguson was elected Associate Professor in this same chair, thus giving the department the services of two instructors. When Prof. Ferguson resigned to enter another field of work in 1923, Prof. Welborne Summers, of Emory University, was elected to fill his place. Fifteen courses are offered in this department. It is stated by the Directors of Training Work of the General Sunday School Board that the five young men mentioned above are the first to receive Joint Certificates awarded by the Boards and a college of the M. E. Church, South.

of our modern experts in procrastination. We simply ask, is the passage sufficiently authoritative and can it be warped to support so much deferment of obedience to God?

The case of the dying thief is the only one of its type on record, so far as we know, where the assurance of salvation amounts to certainty. Many have set sail for the other shore with their first profession of faith upon their dying lips, but only in his case have we the word from beyond that the voyager arrived safely. Many have tstified in the last hour that they were redeemed, but we had no voice from above to say that the dying one's faith was not a delusion. We know that Jesus is able to save to the uttermost, but only where men are able to trust him to the uttermost. We do not discredit the shouts of victory that have arisen from last hour salvation, but we do warn against any living man's attempting to duplicate those shouts.

It may be objected that death is enough of an acid test to lend assurance to deathbed redemption. In many cases this may be true, but not in all. In Scripture we are told of men who had complacent agreements with Death and Hell. We do not need to seek far to find men dying in sin with an abandonment that seems to mock death. But to whom else but Jesus may one look for salvation on his last day? The man who cannot swim may despise water as long as he walks the deck of a stately ship, but let catastrophe hurl him into the bosom of the deep and his attitude may swiftly change. He will clutch at a chip or a slender cord if either be near, in spite of the fact that they have no virtue to save him. Not many men who have ignored the dangers of sin in the day of prosperity will fail to clutch at the comforts of the Gospel in the day of calamity when the pit yawns suddenly beneath them. Not much else remains to be done. But with what nerves and in what frame of mind do they stretch out their hands toward the Savior? Do they seek deliverance from sin when their days of sin are over? Do they seek the favor and the love of God that is so necessary in life as in death? Or do they act because of that name-fear of everlasting woes, now that they can hear the key grating in the lock of the portals of death? Whatever course others may take, we will choose salvation in the days of our youth, when our senses are clear, our eyes bright, our vision undimmed, our hands strong, our natures hopeful and our capacities for faith undiminished. The test of faith will then be a life, and death will be rest, a sleep.

The Gospel offers strength and purity of character and eternal life with God. Against this is contrasted "the pleasures of sin for a season"—all that the world has to offer apart from its Maker. Will we denounce the world and lay hold on God or will we lay down our hope of a victorious life and the joys of eternity and "shoot the whole works" against the sordid enjoyment of sin and—as all gamblers do—Lose?

GOD WORKETH.

Ps. 127-1; Phil. 2:13.

By Mildred Tate Wells.

Except thou build, O Architect Supreme!
We labor all in vain
To reach the secret place—there to abide
In wondrous Love—and 'neath thy wings to hide.
Until we feel—thus resting by thy side—
That earthly loss a gain.

Except thou shape and mould, Potter Divine,
The Pattern we neglect;
And fail to transform to thy perfect will
Our lives; but thou art watching still,
To mould, to shape, with righteousness to fill,
That Christ we may reflect.

O Lord, thou art our Father! All-in-all!
Gladly may we submit,
To have thee work in us, to will and do
Of thy good pleasure, until, through and through,
For thy indwelling—Light and Love and Truth—
The temple is deemed fit.

At 12 o'clock, Sunday night, June 1, the earthly life of MRS. PIETY A. BALL forever ceased. She was 81 years, 6 months and 3 days old. She was the wife of the late John J. Ball, and leaves to mourn her loss, besides her family, a host of relatives and friends. "Aunt Piety," or "Grandmother Ball," as she was known, was a member of the Methodist church. Although she has gone from us, yet the influence of her Christian life lives on and on. She was always so patient, and through all her illness not one word of complaint was heard. For years she had been in poor health, and for seven months previous to her death was confined to her bed. For fifty-two days and nights loved ones watched over her, doing all in their power to relieve her suffering. But loving care could not stay the fatal moment. Her Master called, and her spirit winged its flight into that Eternal city. Grandmother's home was the preacher's home, and during her illness she was glad to have her pastor come and pray with her. It was hard to give her up, but we know from the life she lived and her last words that she was ready. She often said that Jesus was with her and everything was all right. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. O. Ware, after which her body was laid to rest in the home cemetery. Her departure has saddened our hearts, and we miss her so; but our loss is her gain. She is now waiting at the beautiful gateway of Heaven and beckoning her loved ones home.

Her granddaughter,
ETHEL WOODHOUSE.
Merrill, Miss.

Sunday evening, June 15, 1924, the Death Angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Sanders, of Oakland, Miss., and took away their darling baby girl, INEZ. After an illness of two weeks with typhoid fever, the Death Angel said, "enough." It was so sad to see her go—yet God knows best. Just sixteen short summers had she spent with us. It seems but yesterday since she was a tiny babe in mother's arms. She the pet of our home, and loved by all who knew her. She leaves father, mother, one brother, and two sisters, together with many relatives and friends, to mourn her going away. The children's tender Shepherd came and called her, and in his loving arms she went away. She is not dead, but only gone on to that home above, where she no longer needs our poor protection, and Christ himself doth rule. Fold her, O, Father, in thine arms, and let her henceforth be a messenger of love between our human hearts and thee. She has gone, yet her memory we cherish with love. Let us strive, then, to meet her in heaven above.

Her sister,
MRS. MATTIE SANDERS EVANS.
Amory, Miss.

MISS ISABELLE COTTRELL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Finley Cottrell, was born Feb. 8, 1903, and on the night of May 9, 1924, an angel of the Lord softly whispered, "Come," and her gentle spirit winged its way to the pearly gates of God. We can truthfully say, "If true Christianity consists in living for others rather than self, Bell has a high place among the saints in heaven." She professed Christ as her Savior, May 16, 1919, and united with the Methodist church. Everybody who met Bell seemed to love her. It was always a pleasure for her to help others. She had to suffer only a short while. We never saw a sweeter Christian spirit shown in any one than Bell. During her illness she bore all her sufferings so patiently, and without even a complaint. She would always meet one with a smile. She said: "If God sees best to call me home, I feel ready to go—he knows best in all things. His will he done, not mine." May God bless and keep those whom she loved so dearly, and may her life of self-sacrifice inspire others to higher living.

Her aunt,
MRS. CARL HOOVER.

Now You Can End Superfluous Hair Like I Did Mine

At Once And For All

Only a woman who has felt the horror and humiliation of a disfiguring hairy growth on the face, neck, arms and legs can possibly know what joy and happiness came over me when first I realized that at last all trace of superfluous hair had gone and my skin was clear, soft and smooth like that of a babe. And this after years of torture and disappointment with almost every depilatory, liquid, wax, paste, powder and other method, including razors, that I had ever heard of. Before I hit upon the simple, easy, harmless new way which has given me such amazing and lasting relief from my affliction, the ugly hairs always came back thicker and heavier than ever. When I confided to some of my friends how I had at last solved the age-old problem of getting rid of superfluous hair—at once and for all—they felt it would be selfish not to share my secret with others, so I have decided to explain exactly how I succeeded to any one interested ABSOLUTELY FREE if you will simply send me your name and address with a stamp for sealed reply.

WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Cables from Glasgow, Scotland, report that the World's Sunday School Convention had 4,500 registered delegates from forty countries. Lord Pentland was the chairmau.

The officers chosen for the quadrennium were: President, the Rev. W. C. Poole, minister of Christ Church, Loudon; vice presidents: Sir George Marks, of London; Colonel John A. Roxburgh, of Glasgow; Arthur M. Harris, of New York; the Rev. Carey Bonuar, of London; the Rev. Hiremachi Kozaki, of Tokyo; Prince Bernadotte, of Stockholm, and Herbert Dearsley, of New Zealand.

The honorary presidents chosen were: Jose L. F. Braga, of Rio de Janeiro; Russell Colgate, of New York; Bishop J. C. Hartzell, of Ohio; the Rev. K. Ibuka, of Tokyo; Seth Leet, of Montreal, and the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, of Philadelphia. Paul Sturtevaut, of New York, was elected treasurer, and the Rev. F. H. Saunders, of New York, was chosen recording secretary.

The convention committee decided to recommend Los Angeles as the place for the 1928 convention.

President Poole is an Australian Methodist minister who came to California about ten years ago and was pastor of Wesley Church, San Francisco. Later he was a field secretary of the World's Temperance Union, and in 1921 he was elected pastor of Christ Church, London, the independent congregation once served by Dr. Newman Hall. This church is conspicuous for having a band of stars and stripes cut in its stone spire.—Exchange.

MRS. YOUNG ENTHUSIASTIC

Cannot Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Enough. Sick Women Read This Letter

Charleston, S. C.—"I was completely run-down and not able to do my housework. I just dragged myself around and did not have energy enough to get up when I sat down. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in your books and learned about it. I got benefit from the very first bottle. I continued to take it for some time, and now I am doing all my own work, even washing and ironing, and never felt better in my life. I tell all my friends that the change in my health is due to but one thing and that is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I cannot praise it enough."—Mrs. ANNIE YOUNG, 16 Amherst St., Charleston, S.C.

The reason for such a letter from Mrs. Young is apparent. She got well and is grateful. Recently a nation-wide canvass of women purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made, and 98 out of 100 reported that they received benefit from taking it.

Just because the Vegetable Compound has been helping other women is a good reason why it should help you. For sale by druggists everywhere.

THE REALLY BRAVE MAN.

A coward is a man who runs when scared. A brave man is oue who will not run though scared. The man who knows not fear may be a dunce, an idiot or a plain fool, but he cannot be courageous. Men who stand when their knees knock together, charge the foe when their teeth chatter and refuse to retreat when their hearts thump with dismay, are in reality the world's courageous men. God's heroes are men who dare to do and die at duty's call without regard to their feelings, their fears or their horror of death.—Bob Shuler's Magazine.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Lumberton adopts the "B" Type Program of Work and goes to work on it. They make some changes and start going ahead. Good for Lumberton!

Camden charge adopts the "C" Program for Benton and Midway, checked and begin going forward. Good for them!

Special Notice—Mrs. W. N. Ware, In Africa, writes asking for picture rolls that have been discarded, or graded pictures that are no longer used, or any kind of usable Bible pictures. If you will mail them to me, I will get them to her. This is an opportunity for a real missionary service at a very small cost. The Board has done this several times and we have received a letter of thanks and been told this service is of real value. Look in your trash barrel and in the corners and dig up all the usable pictures and send them in. THANKS!

Fifteen names for the Honor Roll for Sunday School Day! Who will be next? Some of the charges are giving quite an increase, some are giving quite a decrease; we need at least $1500 more, if we are to meet all bills as they come due and not borrow money. Will you not help us?

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

We need not less than one hundred people to unite in prayer for God to move upon the hearts of the Sunday school people of our Conference to undertake to bring our enrollment up to 75,000, to have 400 gold seal workers, 50 young men and women taking graduate work in religious education, and to raise $50,000 endowment for the chair of religious education for Grenada College. Send me your name, saying you will join us in prayer for the attainment of these goals. Jesus said, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." At first thought it seems that it would be an easy matter to get 50,000 Methodists to give from one to ten dollars each to help make Grenada College prepare our girls to be what God wants them to be. It is about as hard to get one dollar out of some people as it is to get one thousand from others. Let us put God to the test and see if he will do what he has promised. If you desire to see the Kingdom of God come, say you will join us in prayer.

Miss Virginia Thomas and I met with the workers of Attalla County, at Sallis, July 7. We have planned to hold two more institutes in the county before the year closes. Mr. B. G. Webb, president of this county organization, is making a success of his school at Kosciusko, and has a great desire to see a Methodist Sunday school in every Methodist church in the county. We must have the cooperation of the superintendents and teachers to do this. Of course, all the pastors can be counted upon to do their utmost to see to it that all their people receive instruction in the things pertaining to Christ, that they are trained in worship and service. Leaders in the church, editors of magazines and daily papers are constantly discussing the needs of the rural church. The country church needs the same thing the town church needs—ten times as much sound religious instruction as they have been getting. Let us give religious education a fair trial before we deny its value.

The training school held for the Aberdeen District, June 9-July 4, was a distinct success in every respect. We enrolled 85 and issued 70 credits; 18 schools were represented; 18 attended from the Corinth and Grenada districts; 3 gold seal diplomas were issued to the following: Rev. J. B. Randolph, Rev. E. G. Mohler, and Miss Ella Bell. Fifty-five pledged to study until they earn the gold seal diploma. This makes 250 who have pledged to do this work. These pledges will be fulfilled. Rev. C. C. Alexander, Mr. G. F. Maynard, Miss Martha Du Berry and other leaders in Tupelo invested themselves fully in this enterprise. These fine people deserve the highest commendation.

Circuit preachers, take notice, you had better arrange with Rev. J. E. Stephens, Grenada, Miss., for one of the young women to be with you to teach your Sunday school workers. Secure your teacher, order your books, supervise the study, arrange a place for class work, and see if you cannot have 100 per cent of your teachers take the tests and receive their credits. This can be done, and the man that does it will deserve and receive promotion in his own charge. We will present some token of our appreciation to the Sunday school that has 100 per cent of the teachers receiving credit.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Conference Superintendent, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, is spending his vacation at Lake Junaluska.

At this great leadership school Mrs. R. H. Harper will stage the pageant, written by Dr. R. H. Harper, "The Laud of Evangeline." For the last two years, Louisiana has won the silver cup on Conference night, and it is hoped we may keep the prize in our possession.

Mrs. R. C. Culpepper, our State Elementary Superintendent, attended the Leadership School at Mount Sequoyah and took the Junior work, under Miss Bailey, of St. Paul, Minn. We have no more conseerated or efficient leader iu our Elementary Division than Mrs. Culpepper, and her work was most favorably commented upon by the faculty. She hopes that all our schools will begin now to make preparation for Children's Week, to be held in September or October. All the material will be sent out in plenty of time, and she is asking, through these columns, that all the pastors and presiding elders cooperate with her in this opportunity of placing before the church and community the value of giving our children the best possible religious training. Every home in the church should be reached during this week.

Mrs. Henry was also present at Sequoyah, and took the Young People's course, under Miss Foreman, of Nashville. She and Mrs. Culpepper and Miss Olive Gunby, of Monroe, who took a Bible course, under Dr. Kern, of Southern Methodist University, represented Louisiana on Conference night. Although no prize was offered on this occasion, it was conceded generally that Louisiaua staged the finest program. This was quite a compliment, as our delegation was the smallest in attendanee. It is hoped next year there will be many more. Mount Sequoyah is a rarely beautiful plaee, cool and delightful. Everything is done that would add to the pleasure of the guests. Over two hundred and fifty credits were given, and the assembly goes into history as the finest ever held by the Suuday School Board.

Among the Standard Training Schools to be held later in the summer and fall, will be, Baton Rouge, Ruston, Amite, Houma, Minden, Alexandria, Shreveport, and New Orleans.

Let us make Louisiana first in the point of trained leadership.

MRS. HENRY,
Assistant Conference Superintendent.

PROPOSES VOTE ON UNIFICATION.

Dear Brother Carley: We have made the first step toward uuiou; now it goes to the Aiinual Conferences. I want to suggest that pastors put the matter before their people and let them take a vote on it, that the delegates may know just what the people want. This, I think, is nothing but fair and just. Vote by two-thirds rule.

Yours for the best,

J. F. SHARP.

Sturgis, Miss.

MRS. H. F. TOLLE AND UNIFICATION.

I read and re-read Mrs. Tolle's recent article on unification, and espeeially noted these words, "look out for those who have 'hate' in their hearts." It reminds me of some other words I find in Rev. 3:15—"which thing I hate." I have no hate in my heart for any living thing on earth, but I do hate a certain thing found plentifully in the Northern Methodist Church—modern infidelity iu the Course of Study. The majority of the books in the Course of Study for young preachers in said church is practically shot through with modern infidelity. For reference to the truthfulness of this statemeut, confer with Dr. G. W. Ridout, of Wilmore, Ky., or Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, of the New Jersey Conference. We have enough of such stuff in the Southern Methodist Church, but not nearly so much as is in the Northern Church, and "this thing" I hate! As to the Negro question, I would refer Mrs. Tolle to an article by Mr. David Rankin Barbee that appeared in some of the dailies recently. If she hasn't read it and can't find it, I would be glad to send it to her. However, the Negro question doesn't bother me as the aforementioned question does. As to the "overlapping" proposition, it looks as if our "honest-to-goodness" bishops have made that perfectly clear to the unprejudiced mind as to which church has sinned the greater sin here. I have had to do with these two churches and I'm "tellin' ye" right now unification is not going to settle this matter. Prejudice is "bred and born" in the children of these communities, and nothing but the fulfillment of the prayer of Jesus in the 17th chapter of John will ever unite these churches, and that will unite them, regardless of which way the unification question is settled.

Let me say in conclusion that I am not "fi'tin'" unification in its true setting—I wish a Scriptural union could be accomplished—for I find so many other things down here in McComb to fight—the awful modern dance, mixed bathing, the rottenness in the movies, a certain poison being vaccinated into our modern system of education that's damning our young people, Romanism, and some other "isms"—that it's very little time I have for anything else. But the Lord is with us and victory is in the air.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

The annual Assembly of the North Mississippi Epworth League was held at Grenada College, Grenada, Miss., June 18-21, 1924, with a total registration of over 200, this being the largest attendance ever known in the history of North Mississippi Epworth League Assemblies. The delegates arrived at noon on Wednesday, June 18, and the conference was opened that afternoon at 3 o'clock in the college auditorium with a song service, led by Rev. J. B. Grimabling, from the Louisiana Conference, followed by a business session, the Conference president, Rev. Julian S. Duncan, presiding.

The first evening of the Assembly was given over to a banquet in the college dining room. The more than 200 Leaguers present exhibited a most enthusiastic spirit throughout the banquet hour. At the conclusion of the banquet there were several talks sounding the various keynotes of the conference. Prof. Perry F. Mullinax, leader of the Morning Watch and Vesper services, sounded the spiritual keynote of the conference, and Rev. Phil. A. Ryan, recreational director, spoke of the social phase of the Assembly. Rev. R. P. Neblett, Dean of the Assembly, talked about the plan and purpose of the classroom work, and Rev. C. C. Alexander, a member of the faculty, brought out forcibly the central theme of the Assembly, "The Christian Use of Money." The conference president, Rev. Julian S. Duncan, then talked on the harmony of all the various keynotes, and spoke of the general spirit of the Assembly as one of education, consecration and service. Altogether this first evening was one long to be remembered by all the Leaguers present.

The morning hours of the Assembly were given to classroom work on a more complete and more efficiently worked out plan than ever before. The classes of the first hour were Bible and Church study, taught by Rev. C. A. Parks, of Holly Springs, Miss., Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Columbus, Miss., and Mrs. J. B. Randolph, of Corinth, Miss. The classes the second hour were Mission study classes, and were taught by Rev. W. B. Hubble, of Oklahoma, Rev. C. C. Alexander, of Tupelo, Miss., Rev. J. H. Holder, of New Albany, Miss., and Miss Katherine Cobb, of Nashville. The third hour classes were for the study of League methods, and were conducted by Rev. J. B. Grambling, of New Orleans, Rev. E. S. Lewis, Rev. Phil. A. Ryan, of Louisville, Ky., Rev. W. B. Hubble, Mrs. W. N. Duncan, of Drew, Miss., and Miss Lelia Beth Roberts, of Nashville. Rev. Phil. A. Ryan conducted a short recreational period each morning between the last two classes.

Thursday and Friday evenings were made very worth while to the Leaguers by splendid and inspiring lectures. Rev. C. C. Alexander, of Tupelo, talked the first evening on "The Pearls of Youth," and Rev. A. T. McIlwain, presiding elder of the Columbus District, talked the second evening on "What Shall We Give?"

The "Morning Watch" and Vesper services, led by Prof. Perry F. Mullinax, of Sparks College, Sparks, Ga., were a source of great inspiration to all the Leaguers and to every one present, and these services became a most vital part of the Assembly program. They gave to the young people a world idea, and a broader vision of their own opportunities and responsibilities for service. As a whole, these services gave the devotional and spiritual life of the Assembly just the note that was needed to make the conference a real power in the lives of the young people, and to send them back home with renewed zeal and a deepened spiritual experience.

The recreational hours in the morning and afternoon meant to the physical and social side of the Assembly life what the Morning Watch and Vesper services meant to the spirtual life. A splendid spirit of play and of rivalry was fostered, and under the expert leadership of Rev. Phil. A. Ryan, of Louisville, Ky., the Leaguers enjoyed periods of directed play that afforded them much pleasure and profit as well.

The spirit of the Assembly was also very much added to by the enthusiasm and kindliness of Rev. J. B. Grambling, of New Orleans. Through the song services, through his classes, and by his general good spirit and genial nature, he helped a great deal to make this Assembly mean much to the young people of North Mississippi.

There were other visitors from out of the conference who added much to the Assembly. Rev. W. B. Hubble, from Oklahoma, was a welcome visitor, and gave most helpful and interesting instruction to his classes. Misses Cobb and Roberts, of Nashville, representing the Mission Board and Central Office, respectively, through their instruction and their very presence, meant to the Leaguers present only what charming Christian personalities and characters can mean to young people.

The conference feels that it was indeed fortunate to have such leaders as these and the other members of faculty present at the Assembly, and wishes to express its sincerest gratitude to every one who so largely contributed to the success of the Assembly.

The reports of the district secretaries, the local chapters, and the various committees evidenced the fact that much progress had been made during the past year. It was especially noted that the standard of work was higher and that more chapters had aspired to become Standard Leagues than ever before, although only three of them reached the standard, two of them, Columbus and Oxford, being 80% Leagues, and one, Tupelo Senior, attaining 100%. On the District Standard of Efficiency, the Aberdeen District had the highest number of points, and was awarded the District Efficiency banner. The Greenwood District was awarded the recreational banner for having attained the highest number of points in the recreational contest.

The conference sincerely regretted to have to give up its president, who has been so efficient and faithful in his service during the past year; still, the Leaguers of North Mississippi are very happy to know that he is entering upon larger fields of service as pastor of a church in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and they are proud of the fact that they will have such a worthy representative at work on the foreign fields. At the last session of the Assembly, Rev. Julian S. Duncan was presented with a gold coin as a token of the love, respect, and good wishes of the entire conference, and as a pledge of the deep interest and sincere prayers of the Leaguers of North Mississippi that will follow him in his new field of work.

The officers elected to serve for the new year are as follows: President, Rev. A. S. Raper, Kosciusko; Vice President, Mr. E. E. Whitehead, Greenwood; Secretary, Miss Martha DuBerry, Tupelo; Treasurer, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Belzoni; Era Agent, Mr. John W. Finch, Eupora. The following superintendents and district secretaries were appointed: Intermediate Superintendent, Mrs. J. D. Magruder, Tunica; Junior Superintendent, Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Durant; Life Service Superintendent, Rev. J. H. Holder, New Albany; Secretary Aberdeen District, Miss Katherine Bryson, Tupelo; Secretary Corinth District, Miss Mabel Barnes, Corinth; Secretary Columbus District, Miss Viva Kate Cole, Columbus; Secretary Greenwood District, Miss Ella Bew Greenwood; Secretary Greenville District, Miss Pauline Standefer, Leland; Secretary Grenada District, Miss Mildred Murry, Oxford; Secretary Sardis District, yet to be selected.

This Assembly was unanimously pronounced the greatest and best Epworth League Assembly ever held in North Mississippi. It is hoped, however, that the measure of its success may not be found in the Assembly alone, but in the increased efficiency of Epworth League work in the conference, and the deeper consecration of a larger body of Epworth Leaguers working together as a mighty army to make North Mississippi "All for Christ."

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Greetings from Our Publicity Agent.

Greeting, dear sisters of each of the auxiliaries of the Woman's Missionary Society of our beloved Louisiana Conference; we reach out even to the farthermost borders of the State for a warm hand-clasp, a glad Godspeed, as every heart beating in unison, every foot in step, we press forward with a great common purpose—Lonisiana and the whole round, beautiful world for Christ our Lord and Master.

You may be interested to know just how the auxiliary of the First Methodist Church in Baton Rouge is progressing, what planning, what accomplishing, in our year's work. We have 175 active members, divided into five circles, these circles meeting twice a month in their respective homes, while the entire auxiliary meets twice a month in the church. The regular program is presented at one of the home meetings; at the other the Bible study as outlined by the council is given.

The Mission study class, under the able leadership of Mrs. Elizabeth McVoy, gave six weeks of intensive study to two books—"Creative Forces in Japan" and "The Debt Eternal."

The second church meeting formerly occupied with Mission study is now used in the consecutive presentation of most excellent programs by the circles, the first church meeting being devoted entirely to the societies' extensive business interest and activities.

With the efficient guidance of Mrs. Sidney Fairchild, assisted by a wonderfully capable group of officers and circle leaders, the auxiliary of the First Methodist Church in Baton Rouge is filled with the greatest spirit of enthusiasm, harmony, and accomplishment in every department—for the Master.

Strangers in our midst are diligently sought out and made welcome to the various church activities, the sick and those in sanitariums, orphanages, jails and penitentiaries are visited and ministered unto with flowers, books and dainties, while books and magazines are collected and sent to the penitentiary, insane asylums and disabled soldiers' camps.

In our circles, for the purpose of raising extra funds for the purchase of flowers, etc., we use little yellow bags, termed sunshine bags, into which is put a penny for every day the sun shines during the month, the use of the bags to be optional with the circle members.

Twice a year, in the spring and fall, we give a bazaar, to help raise the Society's quota of the building fund for our new church.

We have one "Special"—our dear little sister, Mary Alice, at the Virginia K. Johnson Home in Dallas, Tex. Mary Alice says that we, her big sisters, are a joy to her, and we know that she is not only a joy but an inspiration to us.

We encourage and participate in all of the young people's plans and activities.

Co-operating actively with the various municipal and social welfare organizations of the community life, our auxiliary is ever reaching out earnestly and zealously in a spirit of Christian love and fellowship to do the dear Saviour's will.

Yours in Christ,
MRS. ANTOINETTE D. SHEPPERS,
Publicity Agent.

FROM BRAZIL.

(Extracts from a letter written by Rev. George D. Parker, who went from New Orleans about twenty-two years ago to labor for the Master in Brazil. It was written to his dear ones at home; so all the personal element is left out.)

"I will not attempt to enumerate the many things that have occupied our time; at times it seems incredible the amount of work we are called upon to do; I trust that with it all something is accomplished for the Kingdom. How I wish that you of the homeland could spend a little while with us, at least long enough to see the operation of the Spirit upon the hearts and lives of these people just awakening from their age-long spiritual sleep! Our work amongst the young people and children is especially inspiring. This morning (June 1) we had 140 in attendance upon Sunday school, and it was a very cold morning, heavy frost, unheated building, and many of the children not prepared with sufficient clothing for winter.

"We have twelve classes, four in each department, Primary, Intermediate and Adult, and a good deal of real work is done in these departments. The Primary has its separate rooms, and does not meet with the rest of the school only upon invitation; to-day they were invited, and 50 of them came marching in, and sang, "Bring them in; bring the little ones to Jesus." Yesterday afternoon we had a festival for the Primary and Intermediate grades, and had hoped to play on the church lawn, but it was too damp, so I darkened the Primary room, which is quite large, and showed a lot of slides (we have a very fine lantern), and when I exhibited a pastoral scene, the shepherd with a lamb in his arms, etc., I asked them what part of the Bible it reminded them of, and they spontaneously recited the twenty-third Psalm from start to finish. Then we had games, roasted peanuts and candy.

"I have the normal class in the adult department, as well as being superintendent of the school; there are eleven young ladies, all college students, who are preparing to teach; they are organized with president, secretary and treasurer, and have regular monthly meetings outside the Sunday school. They won the banner for the highest grade in Sunday school for the month of April, and as the banner was rather soiled and quite old they made a beautiful new one of salmon-pink satin, lined with gray, and worked with steel beads. It was presented to the school this morning. The president has a birthday to-morrow, and we are entertaining the whole class at tea to-morrow evening in our home. We are studying a book on religious pedagogy in class, besides the regular Bible lesson, on which we have written examinations. They are also working on a quilt, which they are making for the poor. All of the classes in the Sunday school contribute, with the exception of the Primary, monthly for the purchase of the piano for the school. This amounts to more than $25 per month, and is over and above the regular collection, which has been helped instead of hindered by this special effort.

"My wife is superintendent of an afternoon mission school in the outskirts of the city. Last Sunday she had 46 present. It meets in a private home and is the foundation for the organization of a church in the future. I cannot go every Sunday, as it interferes with my evening services if I do too much in the afternoon. I have a class of candidates which I teach about a half hour before going into the pulpit.

ITCH No disgrace to have ITCH, but it is to keep it. Get a box of "Wonder Ointment," a new wonderful remedy. Quick results. Mailed postpaid anywhere for $1. Guaranteed or money back. EVANS PHARMACY, "The Rexall Store," ANDERSON, S. C.

"My wife is president of the Woman's Missionary Society. They, too, have pieced a quilt, which they will quilt this week. About two weeks ago they had a sale of needlework, cakes, chocolate, coffee, etc., and realized about $50. Aside from the financial advantage of such efforts, the social value of such occasions is great, especially in a congregation where so many classes of society are to be found."

NOT HARSHNESS.

In a sense the world is growing harder, because it is growing sounder and more mature. Hardness need not mean harshness. The lines are being drawn tighter, but only upon the old weaknesses, the old flabbiness which used to make such constant call upon the virtue of sympathy and helpfulness. People stand upon their own feet more than formerly, have less need to ask aid, have less experience with the causes which may reduce people to the necessity of asking help, and therefore the old precepts which made this form of helpfulness the chief virtue are passing away. It is not that the world is harder, but conditions have changed, and we are not wise to conclude that because things are different they are therefore worse. It is our duty not to protest change, but to interpret it.—Dearborn Independent.

WEAK NERVES AND THIN BLOOD

RUIN HEALTH OF THOUSANDS WITHOUT THEIR EVER SUSPECTING THE REAL CAUSE OF THEIR TROUBLE—IRON STARVATION

An enormous number of people who ought to be strong, vigorous and in the prime of life are constantly complaining of weak nerves, headaches, pains across the back, disturbed digestion, shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart, a general "run-down" condition, melancholy, bad memory, etc., all as a result of iron starvation of the blood.

There are 30,000,000,000,000 red blood corpuscles in your blood and each one must have iron. Without iron your blood also loses its power to change food into living cells and tissue, and nothing you eat does you the proper amount of good—you do not get the full strength out of it and as a consequence you become greatly weakened both in body and mind.

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth, nor disturb the stomach, because it is organic iron like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils, and apples and not metallic iron which peopleusuallytake. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results. Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "Nuxated" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

CAMP LASSA ACTIVITIES, FORBING, LA.

The Camp Lassa Board of Trustees, of which J. C. Foster is chairman, and W. A. Anderson, secretary, announce that the School of Religious Education will open its ninth annual Standard Training School at Camp Lassa, Forbing, La., eight miles south of Shreveport, on the Kansas City Southern Railway, Saturday, July 26, and continue for twelve days, through Aug. 8.

The course of study this year is an especially attractive one, and the faculty is one of the strongest the School has yet presented to the Sunday school workers of Louisiana. In the general unit the Bible course will be "Customs and Manners of Bible Lands," and the instructor will be Rev. J. F. McKenzie, of the Dunlap Memorial Presbyterian Church, Shreveport. The Beginners and Primary unit will be Whitley's "Study of the Little Child," presented by Mrs. Charles Wyatt, of New Orleans. The Junior course will be "The Study of the Junior Child," with Mrs. Geo. W. McWhirter, of Waxahachie, Tex., as instructor. She will also be the instructor in the Intermediate-Senior course, where the "Leaders of Youth" will be the book used. Rev. C. L. Dean, State Evangelist of the Disciples of Christ, will be the instructor in the Adult Psychology, using Soares' book, "The Study of Adult Life." Dr. Dean will also give the Administration course, using the textbook, "The Task of the Local Church." Rev. S. W. Hutton, Dean of the School, will present "The Five Fine Arts in Religious Education," while Mrs. Bessie Hart, of Texas Christian University, will give a course in the "Church Vacation School," and also be instructor in the Young People's Division, using Thompson's "Handbook for Workers with Young People" as a textbook. The Louisiana Council of Religious Education, which is the name of the reorganized Sunday School Association that is officially backed by thirty-five denominations throughout the country, and of which the Louisiana Council is an auxiliary, will present the program of the Louisiana Council of Religious Education, having as instructor Mr. Van Carter, its general secretary.

The camp has erected additional buildings to care for the increase in attendance for the coming year. Seven shower baths have been installed in Norman Hall, and seven more will be in operation when Hill Crest Inn is completed.

ARCHITECTURAL SINS.

"The Seven Deadly Sins of Church Architects" is the subject of a timely contribution by H. E. Luccock to a recent issue of the New York Christian Advocate and other Northern papers. The first sin is the basement Sunday school. It is the worst, because against the children. Jesus set the child in the midst; we have set him in the cellar. It is the sin against light, against health, against beauty. The second is "The Sin of Akron." This semi-circle of classrooms is as much out of date as the old-fashioned high-wheel bicycle. The third sin is "The pulpit in a corner." The fourth is the sin of "The big brass pipes of the organ." They have no symbolic value, do not minister to the aesthetic sense and arouse no religious emotions. The Israelites bowed down before the golden calf; to-day we bow down before the brass pipes. Sliding doors is enumerated as the fifth sin. The sixth sin is punishment in the pews. A great many church pews are constructed in manifest violation of the constitution of the Unied States which forbids "cruel and unusual punishment." "The high straight back and narrow seat is the devil's masterpiece." The seventh sin is bad air. In many churches there is a direct conflict between religion and science. Church windows seem designed for mausoleums. "In the conduct of worship there abideth three things, art, music, air, but the greatest of these is air."—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

THE RED-BLOODED KIND.

A note from the field says that "the church paper in its true relationship becomes the mouthpiece of the pulpit." The writer goes on: "Enthusiastic community leaders—you know the kind—red-blooded Christians who fill the pews on Sunday, and think and practice Christianity the other six days, are generally found to be readers of the church papers." This is not an editor speaking, but some one down in the walks of life. That he speaks truly, who can question? —Methodist Advocate.

FROM FOREST, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have held both of our meetings on the Forest and Morton charge.

The first week in June, Brother J. H. Jolly, of Poplar Springs, Meridian, was with us in a meeting at Morton. He did a good work. The people were delighted with his preaching and his general deportment among them. Brother Jolly is one of our finest young men and a good, strong preacher. There were twelve accessions to the church.

On June 12 we began our meeting at Forest, with Dr. H. F. Brooks, of Capitol Street, Jackson, doing the preaching. I scarcely need say that the preaching was of a high order from every viewpoint. His ministry in the pulpit and in the homes of the people was appreciated by all. Dr. Brooks is a genial, brotherly man, and deeply spiritual, without sensationalism. We shall not soon forget his stay in our home and his ministry among our people. There were eleven accessions to the church.

We are in the midst of the work of building an annex to our church at Forest, to take care of our Sunday school. It will involve the expenditure of several thousand dollars, and we trust will add much to the efficiency of our Sunday school work.

APPEAL IN BEHALF OF NEW WORK AT BILOXI, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Rev. L. L. Roberts, P. E., and I have secured a corner lot in the factory district of Biloxi, Miss., a splendid lot, and at a strategic point in the very midst of three large factories and at least three other factories near. The lot has a small house on it. It is to be used for a chapel or church. We hope to begin services in it not later than Aug. 3. We need at once $400 to finish paying for the house and lot, and we have room to make a much larger building, and desire to do so. Fifteen hundred dollars more will give us property that will command respect. This is in the city, but at least two miles from Wesley House. It is near Back Bay, but on the Biloxi side, one block from the car line. Help us, brethren, at once. A Presbyterian gave $50.

Fraternally,

WALDO W. MOORE.

Biloxi, Miss.

THE CROSS.

Does not this eagerness to embrace the ethics of Jesus under the guise of some cult grow out of our innate opposition to the cross? Satan cares little about our admiration for Christ's teachings if we reject his Saviorhood. He is perfectly willing that we should greet him with "Hail, Master," if we make that salutation the means of betraying him into the hands of his enemies. Jesus said, "I and my Father are one." Again he said, "All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Now, he was all he claimed to be, or he was the greatest impostor the world has known. If he was not God, he was not even a good man. He is not flattered when men of this age condescend to approve of his teachings, but reject him as Saviour.—Central Methodist.

A REASON.

The great improvement in business which followed the war was very largely the result of the influence of prohibition and the salvage of our former waste of $2,000,000,000 or more each year due to the liquor traffic. I know of no other way to account for the great impetus in home building, the tremendous number of new automobiles purchased, the larger volume of department store sales, accompanied at the same time by a continued swelling of savings bank deposits, when the tendency of business as a whole should normally have been downward.

—Roger W. Babson.

HE SAVED HIS MONEY—BUT

We once knew a man who worked hard and was successful in his business affairs. He began life a poor boy, and, necessarily, had to think in small terms when he came to make his contributions to the church. When he became somewhat prominent in the material world, he kept his small views with reference to church finances. His contributions to his church were far out of proportion to his ability and, as he was the ablest man in the community, his low standards of liberality held back the progress of the church until it had practically no influence over his family. When they saw him putting his big money in farms and business, and small contributions into his church, they logically reached the conclusion that the church was of little value. The result was that they grew up outside the church and never realized its saving power. He saved his money but—he lost his children to his church. Friend, do you want to save a bit of money at such a cost? We hope not.—Albertville District Messenger.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE WORK GOES ON.

It is a blessed consolation in the time of worry, trouble, care, heartache, fear, doubt, distress, that the work goes on. It has to go on! The great world cannot stop its daily march of progress because this thing or that thing happens not to fit exactly into the course of events. The great needs of the world must be met—and they can be met only by the never-ceasing performance of the duties that devolve upon every citizen of earth. Disappointment, discouragement, even apparent failure, may follow our efforts, but the task must not be relinquished. We are working, not for time, but for eternity. The work goes on—it must go on. Thank God for that!

WHERE DO THE BAD PICTURES COME FROM?

A good deal has been written recently about the higher standards of the moving picture industry, especially as to its improved moral tone. We are glad to believe that there has been an improvement within the past two or three years, and we sincerely desire to give credit for such to all to whom credit is due; but we should like to know who is responsible for the pictures—and there must be many of them if we may judge by the advertising notices—that appeal professedly to the baser passions of human nature and that by no possible stretch of the imagination can be classed as educational or uplifting? We suggest that there is still an immense amount of work to be done by the organization that professes, under the leadership of Mr. Will H. Hays, to be committed to the highest moral as well as artistic and mechanical standards. That this organization has the power to do this work, we cannot doubt. A recent authoritative discussion of the moving picture industry in America discloses the fact that while the Hays organization started with nine producing and distributing companies, it now has twenty-two in its membership, and these twenty-two represent 90 per cent of the production and distribution of motion pictures in America. If 90 per cent of the producers are bound together by an agreement to produce only pictures that are morally unobjectionable, the other 10 per cent are evidently both powerful and aggressive, not to say defiant. In the discussion to which reference has just been made, this statement occurs: "The motion picture industry is against censorship, but it welcomes constructive suggestions." This means, it seems to us, that the industry is determined to have its own way as to what it will produce, though it is gracious enough to receive suggestions. When those who would like to go to picture shows can have the assurance that they can attend the so-called first-class theaters in our cities and larger towns without having to look upon scenes that are both disgusting and degrading, then the producers may be justified in their opposition to censorship. The fact that censorship is so badly needed is the strongest argument in its favor.

THE INSANITY PLEA.

There may be good arguments against capital punishment, theoretically at least; but so long as it remains as the extreme penalty for the atrocious crime of murder, it should be inflicted as the law directs, and not be remitted or evaded by the technically supported plea of insanity. The notorious Chicago case, in which two young men of wealth and high social position deliberately planned and executed as cold-blooded murder as is recorded in the annals of crime, will furnish a supreme test of the impartial administration of justice where the extreme penalty is involved. If the facts as alleged are correct—and even the defense does not seem to question them—the trial ought to be short, the penalty quickly imposed, and its execution carried out with only such delays as are constitutionally guaranteed. Yet we are told that the selection of a jury will probably take six weeks. If the crime had been committed by raving maniacs, there would probably be no question as to the proper punishment; but since it was coolly, cunningly planned by those against whom even a suspicion of insanity had never been directed, and carried out with a degree of heartlessness that shocked and appalled the whole world, the insanity plea can be looked upon only as a subterfuge. The prompt hanging by legal process of a few "insane" murderers would have a very salutary effect upon the psychological condition of those persons who are criminals first and mental defectives afterwards. When every other defense fails, try "insanity"—it may work!

METHODIST UNION IN ENGLAND.

As a comment upon the present movement for the unification of the two great branches of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, we take the following from the Christian Guardian, Toronto, Canada, the official organ of the Methodist Church of Canada, concerning Methodist union in England: "One of the questions of supreme importance in the ecclesiastical sphere in the British Isles this year is the proposal for union between the three Methodist denominations, the Primitive Methodists, the United Methodists, and the Wesleyans. After six years of earnest discussion, the matter reaches a climax with the annual gatherings of the three churches this year. The Primitive Methodist Conference has just held its sessions, and if its action in regard to this issue is to be taken as symptomatic, church union will be an accomplished fact in the very near future. After an earnest discussion, which it must be admitted seemed rather one-sidedly in favor of union, the proposal for union carried with very little opposition, only thirteen persons, it is stated, voting against it. Action will be taken by the other bodies within the next few days, the United Conference meeting at Plymouth and the Wesleyan Conference at Nottingham. It is probable that stronger opposition to union may be found in the Wesleyan Conference, though it was the Wesleyan Church that made the first tentative move toward union in 1913. Even though the three Conferences should carry union, it is not likely that consummation could be reached inside of a few years. That union is inevitable seems the general verdict."

THE METHOD OF APPROACH.

We believe that those who are opposed to unification and those who are in favor of it are equally sincere. That there are extremists on both sides we do not doubt. In our approach to the subject, we do not call in question the sincerity of any man, and we do not attach overmuch importance to the arguments of extremists on either side. The adoption of the pending plan is not likely to solve all our difficulties for a long time to come—and its rejection is not likely to prove disastrous to all the work of the Kingdom of God upon earth. It certainly is a question that can be—and ought to be—discussed without heat and bitterness. If it is not so discussed, there is danger that divisions will be created that will take a long time to heal, whether the Annual Conferences vote for or against. We like the words of Dr. A. J. Lamar: "When you bury me, you will bury a Methodist."

BIG JOB—LITTLE PAY.

In spite of the usual assumption that an adequate salary goes with a position of renown and high responsibility, such is not always the case. A case in point is that of the ambassadorship from the United States to the Court of St. James. Generally looked upon as an appointment of highest honor, and certainly one of immense responsibility, the salary paid by the Government is so inadequate to the needs of the position that only wealthy men can be considered as eligible for such service. Apart from the anomaly of a situation which makes it necessary for a democracy to restrict its highest honors to a comparatively small class, the fact that the Government expects so much for so little is an indictment of its sense of justice. When a man's salary is not sufficient to pay his horse rent, he has to "dig up" or quit. With most people it is simply a question of "quit." Most preachers are underpaid but they are not the only ones who suffer this injustice.

GREATNESS.

He has achieved the heights—unhelped, alone.
The way was steep, and many a cutting stone
Hurt his brave feet, but ever on he pressed,
Unwavering, and reached his goal—his best.

Nor can he joy in his achievement—no,
While there are footworn, toiling ones below
He looks with pitying eyes that understand—
A tender smile; he reaches out his hand.

His strength to their poor feebleness is lent,
So is he great, with noble discontent,
Till others share the good that he has won,
And those who toil in darkness find the sun.
—Bertha Gerneaux Woods, in Christian Herald.

THE UNANSWERABLE LEGAL ARGUMENT AGAINST HORSE RACE GAMBLING.

Dear Dr. Carley: The race gambling in New Orleans and through handbooks in other parts of the State is such a menace that I believe the people of the State should take notice of it and express their sentiments in such unmistakable form that the Legislature will enact the necessary law to put an end to this condition.

Believing that this situation is a menace, I introduced and sponsored, at the recent session of the Legislature, two bills drawn and proposed by a strong body of citizens in New Orleans who desired this legislation. The bills were never considered on their merits on account of a round robin by which a majority of the House of Representatives agreed not to consider such legislation at the last session. I prepared, but did not deliver, a legal argument on this bill, omitting the other very powerful arguments that were made by a number of us before the committee at the time of the hearing on the measure. I feel that the legal argument in favor of these measures is so strong that it ought to be presented to the people that it would reach through the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and I am enclosing a copy of the argument that I prepared but did not deliver, and if you think it proper, will be glad for you to publish same in the Advocate, together with this explanation.

T. WYNN HOLLOMAN.

Alexandria, La.

In support of House bills No. 363 and No. 475, the first being but a re-enactment of the Locke Law of 1908 in order to cure a defect in that Act, and the latter being an act to prohibit the publication in advance of betting information and being complementary to the former act, I desire to submit an argument based on the legal features.

There are very powerful economic arguments in favor of this legislation and there are very powerful moral and psychological arguments in its favor, but I shall not at this time go into such arguments. These bills are submitted, not as reform measures, but as sound legislation for the welfare of the State and in accordance with the mandate of the fundamental law of the State and in accordance with a policy already adopted by the State, and for that reason I submit the bills on a purely legal statement of their soundness, in the belief that this legal argument is unimpeachable and must be convincing to all who will consider the measures purely on their intrinsic merits.

The Constitution of 1921, Article XIX, relating to general provisions of law, Section 8, provides:

"Section 8. Gambling is a vice and the Legislature shall pass laws to suppress it.

"Gambling in futures on agricultural products or articles of necessity, where the intention of the parties is not to make an honest and bona fide delivery, is declared to be against public policy; and the Legislaure shall pass laws to suppress it.

"Lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets are prohibited in this State."

The statement that gambling is a vice is found also in the Constitution of 1913 and in the Constitution of 1898, being Article 188 in both Constitutions. Inasmuch as these bills are leveled at gambling and seek to prohibit it, they are bills to carry out the mandate of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana directing the Legislature to suppress that which is declared a vice. It is not within the province of the Legislaure at this time to determine whether or not gambling is a vice or whether it should be suppressed, for the reason that the fundamental law under which we have lived for nearly three decades has declared the vice and laid down the policy of the State and directed the Legislature in accordance therewith. This policy has received the approval of three successive Constitutional Conventions, composed of the ablest men in this State and composed of men of every shade of belief and opinion.

In Section 1 of this same Article XIX of the Constitution, there is stated the oath of office to be taken by all officers of the State of Louisiana, and in that oath, which has been taken by the members of this Legislature, there is a solemn declaration that one will support the Constitution and laws of the United States and the Constitution and laws of this State. As far, therefore, as I am able as an individual to understand the Constitution, the oath and the bills in question, I can see no course that I could take except to vote for the bills.

In the second place, the Legislature of Louisiana, in acknowledgment of the mandatory direction placed upon it by the Constitution, enacted in 1908, by Act No. 57, a law to carry out this provision of the Constitution and to suppress gambling in connection with devices laid on horse racing, whether at the horse race or at a place distant therefrom. This bill is signed by H. G. Dupre as Speaker of the House, P. M. Lambremont as Lieutenant Governor, and J. Y. Sanders, Governor of the State.

The Supreme Court of the State in the suit of State vs. Scheffield et al., 123 La., 271, enforced this statute and affirmed the conviction of two men charged with illegal betting in violation of this Act.

In the later case of State vs. Austin, 142 La., 384, the court found that the charge against the defendant was oral bookmaking and held that the statute only denounced written bookmaking, and the defendant was discharged.

In the case of State vs. Gardner, 151 La., 874, the court, if I understand the decision, held that the language, "any other device," in the title and body of the Act of 1908, referred to some device similar to the devices previously mentioned in the title and in the body of the Act, applying the rule ejeusdem generis, and held that oral bookmaking was not such a device, and discharged the defendant.

In the case of State vs. Austin, the court took occasion to say that the Legislature had passed many laws against gambling, and referred to Act 127 of 1904, "to suppress gambling on races, in pool rooms and turf exchanges where the evil was notorious and unquestioned," and the court further said about the Act of 1908:

"Gambling on or near race tracks or courses had become flagrant, obnoxious, and dangerous to public morals, and the Legislature in 1908 passed act numbered 57, p. 64, to suppress it, by penalizing the gambler who operated a betting book upon any track or course where any kind of a horse race or races were being run, trotted, or paced." State vs. Austin, 142 La., 385.

The policy of the law, therefore, is not only recognized by the Constitution, but has been followed by the Legislature and is recognized by the Supreme Court, and the Legislature in other acts, such as Act 192 of 1920, has passed laws attempting to carry out the mandate of the Constitution.

The first of the bills now proposed, therefore, has changed the language in the Locke Law so that if possible the defects therein as construed by the Supreme Court may be cured, and the method of gambling, by which the gamblers have avoided prosecution under the Locke Law, may be reached, thereby accomplishing what it must have been the intention of the Legislature to accomplish by the Act of 1908, thereby strengthening and perfecting a law on the statute books in order to secure the results directed by the Constitution and to stop the gambling which the Supreme Court in the case of Austin referred to as flagrant, obnoxious and dangerous to public morals.

As I see the matter, therefore, there can be no sound reason for refusing to clarify the Locke Law, and the only result of the defect of the pending legislation will be to perpetuate the flagrant, obnoxious and morally dangerous gambling by oral bookmaking and by any device not similar to the devices condemned in the Locke Law, thereby perpetuating a vice which the Constitution has directed us to suppress and which a previous Legislaure has attempted to suppress.

The second bill ought, if passed, to go further and put an end to the obnoxious bookmaking and gambling prevailing over the State and used as a method of gambling on races wherever they are held, whether in Louisiana or not. The value of this legislation to the State is probably even greater than that to be had by perfecting the Locke Law, and it is but a recognition of the obligation upon us. I, therefore, earnestly urge the passage of these bills.

IN MEMORY OF REV. JAMES A. GOAD.

James Allen Goad was born in Murray County, Tennessee, April 3, 1868. Following an operation, he died in Memphis, March 4, 1924. The next day his body was buried at Starkville, Miss. The services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Woollard, assisted by Revs. J. E. Cunningham and B. P. Jaco.

In early manhood Brother Goad was converted and joined the Methodist church. From that day he felt he had a definite work to do, and he began to shape his plans accordingly.

In 1896 he was licensed to preach. In 1900 he was ordained deacon and admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Conference. He was made an elder in 1906, and given full connection in 1907. While local preacher, and afterward as an itinerant, he served Burgess Mission and Burnt Mills circuit, each, one year; Eureka circuit, four years; McCool, four years; Myrtle, two years; Macon circuit, one year; Brooksville, one year; Noxapater, two years; Kilmichael, two years. Ho was pastor at Carrollton when called away.

Brother Goad was, first of all, a gentleman. He was an honest man, industrious and frugal in his habits. Though his income was small, he lived within his means. He and his noble wife worked hard and economized and gave their children educational advantages. Two of the daughters are teachers in the seshools of Starkville. One is married to Mr. Harrison, of Sidon, Miss. The fourth is finishing her course at the M. S. C. W. He died "owing no man anything," and left a comfortable home, at Starkville, for his widow and children.

Brother Goad was a good preacher. He was not "a college man," but he studied his Bible. He knew and loved his Lord, and he had an unusual grasp upon the doctrines of his church. He was acquainted with its history and its polity; and he lived and preached that "Scriptural Holiness" without which no man can see God.

Though only three months at Carrollton, Brother Goad had made a splendid beginning. His people saw in him the real man that he was—the plain, honest, fearless, modest, Christian gentleman; and they loved him. Under his leadership, they had planned larger things, and the prospect was very hopeful. In the midst of a pleasing and helpful pastorate he was called to a Higher Place. The legacy he left is better than millions of money and "houses and lands"—an untarnished name and a blameless character.

We have a better Conference, and many of us have a greater appreciation of our "high calling of God, in Christ Jesus," because of the ministry of J. A. Goad.

"Peace to his ashes!" God bless his broken family.

OUR NORTHERN EXCHANGES ON THE CHATTANOOGA CONFERENCE.

The Church South Declares for Unification.

By a vote of 297 to 75 the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, July 4, declared itself in favor of unification of American Methodism according to the plan submitted by the Joint Commission on Unification. This plan was adopted by the General Conference of our own body in May at Springfield by a vote of 802 to 13.

The Southern General Conference grappled with the plan during a three days' debate, amidst excitement and endeavors to postpone action for a year. The debates were not wanting in sharp exchanges, but when the finals came the ballot showed twenty more than necessary to declare the proposition carried. The proposition now goes to the Annual Conferences, lay and ministerial, in both denominations for adoption.

This is the extent we can speak on the subject to-day as the national holiday interrupted our mechanical operations. We only pass on the word, that no time should be lost to have the united General Conference hold its session in this State, either in Kansas City or St. Louis; here if it is agreeable to our brethren in the sister section. There is every reason why the joint session which will weld into one the church separated in 1844 should be held in the city which most of all symbolizes the new era, the new state of mind, which makes the action at Springfield and Chattanooga possible. With this we close our forms for this issue.—Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City).

Another Step Toward Unification.

There appears elsewhere in this issue of the Herald a report of the action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the question of unification. The story was written by our special correspondent, one of the most brilliant newspaper women of our sister church, and gives a vivid account of the three days' deliberations at Chattanooga out of which has come another decisive step toward the unification of the two great branches of American Methodism.

The official vote by which the proposal, adopted almost unanimously at Springfield, passed the General Conference of the Church, South, was 297 to 75. This means, when reduced to round numbers, that for every three votes against the proposal, twelve were cast in its favor. Such a showing must greatly enhearten every advocate of a reunited Methodism. The plan now goes to the Annual Conferences of both denominations for ratification. Should two-thirds of the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church and three-fourths of those of the Church South accept the proposal, the two boards of bishops would then have a united meeting and send official notification to both Methodisms of the decision reached by the Conferences. The bishops at the same time would transmit a call for a joint session of the two General Conferences. It will be remembered that the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church adjourned subject to such a call. Inasmuch as the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the normal course of events, would come in May, 1926, it is highly probable that this date would be selected for the joint session should such a meeting be held.

We are delighted with the outcome at Chattanooga, for it indicates a genuine desire for a united Methodism. There will of course be much heated debate on the subject during the coming months. There will also be misapprehensions, misunderstandings, and perhaps even suspicions of motives on the part of individuals both in the North and in the South. And even if the proposal should finally be accepted by both Methodisms, the practical readjustments made necessary by the move would occasion considerable friction and not a few heart-breaks. All this is to be expected. For history shows that in every merger of organizations, secular or ecclesiastical, the road has generally been found to be far from smooth at the beginning. But the sons of Wesley are following the gleam, and notwithstanding the difficulties in the way, if we keep our hearts pure and our love for Christ unsullied, we shall surely reach such a brotherly and workable understanding as will command anew the respect of the whole wide world.—Zion's Herald (Boston).

Unification Advanced by Another Step.

By a vote of 297 to 75, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, endorsed the plan of unification now pending. The action was taken on July 4, following three days in session, full of lengthy and legal debating. The vote was secured by a roll call of all delgates.

Shortly after opening the first session on July 2, Dr. A. J. Lamar, senior publishing agent, introduced a resolution expressing doubt as to the legality of the assembly of the General Conference, and expressing fear of lawsuits over property titles, and asking the bishops and the Annual Conferences to summon another special session for May of 1925. The effect of the resolution would have been to postpone any action on unification at the session then being held in Chattanooga. This resolution of Dr. Lamar's caused about as much controversy as the main matter later on. It was finally defeated on the second day.

Annual Conferences will vote on unification by secret ballot.

Since the Southern Methodists have endorsed the plan of unification, the Annual Conferences of both branches of the church will next pass upon the measure. In the Southern Church, three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences must agree favorably to the plan, while in our Methodist Episcopal Church two-thirds of the members of the Annual Conferences and two-thirds of the members of the Lay Electoral Conferences must concur. The vote in the Methodist Episcopal Church will be taken during the calendar year of 1925. A more intensive study of the plan is likely to be followed now since the actual final deciding votes are to be taken in the near future. —Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati).

On the Way to Unification.

The approval of the unification plan by the Southern General Conference on Independence Day marked the third stage of the progress towards consummation. The first was the agreement of the Joint Commission upon the plan in 1923. The second was the approval of the plan by the General Conference at Springfield in May, 1924, by a vote of 802 to 13. Now the General Conference at Chattanooga has approved it by 297 votes to 75, a substantial margin of safety beyond the required two-thirds majority. The next stage is the submission of the plan in 1925 to the Annual and Lay Electoral Conferences of the two churches for ratification. It will require a three-fourths majority of the membership (lay and ministerial) of the Southern Conferences and two-thirds of the members present and voting in the Annual and Lay Electoral Conferences of our own church next year. Should both churches ratify, the next step will come in 1926, when the regular session of the Southern General Conference will be arranged to meet in the same place with a called session of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference. These two bodies in joint session will take the necessary steps to put the plan in operation, choose the name of the unified church, and perfect those matters which the plan purposely leaves open for united legislative action.

What happened at Chattanooga is set forth in the editorial correspondence on page 866. The body seemed fully conscious of the grave consequences of its action to American Protestantism. It gave full consideration to the question which had been raised regarding its own legal status, and after ample discussion dismissed the doubt by a three-fourths vote. The next proposal was for recommittal and further delay. This was earnestly and ably argued, and the merits and defects of the plan were presented with great ability and at great length by representative men and women. No debate on the subject of unification in any recent session of our own General Conference has approached these speeches in thoroughness of preparation, wealth of material, or earnestness of conviction. The measure was not pressed to a vote until the leaders of both sides agreed to the motion to cut off debate. The decision in favor of the plan was therefore most encouraging to those who desire to see the two great bodies of American Methodists working with one heart and soul at their high tasks.

Earnest as were the advocates and opponents of the plan, it must be said that scarcely a harsh, bitter or ungenerous expression escaped the lips of speakers on either side. For this much credit must be given to the leaders of the two groups in the College of Bishops. Bishop Candler had been most active in the pre-Conference opposition. Yet he presided with perfect fairness at a critical period and evidently was still honored and admired by the majority who were unable to follow his judgment in this matter. Dr. Thomas D. Ellis and Dr. A. J. Lamar were the floor leaders for and against the plan, respectively. The former flung himself into the cause with ardor, good sense and generosity. His chief speech carried the Conference off of its feet by its appeal to faith and honor, and its summons to his colleagues to shake off the fetters of the past and go forward nothing doubting. His opponent, Dr. Lamar, who never before had lost a great parliamentary battle, was clever, persuasive, ingratiating, tactful, strategical. But this time he was fighting against not so much a plan as a spirit, a spirit of hope and faith and high purpose. When worsted he announced that he would carry the fight to his Conference, but if the church at large should approve the plan he would acquiesce. "When you bury me you will bury a Methodist."

It is not to be denied that in some degree the acceptance of this plan is an adventure of faith. Its success depends on mutual confidence and trust. The votes in the two General Conferences ought to be conclusive evidence that the leadership of both divisions of episcopal Methodism have at last come to have this mutual faith. The events of the next eighteen months will demonstrate whether this leadership is truly representative of the ministry and membership. The Christian Advocate, which for the past ten years has spared no effort to diffuse this spirit, is glad to believe that when the churches have full information of the provisions of the plan, the safeguards which are imbedded in it, and the benefits likely to flow from its adoption, the long desired consummation will come.—New York Christian Advocate.

MATRON WANTED.

We are in need of a matron, and would like to correspond with some good Christian woman of mature age, without family incumbrance and a Methodist. Position is now open. Address Rob't W. Vaughan, Superintendent Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, Ruston, La.

IN MEMORIAM: REV. WILLIAM WINANS SIMMONS.

By Rev. I. W. Cooper, D.D.

"And for the day of life I ask,
Some all-absorbing, useful task."

This was evidently the wish and prayer of our Brother William Winans Simmons, who now rests from his labors while "his works do follow him." A more rehearsal of his accomplishments in the work of the ministry will show how his days were crowded full of service and attainment.

He was licensed to preach Nov. 18, 1876, and was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference which was held at Natchez, Nov. 29, 1876. He was appointed to the Buffalo circuit, afterwards called the North Wilkinson circuit. He was continued there for four years, and during that time received 350 persons into the church. He was ordained deacon in 1878 and elder in 1881.

He served the following charges: Rocky Springs circuit, 1881-82; China Grove, 1883-84-85-86. On this work we received 385 into the church. Mount Carmel, 1887; Ellisville, 1888-89. Received 213 into the church. Gloster and Centerville, 1890-91-92-93. Built a beautiful church at Gloster. Fayette and Harriston, 1894-95; presiding elder of Forest District, 1896-97-98; presiding elder of Seashore District, 1899-1900-1901. His last year on the Seashore District all claims were paid in full. This was the first time in the history of the Mississippi Conference that all claims on a district were paid in full. The same year there were 1,200 conversions on the district and seven new churches were built. Presiding elder of the Meridian District, 1902-1903; pastor of Bolton charge, 1904; Wesson station, 1905; La Branch and Fernwood, 1906; superannuate, 1907; served Bethel charge, 1908; Hamburg, 1909; superannuate from 1910 to his death, March 2, 1924. This is merely an outline of his work for our Conference. In the minds and hearts of many who have outlived him, these bare statements are elaborated and illuminated by recollections of vital, inspiring details.

In reviewing his private life, we find that he was the son of Thomas and Barcenia Simmons, born at Georgetown, Copiah County, Miss., Aug. 24, 1843. He joined the Methodist church when he was twelve years of age. In 1861, at eighteen, he enlisted in the Confederate Army. He served in the Sixth Mississippi Regiment uutil May 1, 1863, when he was wounded in a battle near Port Gibson. There he lost his left arm and a part of his right hand. As soon as he returned from the war, he entered the Hopewell High School, at Georgetown, Miss. There he studied for two years and a half under Rev. Martin Trawick, a Presbyterian minister. Following this, he was assessor of taxes for Copiah County for three years. Then, through another period of three years, he taught school.

In 1867, Brother Simmons was married to Mrs. Pernicie P. Hays. She survives him, as do also a son and daughter and two step-daughters. He was a devoted husband and father and as fond of his stepchildren as if they had been his own. His last words were to his wife and were characteristic of the strength and simplicity of the man: "I am not afraid. I am safe."

A simple but impressive funeral service was held from the Methodist church at Gloster, Rev. E. D. Simpson, preacher in charge. The service was conducted by Rev. W. M. Sullivan, assisted by Rev. W. B. Jones, Rev. C. C. Evans, Rev. W. H. Saunders, Rev. J. A. Wells, and Rev. J. L. Smith.

Knowing and loving this man and servant of God as I knew and loved him, I feel impelled to call attention to some of his excellent qualities. The facts of his ministry, given above, prove that he was an energetic worker. We have spoken of how he was wounded, when a Confederate soldier, but this misfortune did not impair his energy or zeal. "In spite of sorrow, loss and pain, his course was onward, ever." Suffering did, however, make him sympathetic, and so he was not only devoted in his home life, but he was an understanding, sympathetic pastor and presiding elder. And yet he was strong and even uncompromising in his opinions, when judgiug facts and abstract relations. He was a good manager and was independent and self-respecting from every standpoint. Civil War couditions hindered Brother Simmons from getting a college education, but in spite of this handicap he was far above the average as a preacher. He was what we call a "Scriptural preacher," and loved to exponud such subjects as regeneration, justification, and the witness of the Spirit.

Valiantly he fought the enemies of his loved Southland, and gave of his life's blood for the Confederacy; more valiantly he fought the battles of Good against Evil and gave of the best years of his strong manhood to uphold the bauner of the King of Kings. He might well exclaim as he met the last enemy: "I am not afraid. I am safe." Like Paul, he had fought the good fight and kept the faith. From henceforth is laid up for him the crown of righteousness.

ON UNIFICATION.

By William Shields Holmes.

First let us determine whether unification is at all desirable. The old adage, "In Union there is Strength," will of course be one of the first thoughts here. Then the old fable of the bundle of sticks comes to mind.

But there is in the Roman Catholic Church a living example of the power of a world-wide organization. This great organization has its forces in every corner of the world, and is kept in close touch with needs everywhere. Recently several millions of dollars were sent to Germany to be used in forwarding their work, and although it is reported that Protestant churches of Germany are in dire straits and are losing ground, no Protestant church is able to help the country that gave birth to Protestantism. Again, it is said that the Roman Catholic Church has in the United States six hundred hospitals with beds enough to care for all their people and more, but the Protestant churches are so busy building altar against altar that they cannot spare the money to build hospitals and other like institutions except in the most meager way.

In the United States there are said to be about twenty kinds of Lutherans, seventeen kinds of Methodists, sixteen kinds of Presbyterians, fifteen kinds of Baptists, and various other Protestant churches, or a total of one hundred and forty-three different kinds of Protestant churches. In the name of common sense, how can a church so divided against itself deliver a blow that shall produce results. We are simply frittering away our opportunities by these useless divisions.

I am not arguing that all of these bodies should merge into one, but surely those of similar doctrines and polity ought to do so.

These instances might be multiplied, but the foregoing should suffice. Besides, several General Conferences—North and South—have voted that unification is desirable, and since these Conferences were supposed to contain men and women most interested in the church and best informed as to her needs, their testimony is surely worth something.

Secondly, if unification is desirable, is the present plan a good one?

The objections I have heard are generally as follows: First, the Northern Church repudiated the plan of separation and invaded our territory contrary to agreement, and, if this plan is adopted, we simply approve their action and give them the legal right to invade the South.

Secondly, our property would be turned over to the new church, and if we ever wish to withdraw we would lose all claim to it.

Thirdly, the Negro question.

Fourthly, the Northern Church, having shamefully mistreated us in the past, is not to be trusted in the future. They will still further encroach upon our territory.

Fifthly, the North is more Modernist than we are, and there would be danger to our doctrines.

Sixthly, the plan is too indefinite, and will cause misunderstanding. There ought to be a line drawn from East to West and everyhody north of the line should be obliged to belong to the Northern Jurisdiction, and everybody south, to the Southern. The minority is not protected.

As far as I can recollect them, these cover the reasons given in speeches in the General Conference, in conversations among the delegates and visitors, and in articles in the papers.

Taking these up in order, let us agree at once that at their General Conference in 1848 the Northern Church did repudiate the plan of separation and did plant churches in our territory; that I have read all these things with sorrow and shame and sometimes with anger. But let us remember that the reason given for their action was that the plan was illegal because it was not referred to the Annual Conferences for action. They refused to surrender our share of certain property, and we entered suit in the civil courts. Our contention was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, the court contending that the highest body of the church had full authority in the matter. However, the Northern Church did not accept this verdict. But remember the passions of the day when each side thought they were doing God's will by killing the other. I well remember how, as a child of seven, eight, and nine years of age, when my old grandfather would recite the wrongs brought upon the South by the North, my own little heart was stirred to a passion white with heat, and I could have killed a million or ten million Yankees with the greatest satisfaction.

But those times are past. We worship the Prince of Peace, the Christ, the Son of the living God, who is Love, and such passions are out of place in the hearts of his followers. The political questions that caused them are gone forever, and it is time to forgive the injustices of the past. Those people thought they were obeying the voice of Christ, and so did we, and I am now ready to admit that they are as good folks as we. There is no more danger from that source.

Secondly, I am not a lawyer, but have the assurance of such lawyers as Judge H. H. White, Judge John S. Candler, and Mr. R. O. Randle that there can be no trouble about the question of property.

Thirdly, the Negro question ought not to have been injected into this question. During Reconstruction, we were deprived of the vote. The Negro was given the vote, and United States soldiers were stationed all through the South to enforce the laws of Congress and the views of Northern radicals. But we protected ourselves and got our local governments back into our hands. If we could do that then, we can certainly protect ourselves now. Social equality will come when we will it, and not before.

Fourthly, I believe that if we adopt the present plan of unification, the mistreatment will stop because the reasons will have disappeared. I have already heard of two Northern churches in Louisiana and two in Texas that are ready to come in with us. The Northern Church has sixty churches in Los Angeles, and we have about three. I think these churches will become a part of the sixty, as they should. These instances might be multiplied many times, but are sufficient to indicate the present sinful waste and the probable correction of the same by adopting the plan.

Fifthly, I do not believe there is any difference in the doctrines of the two churches as a whole. Their Disciplines show this. But of course there are so-called Modernists and there are so-called Fundamentalists in both branches. The action of the recent General Conference of the Northern Church ought to satisfy any one on this point. Reading the history of the Christian church, I find that such arguments have been going on ever since the church was founded, and yet she continues her work, and I firmly believe that this dispute will be rightly settled. The old Bible has stood many assaults and is destined to continue as the Charter of Christianity. I have no fear of its losing its place in the affections of Christians, whether we unite or not. I believe it to be divinely inspired and do not fear the criticism of mere men.

Sixthly, the plan could scarcely be adopted if it tried to go too far. If you draw a line and tell people they must stay on one side or the other, they will not do it; but if you give them the privilege of making their own decisions, they are likely to do so. And this is right. Let's cast away our unworthy fears and take counsel of our hopes.

As the minority our church is so fully protected that some of the implacable foes of unification on any terms are saying that the plan cannot last in this particular. With amusement I have read their labored arguments at this point. Suffice it to say that no law can be passed by the new General Conference without the consent of a majority of each jurisdiction. It is parallel to a State Legislature or to Congress, where no bill can become a law without a majority of each house. And besides, we have the Judicial Council, on which we have as many members as the Northern Church, although their church membership is twice as great as ours. The functions of this body are similar to those of the United States Supreme Court.

Let us unite for the sake of our blessed Savior. Let us cast out hate and suspicion and fear for his sake whose new, best name is Love.

Let us unite for the sake of the church, so that we may do nothing to hinder her bringing in of the Kingdom.

Let us unite for the sake of the South. We who added every foot of territory to the continental United States outside of the Northern section of the original thirteen States; we who formulated this government and ran it without graft or scandal, who gave the most efficient, economical and best government known to the world until the fraternal strife of the Civil War rendered us impotent, we have been as orphans during these many years. Cannot we Methodists be the first to take steps to end this unhappy state and help the South to resume her rightful place?

In the special session of the General Conference it was noticed that the opposition came principally from Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina. How I love them! A native of one of them, I have always revered them all. No man knows the passionate devotion of my heart to the South. The very word enthralls me. I am a Southerner first and an American next, but I am a Christian first of all. Brethren of the four States named, you would scarcely realize it if unification came, for you have hardly any Northern churches in your midst. But think of the wasteful competition in other States and forget your fears and your prejudices.

Baton Rouge, La.

VIA TRITA, VIA TUTA.

(The Beaten Path, the Safe Path!)

By Rev. J. Loyd Decell.

In a crisis, either extreme may prove calamitous. Ovid said: "You will travel more safely in a middle course." This is not a plea for compromise or acquiescence, but a call for caution, lest the body of Christ be hurt. At this very hour men on both sides of the unification question should "possess their souls in poise and patience." This issue is so momentous and far reaching that surely there can be more than one side to it. Doubtless right now there are places where disastrous dissensions could be brought on in one place, for the plan of unification; and in another for the continuance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as a separate entity. The age-long beaten path of "the middle course" is the safe path, for there are two sides to the Principle of Loyalty.

Some contend that the General Conference is the voice of the church and that we should vote for the pending plan of unification because it passed by the requisite two thirds. This has too much of the "centralized paternal" and "overlordship" spirit in it to be taken seriously. For either "pro" or "con" to call the other disloyal is an extreme that reveals the direct disunion. An individual or Annual Conference can vote against the plan and remain as loyal as those who support it. To what are we called upon to be loyal but what we feel is the best interest of Christ's church? Also there are two sides to the matter of Knowing the Plan.

A lack of understanding the plan is not all on one side of this question. A college president, and a presiding elder who was a former college president, both scholarly gentlemen, for unification, and members of the Special General Conference, stated only a few hours out of Chattanooga, the day before the General Conference opened, that they understood the present plan prevented the building of new churches by one Jurisdiction where the other was already established. A brother recently said: "Most of the membership who are opposed to the pending plan opposed it simply because they do not understand the plan. The pastors can lead them." I take it there are many who do not yet understand the plan, but insist those who oppose the plan have some understanding of it. To superimpose ignorance upon a large number of consecrated Methodists, many of whom are as well read and capable of analyzing compacts of union as others, or to attribute their opposition to "blind prejudice," is to assume a "holier than thou" attitude that is not conducive to union of any kind anywhere. This duality reaches on to

Responsibility for Avoiding Dissession.

However strong a pastor stands for the continuing of the Southern Methodist Church as a separate entity, though co-operating with the Northern Church in eliminating overlapping and discord, he should avoid being so extreme as to make it easy for his members to join other churches, should the plan carry; likewise, the brother who trumps up "prejudice" and "blindness" as the cause of not voting for the plan, and leads his people to believe that unification is certain to come, and if it should fail, have such a reaction that many of his members should break over, anyway, he, too, is blamable. There are grounds for Two Opinions of the Outcome.

The enthusiastic unificationist, being in the majority as he feels, is likely to do even more harm than the ultra-opponent of the pending plan. This is no time for "Headlines" and "Sweeping Campaign Claims"—we are dealing with a part of the Body of Christ.

There are:

Traveling preachers	8,076
Lay votes	2,464
	10,540
Absentees (?)	540
Total vote	10,000

It will require three-fourths, or 7,500, to adopt the plan; 2,501 votes will defeat it.

If there are as many as three-fourths plus one, or 2,501, according to my estimate, votes against the pending plan, which is to my mind all but certain, this ratio, will represent 625,000 members and the plan should be defeated. One-fourth is indeed a low estimate of the members who would oppose the plan. Any plan that would go against even as many as 625,000 out of 2,500,000 would be a failure, and should the three-fourths requisite fail, "Peace and harmony should prevail" as well as if it should carry.

Personally, I am conscientiously opposed to this pending plan for: (a) It is too conjectural; (b) it falls at a point of real need of unification, altar against altar; (c) It involves racial conditions the good of which does not justify the risk. But I shall so pray and act as to hold my people to our beloved church, whichever way the result goes. Let the flower of chivalry sweetly bloom, and let us be brethren, loyal to the great church we love and faithful to the blessed Christ we serve.

Meridian, Miss.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

The Methodist Church at Collins, Miss., was destroyed by a storm on the night of May 26, as were many of the homes of the church members. Some of them are not able to rebuild their homes, some of them have moved away, and the congregation is in great need of help to rebuild their church, which will cost approximately $5,000.

It is sometimes the case that the first reports of a storm that go out to the public are rather exaggerated, but not so in the case of Collins. For some reason, the story of the destruction there has not been told. The public has not been advised of their needs, and I fear they have not received the assistance that was due them.

As we sit in our comfortable churches and worship on Sunday mornings, let us remember the little congregation over at Collins that has no place to worship in, and is not able to rebuild.

Allow me to insist that every pastor present this need to his congregation and give the people a chance to contribute, and every individual who reads this appeal, send a liberal contribution to the pastor, Rev. J. W. Thompson, Collins, Miss. Thank you.

Your brother in Christ,
W. W. GRAVES, P. E.

BOARD OF LAY ACTIVITIES ARRANGES MEETINGS IN LOUISIANA.

Please give notice in the Advocate that we will have a series of meetings for the lay leaders and pastors in the State and all others who will attend them, as follows:

Shreveport, August 4.
Ruston, August 5.
Monroe, August 6.
Alexandria, August 7.
Lake Charles, August 8.
Baton Rouge, August 11.
New Orleans, August 12.

Prof. G. L. Morelock, our General Secretary, will be present at all of these meetings, and there will be round table discussions and some addresses, and I hope that not fewer than one thousand laymen in the State will take advantage of this opportunity to master the work of the Lay Activities Board, and that pastors in general will be able to attend these meetings also.

T. W. HOLLOMAN,
Conference Lay Leader.

THE ASBURY MONUMENT TO BE DEDICATED OCT. 15, 1924.

The dedication of the monument to Bishop Francis Asbury, postponed from Tuesday, June 3, 1924, on account of strike in granite quarry, preventing completion of the pedestal, will take place on Wednesday, Oct. 15, 1924. The monument is to occupy a triangular plot, set apart by act of Congress for the purpose, at the intersection of Sixteenth and Mount Pleasant Streets, Washington, D. C. A reception for the guests and friends of the Association will be held on Tuesday evening, Oct. 14, at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Representatives of all branches of Methodism in the United States and Canada, Great Britain and Ireland, Australia and South Africa, have been invited to be present at the unveiling of the equestrian statue of the founder and pioneer bishop of American Methodism.

All churches are earnestly invited to hold services shortly before or after the date of dedication, at which hymns used in Asbury's day, and still familiar to the people called Methodists, shall be sung, and an appropriate historical discourse delivered to remind both the passing and the coming generation of the debt of gratitude due the faithful itinerants of the heroic days, when Methodism was struggling to maintain and extend itself in a new and primitive country. Why has it become such a mighty force, and how shall it be passed on with quickened life to the next generation? Out of the past shall there come a greater future?

WM. F. McDOWELL, President.
H. K. CARROLL, Corresponding Secretary.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

WHAT ABOUT PAYMENTS ON SPECIAL EFFORT PLEDGES WHICH WERE DUE JULY FIRST?

Thousands of people throughout Southern Methodism made pledges to Superannuate Endowment, and the first payments on these pledges were due July 1. Have these payments been collected? If so, has the money been sent to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.?

It is to be hoped that pastors and Special Effort Committees will give faithful attention to this important matter. It is useless to spend much time and money in securing subscriptions for any cause if there is not put forth a diligent effort to collect the payments on such subscriptions as they come due. Whenever a worthy financial movement fails, it is due chiefly to neglect of the follow-up. The Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment requires a steady and unbroken pull ahead over a period of five years. If it can have this, it is sure to succeed. If it does not have it, it will fail in the proportion to the neglect.

The first real test is upon us right now. Can the regular forces of our church (bishops, presiding elders, pastors, and lay members) guide an important financial movement successfully without the intervention of special agencies to keep them pepped up to the task? I believe they can. The Board of Finance believes they can. In this conviction we have risked the outcome of our Special Effort with these leaders, believing that they will not fail to justify our confidence.

The charges keep on making payments on their quotas. Every mail brings many remittances. To date $445,913 has been received on quotas. Undoubtedly this total will be greatly increased by the remittances which will be made as a result of July collections of first payments on subscriptions. Let the good work go on unhampered by any contingency which may arise. When we are working to provide adequate Superannuate Endowment, we are on business for the King. The King's business is supreme and it must not be done in a half-hearted way.

Surely we ought to make July a banner month in the amount received on quotas. I know the days are warm and there are many things in them to distract us. But our interest in the cause of the Forgotten Man should be a sufficienct urge to command our best service in his behalf under whatever conditions may confront us. He did not quit when the days were warm; he served the church and us under all conditions with utter abandon to our good. We cannot afford to be less considerate of him in his days of old age and physical infirmity. Out of his deprivations he calls to us now. Let us not turn a deaf ear to his plaintive cry.

Since Subscription Day, March 16, 1924, and up to July 1, the Annual Conferences have paid on quotas to the Board of Finance a total of $416,958.82. At this writing the month of July is only just beginning, but enough has been received thus far to bring the total received on quotas up to nearly $446,000.

The total amount received by the Board of Finance on quotas from the Annual Conferences up to July 1 ($416,958.82) was paid as follows: Alabama, $10,187.65; Arizona, $441.20; Baltimore, $562; Central Texas, $8,597.52; Denver, $1,345.65; East Oklahoma, $4,574.85; Florida, $25,438.83; Holston, $13,512.61; Illinois, $1,341.50; Kentucky, $16,798.83; Little Rock, $9,206.46; Louisiana, $17,404.45; Louisville, $20,136.06; Memphis, $7,705.58; Mississippi, $11,149.15; Missouri, $12,896.64; New Mexico, $1,154.15; North Alabama, $11,057; North Arkansas, $8,913.47; North Carolina, $24,324.23; North Georgia, $17,722.64; North Mississippi, $11,078.56; North Texas, $9,160.17; Northwest, $915.44; Northwest Texas, $5,176.11; Pacific, $5,571.23; St. Louis, $12,075.66; South Carolina, $11,020.12; South Georgia, $7,474.18; Southwest Missouri, $18,139.64; Tennessee, $22,208.12; Texas, $5,341.50; Upper South Carolina, $11,599.17; Virginia, $25,274.39; West Oklahoma, $2,599.63; West Texas, $22,466.96; Western North Carolina, $9,863.86; Western Virginia, $12,268.88; Brazil Mission, $10; Congo Mission, $100; Japan Mission, $145.

GOOD NEWS FROM A FAR COUNTRY.

A letter has just been received from Rev. W. B. Lee, one of the presiding elders of the Central Brazil Conference. He stated that every presiding elder of the Conference pledged himself last December to present the matter of the Special Effort to each charge on his second round of visitation, and to decide upon ways and means for raising the quota before the meeting of the next Annual Conference. This work was faithfully done. Then came the next step, namely, a number of charges paid in cash the amount due on their quotas for the first year. One charge paid in cash its quota for the five years; one charge overpaid the amount due for the first year; and another paid the amount due for four years. Fifteen charges out of thirty-four in the Central Brazil Conference have paid the amount due the first year in full. Brother Lee writes that by Aug. 28 it is confidently expected that the full amount due for the first year from the entire Conference will be paid—and more!

I think we should take off our hats and acclaim Rev. W. B. Lee of the Central Brazil Conference for his wonderful leadership and success in this work. He has done a very credible thing, and not only should we honor him for his faithful leadership in this great movement, but also the other presiding elders and all our people of Brazil who have given their earnest co-operation. God bless the Central Brazil Conference, and may its work for the Superannuate Cause influence our home Annual Conferences to even greater efforts to reach the $10,000,000 goal.

A TALE I LOVE TO TELL.

Do you read about the charges that have paid one-fifth or more of their total quotas? I like to write their names and publish their doings so that the whole church may know. I trust before the end of this Conference year I shall have the pleasure of writing the name of every charge in the church as having met the first year's obligation in full. Since last week the following charges have paid one-fifth or more of their total qoutas:

Red River, Tennessee, Clarksville, Rev. C. M. Charles, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,500; amount remitted, $533.

Splice Creek, Jamestown, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. W. P. Barnes; pastor; total assumed quota, $200; amount remitted, $57.

Austin Avenue (Waco), Central Texas, Waco, Rev. Cullom H. Booth, pastor; total assumed quota, $6,750; amount remitted, $1,354.95.

First Church (Tampa), Florida, Tampa, Rev. H. F. Tolle, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,068; amount remitted, $916.55.

Ripley, North Mississippi, Corinth, Rev. J. A. George, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,040; amount remitted, $436.90.

First Church (Laurens), Upper South Carolina, Greenville, Rev. P. F. Kilgo, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,285; amount remitted, $744.

Jackson and Ethel, Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Rev. B. D. Watson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,380; amount remitted, $405.

Wytheville, Holston, Wytheville, Rev. J. M. Crowe, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,100; amount remitted, $420.

THREE CHEERS FOR THE 100% PRESIDING ELDERS!

Do you grow weary of so much writing about the Pink Leaf Report? Well, stick to it a little longer, until a few more charges have given attention to the matter, and then we will take a vacation on writing about the Pinks. We are getting very close to being a 100% church in this matter. To date 228 presiding elders have succeeded in having every charge on their respective districts to send this report to the Board of Finance. In addition to those already reported as having a place on this Honor Roll, the following additional names are listed this week:

226. North Arkansas, Paragould, Rev. James A. Anderson, P. E.

227. Louisiana, Alexandria, Rev. C. C. Weir, P. E.

228. North Texas, Dallas, Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker, P. E.

The Home Circle

TUNING IN.

By Margaret E. Sangster, in the Christian Herald.

Sometimes only a discord sounds—then the way is hard to know,
But sometimes, out of the silences, sweet chords of music flow—
And sometimes, out of a distant place, across vast seas of pain,
A voice that is like a healing touch can make us well again!

Sometimes we strive for a note of cheer that will guide us through the dark,
Sometimes we search for the beacon light, by which we may steer Life's bark;
Sometimes we pray for a gleam of light that will guide our souls to Him,
And then it is that the emptiness is sullen and stark and grim!

Oh, then it is that we lack of faith, that we turn, with tears, away,
And then it is that our hearts are sad, that our lips forget to pray,
And then it is that we will not trust—though then we should trust the more,
For then it is that our souls should seek, through the dark, for the open door!

If we would strive, when the air is still, for the voice we long to hear,
If we would ask, when all Life seems blank, for the melody of cheer,
If we would know that a love still lives, though the fears of death begin,
Then we would find that our souls had learned to listen—to tune in!

Oh, often only a discord sounds, then the way is hard to find—
And then it is that our lips seem mute, that our searching eyes seem blind . . .
But sometimes, out of the endless space, across vast seas of pain,
A voice that is like a healing touch can make us whole again!

"NETTLES"—A TRUE STORY.

By May Hoover Mumaw.

Did you ever hear of a dog that actually telephones? Well, I heard about one the other day; but, wait, I must tell you some other things first about Nettles.

Nettles was an English bull terrier belonging to Mr. Charles Long, of Kent, Ohio. You see this is really a true story, boys and girls.

Nettles was devoted to his master, and every evening when the master got home from work, Nettles, would go upstairs and get one slipper and carry it down to the basement to him, then go back upstairs and get the other slipper. He always selected his master's slipper from the collection in the closet, and never made a mistake.

When it was bedtime, Nettles would go up to the attic and get his bed and carry it down beside his master's bed, and there he would sleep. In the morning he never failed to carry his old piece of comfort, which was his bed, up to the attic, and put it away.

One night a guest in the home said: "Nettles, you had better come over and sleep with me tonight."

Nettles wagged his tail knowingly, went over to his master's bed and got his bed and proceeded to go over into the guest's room, and there he slept all night.

But, there, I could tell you many interesting things about Nettles. However, I started to tell you how Nettles used to telephone.

When time for his master to come home from work, Nettles would go to the front porch, and there he would sit, patiently waiting and watching for his master. How do you suppose he knew when it was time for his master to come home?

Well, one night his master worked later than usual, and Nettles watched and waited and waited and watched. Finally he went to the home of a neighbor, scratched at the door, and stood there looking at the lady of the house as if to say: "Do you know where my master is?" The neighbor invited Nettles into the house.

Pretty soon the telephone rang. Nettles' master was calling this neighbor to know if she had seen Nettles. When the neighbor told Mr. Long that Nettles was there, he said: "Call Nettles to the telephone." The neighbor placed the receiver to his ear—and his beloved master said: "Come on home, Nettles."

He tore out of the house and home as fast as he could go. There—I told you how the dog telephoned—but, listen, the real story is yet to come. There is nothing out of the ordinary about the story thus far; here is the remarkable part.

Every evening after that incident occurred, Nettles would go to the neighbor's house, scratch to be let in, proceed to the front window, and there he would watch for his master to come home.

His master would call to him and say, "Come home, Nettles." But he would not stir. Sometimes he would go out on the front porch, but he refused to follow his master home and get those slippers from the closet upstairs. What was he waiting for?

Well, here is the funny part of the story—and I am sure you have never heard another story just like it.

He would calmly sit there and wait for his master to go on home and call him by telephone! There now, he was a remarkable dog, was he not? How he would tear home as soon as that receiver had been placed to his ear!

Mr. Long had but one picture of that remarkable dog—he did let me bring it home for my children to see, but I mailed it back to him. I wish you might all see the cunning dog, standing by his master's side. But anyway you will not forget the dog that telephoned, and I would not be surprised if you would be going to a neighbor's house and calling your dog by telephone. How about it?—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

LITTLE FAITHFUL.

Father was very proud of his girl. "Just give Sylvia anything you choose to look after and she'll see that it is done," he said.

Cousin Lelia came one spring for a visit, and the two girls had great fun together. Lelia wanted to gather wild flowers; she wanted to visit the mill, to see the head of the brook.

"Fact is," said Joe, the hired man, "she's always a-wantin' to be somewhere else or do somethin' else—no more rest to her than there is to a gadfly."

One evening father went to town, and the next morning mother woke up with a sick headache. Sylvia hurried downstairs and got breakfast for Joe, then carried a cup of coffee to mother, and set about dishwashing and straightening up the kitchen in good earnest.

Lelia fluttered about. She helped a little, hindered a good deal. Every little while she would say, "Aren't you most done?"

At last, when everything mother wished attended to was done, and the girls were ready for the brook trip, Sylvia declared, "There! I've forgotten the chickens."

"Oh, let 'em wait!" Lelia pouted. "Sylvia Dayre, I think you're real mean. You'd rather do anything than please me."

Joe was close by, and he waited to hear what "our girl" would do. But Sylvia only laughed as she ran back for the feed. "Guess the brook isn't as hungry as the chicks—why Joe!"

"Go 'long, there!" Joe said laughing. "I'll feed 'em. I've lots of time to-day."

Father heard all about it from mother and Joe, and the next time he came back from town he brought Sylvia two pairs of beautiful white pigeons. "For Little Faithful" was on the box—Wasn't Sylvia happy?—Children's Companion.

"Never think yourself too insignificant or the thing too mean. You and it have an infinite capacity for absorbing, storing away, raying out glory."—J. F. W. Ware.

The senses folding thick and dark
Above the stifled soul within,
We guess diviner things beyond,
And yearn to them with yearning fond;
We strike out blindly to a mark
Believed in, but not seen.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. F. Dring, of Sibley, La., writes: "I have receipts showing that my father was a subseriber to the Advocate in 1874. Not many years since that time have gone hy without the paper."

Dr. W. D. Wall, the greatly heloved physieian of Slaughter, La., has heen a regular subseriher to the Advocate for more than fifty years. He is now advanced in years, but young in spirit. Blessings upon him!

The Southern Methodist Press Assoeiation will hold its annual meeting at Mount Sequoyah, Ark., August 5-8. Dr. R. S. Satterfield, Associate Editor of the Nashville Christian Advoeate, is president of the Association.

Rev. S. E. Ashmore, pastor at Tyro, Miss., preaehed at the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., on June 29. Brother Ashmore was a memher of Central Church prior to his admission to the traveling conneetion.

Rev. J. W. Price, our pastor at Foxworth, Miss., was recently assisted in a good meeting at that place by Rev. H. A. Wood, of Flora, Miss. Brother Price was also assisted last week in a meeting at Sandy Hook by Rev. J. M. Alford, of the Louisiana Conferenee.

A new hook, "The Hill Billies," has reeently come from the faeile pen of Dr. J. M. Rowland, editor of the Richmond Christian Advoeate. The book deals with life in the mountains of North Carolina. It is published by the Publishing House, and the price is $1.50.

Rev. D. L. Griffin, formerly a loeal elder of our chureh, has joined the Nazarene Chureh. He desires it to he known that he made the change beeause the Nazarene Church holds the theory of entire sanctification as a definite seeond work of graee, and beeause that ehurch will not permit its members to use tobacco.

Rev. and Mrs. F. B. Hill, of McDonoghville, La., who visited the World's Sunday Sehool Convention in Glasgow and then visited other plaees of interest in Scotland and England, sailed from Southampton for home on July 16. Brother Hill very kindly sent us a copy of the program of the Sunday School Convention—a very interesting volume—for which he has our thanks.

Rev. R. A. Tucker, presiding elder of the Grenada District, North Mississippi Conference, authorizes the Advocate to announce that Bishop W. N. Ainsworth has appointed Rev. W. C. Newman to bc pastor of the Vaiden and West eharge, and that he has transferred Rev. A. T. Clanton from the Little Rock Conference to the North Mississippi Conferenee and appointed him to be pastor of the Piekens and Goodman eharge, both of these charges being in the Grenada District.

Rev. W. B. Hollingsworth, our pastor at Mentorum, Miss., writes that the work on his chargc is moving forward. The Epworth League is aetive, and the Woman's Missionary Soeiety is a live one. Brother Hollingsworth is the district secretary of the Epworth League for the Seashore District, and he would like for all the secretaries of all the Leagues in the distriet to write him eoncerning their work. He is planning to have a League conference at the Seashore Camp Ground some time during August.

The thirty-fourth annual Bluff Creek Camp Meeting, near Oaknolia, La., will begin on Friday evening, August 8, and eontinue through Sunday, August 17. Rev. R. W. Tueker, of Homer, La., will he the prineipal preacher. A "Bible Hour" will be held every morning at 9 o'eloek, with Mrs. J. M. Henry, Assistant Sunday Sehool Field Seeretary of the Louisiana Conferenee, in eharge. There is a good hotel, under responsible management, on the grounds, and visitors will be cordially weleomed. Full information eoneerning thc meeting may be had by writing to O. E. Townsend, president, or H. C. Lipscomb, secretary, Oaknolia, La.

Mrs. M. E. Hawkins, of Hattiesburg, Miss., widow of Rev. Gahriel Hawkins, who at the time of his death in 1885 was an aetive memher of the Mississippi Conferenee, in renewing her suhscription to the Advocate, tells us that her marriage notice was puhlished in the New Orleans Christian Advocatc the week the Alabama Conference of 1858 met in Maeon, Miss.; that the obituary of her hrother, Edward N. Lawrence, was published in it in 1857, and that her father, H. N. Lawrenee, of Crawford, Miss., was always a subscriber from the first volume; that she, therefore, has read nearly every one of the 3570 issues of the paper, and that she still usually drops everything else to read the Advocate when the postman delivers it.

The death last week of Mrs. Franees A. Harrell removed from Louisiana Mcthodism one of its oldest and most faithful members. She became a member of the Feiieity Mcthodist Church, this eity, in January, 1852, during the pastorate of Dr. H. N. McTyeire, and she retained her membership in that chureh until about two years ago, when she removed it to the eharge served by her son, Rev. R. F. Harrell, a useful member of the Louisiana Conferenee. She was an honorary life member of the Woman's Missionary Soeiety of Feiieity, and was prominent in the missionary activities of the ehurch as long as she was able to render service. The funeral was held from Feiieity Church at 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon of last week, condueted by Rev. Jno. F. Foster, of Lake Providence, La., a lifetime friend of the famiiy, assisted by Dr. W. Winans Drake, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and by the pastor of the ehureh. In addition to Rev. R. F. Harrell, she is survived by two other sons and a large eirelc of relatives and friends, to whom the Advoeate extends sincere sympathy. We hope to have a suitable memoir of this good woman for publication in due time.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the foliowing friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions reeently: Rev. T. J. O'Neil, Roiling Fork, Miss., 2; Rev. S. H. Caffey, Macon, Miss., 4; Rev. A. J. Davis, Hattiesburg, Miss., 2; Rev. A. S. Byrd, Vaughan, Miss., 2.

AN ARTIST FOR GOD.

I talked to a young man to-day who fidgeted to get away. He had an engagement elsewhere, shortiy, and he did not want to be late. His slender fingers played with the pen and the ruier on my dcsk. I think I saw traees of paint on his hands; I know I smelt paint on his elothes. He had just come from his studio, where he paints beautiful pictures.

In the private art galleries of Phiiadeiphia, in mansion homes, are paintings whieh he has done. There is his portrait of Roland S. Morris, American Ambassador to Japan; of Mrs. Craig Biddle, a leader in Philadelphia society; of Mr. and Mrs. Hartman Kuhn, of William Baker Whelan and W. W. Curtin, social and businoss leaders of that great city.

Philadelphia society took him up as a society painter.

But to-day he was in a hurry to go down on Broadway, where, at the eorner of Broome Street, with a erayon and a blaekboard, he would attract the attention of the noonday crowds—and then tell them, as he puts it, the "old, old story of Jesus and his love."

He's a street-eorner "preaeher" in New York City, this one time soelety painter of Philadeiphia.

Whatever shame or whatever scorn attaches to that humble calling he takes with a smiie—and goes on drawing his sidewalk pietures and telling the story.

Therc are many street-corner crowds at the luneh hour in New York City; but none are larger or more interested than his.

And it is not oniy in great and romantic New York that he makes these street talks; in his own little viilage of Fort Lee, aeross the Hudson from New York, he stands on the street eorners eertain evenings every week and uses the taient whieh God gave him to draw his neighbors and all the village folks to hear what he has to tell.

"It doesn't bother me," he toid me, with a laugh. "I gave my art to God long ago and told him to use it as he thought best; I told him I'd throw it away entireiy, if he wanted me to—but he didn't. He told me to take it out onto the sidewalks, and I'm doing it."

Perhaps a great novelist, some day, may tell the story of H. Willard Ortlip, the artist who turned Christian; I've never heard a story like it, anywhere.

He's oniy thirty-seven years old. Light-brown hair, deep-blue eyes, a squarc ehin and perfect white teeth, which show in happy smiles—that's my impression of his faec. He must have been an ideal "society" portrait painter.

You may run aeross his drawings—sometimes signed and sometimes unsigned—in the advertising pages of our leading magazines. Like other artists, he often draws or paints pietures for firms that advertisc.

You may see, now and then, his paintings reprodueed on the covers of the great magazines, with his name duiy affixed.

But when you see his pletures and think of him as an artist you may be sure that however happily he may have done his work in his studio with his paints and oils and brushes, you wiii find him at his happiest, with his stick of chalk and his blaekboard helping to tell the crowds of Broadway how to find the way to a life worth while.—Williiam G. Shepherd, in the Christian Herald.

SIGNIFICANT FACTS ABOUT CUBAN METHODISM AND UNIFICATION.

By Rev. George N. MaeDoncll, M.D.

Brethren ean dweli together in unity when and only when, they respeet eaeh other's rights. The erection of churches in Florida and elsewhere throughout the South by the Methodist Episcopal Church is, with good reason, resented by Southern Methodists as a deliberate and unwarranted invasion of our territory. Fortunately, this unhappy situatoin does not exist in the Island of Cuba, where our church alono represents Methodism. Comparatively few understand that the reason the Methodist Episcopal Church is not in Cuba is that there exists a sort of "gentlemen's agreement"—an agreement, by the way, which for twenty-five years has worked more effectively than the Plan of Separation. It is safe to say that had it not been for the wiso forethought and ecclesiastical statesmanship of Bishop W. A. Candler, the competition and rivalry which for a long time afflicted the work in Mexico, and which still exist in portions of the South, would for the last quarter of a century have hindered and hampered the work in Cuba. As the history of this agreement has never been written, I desire to record some facts relating to it, especially so since we have been reminded recently that gentlemen's agreements are sometimes cast aside as being worn out.

For several years prior to the Spanish-American War, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had a mission in Havana, served by a native Cuban pastor who was a member of the Florida Conference, and whose appointment was read out annually as one of the charges of the Key West District. The American occupation of Cuba opened the island to missionary effort; but how was a new mission of our church to be formed? The General Conference of 1898 had been held and the Board of Missions would not meet again until May, 1899. Bishop Candler, thus confronted with a proposition for which there was no precedent, with characteristic promptness proceeded to create the Cuba Mission by enlarging and expanding the Key West District to includo the entire island. So at the Florida Annual Conference, held in Gainesville, Fla., December, 1898, he appointed all available men to the larger cities of Cuba and read out other places, as Guantanamo and Cardenas, "to be supplied." He went further than this. He read out "San Juan, Porto Rico, to be supplied," and "Ponce, Porto Rico, to be supplied," thereby including Porto Rico in the plan of our work; like the Cuban appointments, its cities made charges in the Key West District of the Florida Conference.

The writer was transferred by Bishop Candler to the Florida Conference and appointed to the American Congregation in Havana, reaching his post on Dec. 31, 1898, the last day of Spanish rule.

On Feb. 2, 1899, Bishop W. X. Ninde, Dr. A. B. Leonard, Missionary Secretary, and Dr. Fisher, presiding elder of the Cleveland, Ohio, District, arrived in Havana. They called on me, and in the course of their conversation disclosed the fact that they had been sent out as a committee to provide for the opening of a mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Cuba. The plan of work they outlined to me was as follows: Havana was to be the headquarters of the mission with a central church, a university and a publishing house. A church and a school were to be placed in each of the five provincial capitals and work in rural communities would follow. Dr. Carlos Dreese, then in tho Argentine Republic, was to be made superintendent, and a number or workers, American and native, were to be brought from Mexico to get the mission started.

I listened carefully and was not slow to express surprise at their coming to Cuba. In behalf of my church I entered a solemn protest against the proposed action, calling their attention to the fact that as our church was already on the ground with appointments covering tho island, their coming would be in violation of tho agreement so recently arrived at by the Joint Commission on Federation. Bishop Ninde interrupted me to remark that this was not a violation of tho agreement, for, being a member of the Commission, he was well acquainted with its provisions. I reminded him that my father, Rev. G. G. N. MacDonell, was also a member of the Commission, and that I knew perfectly well that their action would violato the spirit if not tho letter of the agreement. He then dropped this phase of the subject and proceeded to dwell upon the fact that our pastor at Key West had expressed to them as they stopped over there the wish that the Methodist Episcopal Church would enter Cuba anyway.

Realizing the gravity of the situation, I decided that our leaders, who were in total ignorance of their purpose to establish a mission, should be informed at once. I immediately wrote letters to Bishop Candler and Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Missionary Secretary, telling them of the conversation I had had and giving in detail the plans they had outlined to me. The Lincoln was about to sail, so I secured a launch and went out in the bay to her, personally mailing the letters on board.

The Northern brethren remained in Havana five days, during which time I showed them every attention, visited places of interest with them, and had Dr. Leonard to preach for us. Bishop Ninde pleading indisposition. Passing through the island, they went on to Porto Rico.

What transpired afterwards, I understand, was about as follows: Dr. Lambuth happened to be in New York City attending a conference of all the Missionary Secretaries, so did not get the letter I addressed to him at Nashville; Bishop Candler, upon receiving my letter, inclosed it to Dr. Lambuth with instructions to call at the Mission rooms of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New York and secure further information. Dr. Lambuth did so, receiving confirmation of their plans to enter Cuba. He then, in behalf of Bishop Candler and the Board of Missions, entered an official protest. Their plans were held up and eventually abandoned. After some further negotiations, an agreement was reached that we would withdraw from Porto Rico provided that they should stay out of Cuba. We also agreed to leave the Philippines to them.

This is the gentlemen's agreement under which we are working in Cuba to-day, free from the unseemly rivalry and hurtful waste of funds that always attend the building of altar against altar. Any one can see what it has meant to Methodism in Cuba and Porto Rico, and to the home church as well, that in these two islands each church cultivates its own particular field and respects each other's rights.

Surely, unification could produce no happier results. Sad to relate, unification cannot unscramble the unfortunate situation existing in Florida and elsewhere. Unification will remain a mere euphemism until such a time arrives when the Methodist Episcopal Church admits that its intrusion into our territory is wrong and then take steps to rectify it.

Waycross, Ga., July 12, 1924.

THE OLD PENSIONER'S GIFT.

The minister of an English village sat in his vestry receiving gifts of thanksgiving from the members of his church and congregation. His ministry had been searching and sound, fit to awaken in his people the right spirit of consecration.

The fund was mounting steadily when one of the most prosperous men of the community—a wealthy merchant—entered the vestry. After shaking hands, the merchant drew his check book somewhat ostentatiously from his pocket and proceeded to write a check for fifty pounds. The minister just glimpsed the figure as he was turning to speak to a newcomer, an old-age pensioner, wrinkled and bent with fourscore years of hard toil. The minister greeted him cordially. Laboriously the old man fumbled in his waistcoat pocket and coin by coin put ten shillings down on the table.

"I really ought not to take this from you, my dear friend," said the minister. "You cannot afford it."

"But you must," replied the old man in excited, quavering tones. "You must, sir; I've been saving this up all the year, and I don't want to give to God what costs me nothing."

So the minister accepted the old man's gift and wrote a receipt for him. When he had finished, he glanced round for his wealthy friend. But the man had vanished. The minister wondered whether the attention that he had given to the old pensioner had offended the merchant prince. He took an affectionate farewell of his aged friend, and in his heart thanked God for such noble self-sacrifice.

Late that afternoon his wealthy visitor of the morning burst into the vestry. He shook hands with the minister and placed a check face downward upon the table. "Did you see the amount of the check that I wrote this morning?" he asked.

"Why, yes," replied the minister; "I could not help seeing that it was for fifty pounds."

"And do you remember that old pensioner's gift?" the man continued.

"I do indeed," said the minister.

"Well, look at this," and the man turned the check face upward; it was for two hundred and fifty pounds. "I felt ashamed of myself beside that brave old boy," said the merchant. "All the afternoon I've been fighting my love of money, and at last I, too, have decided that I must not give God what costs me nothing."

Later that day the minister sought out his old pensioner friend and said to him: "John, do you know how much you gave to our fund to-day?"

"Yes, sir," replied the old fellow; "ten shillings."

"Not a bit of it," replied the minister; "your gift amounted exactly to two hundred and fifty pounds plus ten shillings." And he told him the story.—Selected.

THOUGHTFUL FOR OTHERS.

A ragged woman was crossing the corner of a public park in London, where the children of the poor are accustomed to play, many of them barefoot. A burly policeman stationed on the corner watched the woman suspiciously. Half-way across she stopped and picked up something which she hid in her apron pocket. in an instant the policeman was by her side. With a gruff voice and very threatening manner he demanded:

"What are you carrying off in your apron?"

The woman seemed embarrassed and refused to answer. Thereupon the officer of the law, thinking that she had doubtless picked up a pocket-book, which she was trying to make away with, threatened to arrest her unless she told him at once what she had in her apron.

At this the woman reluctantly unfolded her apron and disclosed a handful of broken glass. In stupid wonderment the policeman asked:

"What do you want with that stuff?"

A flush passed over the woman's face, and then she answered simply:

"If you please, sir, I just thought I'd like to take it out of the way of the children's feet."

MRS. EULALEE SUDDUTH TURNER, of North Carrollton, Miss., died June 28. Breath ceased to operate the machinery of her worn and wearied body during the early hours of the day, even before dawn of light. It seems that she went in time to begin the day with Heavenly hosts. For this place, she seemed to her friends, to be ready and prepared, though resigned to the fact that the day was not far distant when she would take her departure. Confident, too, that her hope in Him would be realized beyond the valley of shadows, yet she wished to live if 'twere his will. She wanted to live, not because living was or would be pleasure for her, or that material comfort was promised; she wanted to live for those who were dearer to her than silver or gold; her children first, her friends second. However, believing in the goodness of God and the kindness of her fellow-men, she confided her trust and left her cares. Always faithful in every duty in her home, she found wider usefulness in the work of her church, zealous for its auxiliaries, giving of her strength so long as she could. To God and her friends she is not dead, as pagans often think of their friends, but she resteth from her labors. She awaits the final triumph of her Lord.

HER PASTOR.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, we, the members of the Cockrum Church, Sunday school, and community, have sustained a loss of one of our most highly esteemed members and citizens, MR. J. M. MAXWELL, be it resolved:

1. That in the tragic and untimely death of Mr. Maxwell, our church has lost a member who possessed the fundamental elements constituting a real Christian. He was a converted man, and knew in whom he believed. He was not only born into the kingdom of God, but conversations with his friends recently showed that he lived in an atmosphere of abiding experience and peace.

2. That the Sunday school, of which he was acting superintendent at the time of his death, has lost a worker who was keenly alive to its every interest, and who was laboring zealously to build up the work, and to create a deeper interest in its progress and growth. His last earthly service was for his Master, conducting a Bible study class the night preceding his death. At this hour his theme was the power and efficiency of prayer, and he made a strong appeal to his class to try it out for comfort and peace.

3. That the community of Cockrum has lost a citizen who was ever alert to its every interest and enterprise, always responding cheerfully and happily to any call. His position on moral issues was never in doubt, and practice of what he conceived to be right always kept his moral vision clear.

4. That the members of the church, Sunday school and the entire community extend deepest love and sympathy to his heart-broken companion and large family of devoted children and grandchildren. We pray that the hand of gracious healing may bind up their bleeding hearts. May this great sorrow sweeten and enrich their lives, and strengthen and increase their faith in the God he trusted.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and Times Promoter for publication, and a copy be entered on the minutes of the church register.

Respectfully submitted: Mrs. L. S. Clayton, Mrs. W. L. Harrison, Mrs. C. J. Langston, Committee.

Cockrum, Miss.

Little JESSIE ALEXANDER fell asleep at 4 in the morning of Sunday, June 29. Mentorum charge has lost a little sunbeam, and the bereaved parents have lost a sweet little treasure. This little child was the joy of all who knew her. Always smiling, loving, sweet, affectionate, she had worked her way into the hearts of her many friends, and we will miss her little face much. For a week prior to her death she suffered with a case of acute appendicitis. On Saturday, June 28, she was taken to the Biloxi hospital and operated on, but her little body failed to rally from the shock, and she passed away. We laid her to rest in the Alexander cemetery Monday morning. Her funeral attracted the largest gathering of people at any like event in the vicinity for some time. She has gone to Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Little Jessie was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jess Alexander, of the Mentorum charge, both of whom are members of our church. The services were conducted by Rev. W. B. Hollingsworth.

IGNOBLE PACIFISM.

When our country was engaged in the late European war, no citizen played a sorrier part than did the pacifist. Now his war record has to be buried. He cannot face it before his fellow-countrymen without shame and disgrace and embarrassment.

There is a long, hard and bitter struggle going on betwen Scriptural Christnanity and unsound, atheistic teaching. Great isues are at stake; great principles are to be defended. If there ever was a time for men to quit themselves like men, it is now. Pacifism is ignoble and contemptible, and in the end can bring only shame and disgrace upon the heads of those who practice it. Every man should choose his side and then stand up for it to the best of his ability. This is the only way to follow St. Paul's example and fight a good fight. How shall those who shirk their duty now when the battle is fiercest, and encourage others to do likewise, face their Lord when he comes in glory? Only those who have risked their all in the King's cause can hope to receive reward and praise from him.

THE LATEST WHISKY IMPUDENCE.

We see all sorts of queer things developed in the legal proceedings of these times.

Prosecution of whisky cases has provoked defensive tactics to a degree never before known. Technicalities are multiplied beyond all power of the ordinary human mind to follow their convolutions.

Here is the latest to come to our notice.

A big distillery firm was charged with distributing liquor in violation of the Volstead Act. It had been sending out cases and barrels of whisky under certain assumed permits which were on file in the office of the firm.

In the hearing of the case, the attorney for the distillery company objected to the introduction of these permits as evidence by the Government—on the ground that they were forged and therefore not competent evidence!

At this writing, the case is still in pendency. But if the contention of the defendants shall be sustained by the court, we may next expect a forger, when arraigned, to object to the introduction of the fraudulent letter or promissory note or title deed which he has forged, on the ground that, being forgery, it is not competent testimony.

Why not? The distillery puts out a carload of whisky upon forged permits which were procured by or for distillery officials; and if these are not evidence of its intention to dispose of whisky, and if they are not competent as evidence because they are fraudulent, why should not all forgers go free on the same kind of a plea?

Happily, we are getting some judges on the bench who cut through all these barbed wire entanglements, and adjudicate justice.

And some distilleries and bootleggers and go-betweens who have been conducting this business, are getting a chance to study their own past lives, and to contemplate their future, while they are in retirement behind prison bars.—Christian Statesman.

SICK WOMAN MADE HAPPY

Entirely Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mart, Texas.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to build me up as I was all run-down, nervous and sick. I ached and hurt all over so that I was often compelled to go to bed, and I had to have most of my work done. No medicine seemed to help me until one of my neighbors who was taking the Vegetable Compound insisted on me trying a bottle of it. The medicine helped me from the first, and the best of all is that I can even sew again without that awful, nervous feeling I was used to having. And I used to take crying spells, with such a blue feeling that I cannot explain. Now all that has left me. I feel so cheerful, and I have gained in weight, sleep well and eat hearty. Oh! I wish I had words to express what this medicine has done for me! I am a housekeeper and do everything from the sewing to the washing now and it doesn't hurt me. You may use my letter in any way you wish. I will be glad to help any suffering woman to the road of health and happiness."—Mrs. B. F. BRANNON, 404 Travis Ave., Mart, Texas.

Don't Hide Them With a Veil; Remove Them With Othine—Double Strength

This preparation for the treatment of freckles is so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold under guarantee to refund the money if it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of Othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double-strength Othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

LOUISIANA SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

Rev C. D. Atkinson, Conference Sup't.

The New Orleans District will have two standard training schools this year, one in the city and the other in Houma, La. The Mission Board has granted us the use of the MacDonell Wesley House buildings for the Houma School. This school has secured the following approved instructors: Bible, Dr. W. W. Drake; "The Sunday School," Dr. Alonzo Early; "Pupil Study" Prof. D. S. Rankins; "The Principles of Teaching" Mrs J.M. Henry.

The following New Orleans Sunday School workers are in attendance at Junaluska Training School: Mr. H. P. Wall District Secretary; Mrs. R. H. Harper, Chairman Conference Elementary Council; Miss Cayard and Mrs Bell, of Algiers

"Conference Night" at Lake Junaluska is Monday July 28, at which time the Louisiana delegation here will put on a pageant "A Century of Religious Education in the Land of Evangeline" written by Dr R H Harper, of New Orleans

Dr Thomas Carter of Vanderbilt University, formerly of Louisiana, is giving a Bible course based on the Gospel of St. Mark. Louisiana is well represented in this class.

At the recent meeting here of the Social Service Committee, Louisiana was well represented by Rev. C. C. Miller, of Baton Rouge; Mrs. R. H. Wynn of Shreveport and Rev. H. W. Ledbetter of Arcadia.

Rev. George Stuart, the noted pastor of Birmingham, Ala., gave his famous lecture last night, "When a Woman Becomes a Man, What Then?"

During the month of June the Louisiana Conference issued more teacher-training credits than during the whole year of 1923.

EVERY-DAY TREASURES.

By Emma Gary Wallace.

We do not need to go to the far-away fields of the frozen North, and rugged mountain fastnesses to stand knee-deep on the pebbly beds of racing rivers to search for gold, or to dig for precious gems in the pipes of extinct volcanos.

We have far greater wealth right within our reach and grasp—no matter where they may be located.

After all, the most precious treasures possible to win are those which are actually priceless—and the best of it all is that most of these every-day treasures are ours for the taking. We are not limited in our possession.

Sunshine, fresh air, and pure water are Nature's gifts, and yet it has taken centuries of education to teach people to appreciate these things.

Every-day life has many daily satisfactions, which for preciousness are not comparable with taxable treasures—the joys of friendship, the sweetness of family ties, the splendid senses of seeing, and smelling, and touching, and tasting, the ability to surmount difficulties, and the knowledge that even if our best efforts seem to fail, in the final pattern of Life, every thread will be picked up and woven into lines of enduring strength and beauty.

One of the richest women I have ever known did not possess a large share of this world's goods, but her interest in the people about her, her fine spirit of encouraging and helpful service, her never-failing appreciation of the beauties of Nature, made her rich beyond all estimate.

She had deliberately turned her back upon large wealth to do the things she loved to do. She heard the call and answered it. It was years and years ago that a timid school teacher about to fare forth for the first time sought her counsel.

"Well, how does thee feel?" she asked brightly after first greetings were over.

"Rather frightened," confessed the writer, who was that girl of yesteryear.

"But why?"

"Oh, I am so eager to do my best," was the reply. "But the road is steep and long, and it would be so serious to make a mistake."

The lady smiled again. "Thee has no need to fear," she returned quietly, "for thee has thy sword and buckler to fasten on, and the path up the mountain side leads to the top. Then thee has seen the Vision. Thee is very rich!"

One of the things that are making our American life so feverish and increasing the strain of making both ends meet is the mistake of putting the emphasis in the wrong place.

Simpler living, a deeper joy in the worth-while things of life, and the courage to say and do what is best for us individually, regardless of the pace set by neighbors and friends—all make for contentment, self-respect, the strengthening of family ties, and high thinking. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Christian Herald.

BUTLER'S WET CONNECTIONS.

The following editorial from the New Jersey edition of the American, issue edited by Samuel Wilson, of the New Jersey Anti-Saloon League, relative to the position of Dr Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, will be of interest, and may possibly throw some light upon the position taken by Dr Butler, the only prominent educator of this country who stands for wine and beer. The editorial in part is:

"St Paul has said 'He that is married careth for the things of the world how he may please his wife.' Dr. Butler was brought up a Protestant and as he says under somewhat Puritanical home training but on March 5, 1907, he was married in the home of the bride's sister by the Rev. Father Neill McKinnon, of the Church of St. Ignatius Loyola, to Miss Kate La Montagne, a member of the family of the leading wine merchants of New York City, with big French vineyard and wine-making connections. For seventeen years he has lived, moved, and had his being in the atmosphere of the liquor traffic, and may thus have absorbed its ethical and law-defying standards. When prohibition came, the La Montagnes became bootleggers, and four members of the family—Montagu, Rene M., William A., and Morgan La Montagne—pleaded guilty and served jail sentences in the Essex County (New Jersey) prison. They were club-men of the smart set, who supplied their smuggled liquors to scofflaws. Of course, I would not insinuate that the president of Columbia University knew the criminal conduct of his kindred; but I have never known him to denounce such law-defiance, as he now denounces the fundamental law of the United States, and the mighty army of Protestants who wrote prohibition into that law.

"The moral of this situation is that persons who live in glass houses must never throw stones."—Exchange.

USELESS HURRY.

An American taxicab company recently undertook to find out just how much saving of time there was in recklessly speeding through city streets, dodging other cars and smashing all speed regulations. They made 1,000 test trips: 500 of them at less than twenty miles an hour, observing all traffic regulations and driving etiquette; and 500 of them at reckless speed wherever possible, and trying every little trick and device known to the craft; and they found that while the risk was greatly increased the saving of time was so small as not to be worth noticing.

This is in keeping with the lessons of the long-buried centuries. The man in a hurry seems to be traveling at phenomenal speed and yet in the end he seems to have traveled very little faster than his more careful and unhurried competitor. The speed-fiends of every description do not seem to "get there" much more quickly than their quieter and less rash competitors while the wear and tear of their nervous system seems out of all proportion to their speed. The hospitals are full of human wreckage which are the direct result of our insane policy of "speeding up," and thousands more are on the way to the same untimely fate.

Why not slow up a little? Take time to cool off! Give your nerves a chance to rest! Don't try to fill every minute of your work day with rush orders. High pressure very often means danger, and it seldom means really more efficient toil. One of the very best things for the man in a hurry is to take time to think, to meditate, to commune with the Highest; yet there are plenty of men and women who are afraid to be alone with themselves, and if they happen to have a spare evening at home they are restless and miserable. It is good for men to get away from the crowd; and to get acquainted with themselves; and it is well to recognize that high speed does not always mean great progress. To travel far we sometimes have to travel slowly.—Christian Guardian.

A BETTER MINISTRY.

The Bible is being more efficiently taught than ever before. And this challenges a better ministry, for the layman is coming to know something about religion for himself and the minister who does not fully prepare for his work must be left behind the procession. Religious education not only proposes to train men to a new appreciation of the Word of God, it also undertakes to prevent the leakage whereby the young are ever supposed to go out into the far-away country and be rescued. As one of your own men has said: "The greatest task of the church is not to save the lost, but to save the loss."—Dr. W. A. Shelton, in Fraternal Address to Methodist Episcopal Conference.

EVANGELISTIC CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AT MOUNT SEQUOYAH, JULY 27-AUG. 3.

A great Bible and Evangelistic Conference, to be held under the auspices of the Bureau of Evangelism of the M. E. Church, South, is announced for the Western Methodist Assembly on Mount Sequoyah for the week of July 27-August 3. Dr. R. L. Russell, Secretary of the Bureau and Chairman of the General Committee on Evangelism, will be in charge of the conference.

It is planned to make this week a great occasion for fellowship, for Bible study, for stimulating a greater interest in all forms of evangelistic work; also a time for rest and recreation.

Some of the greatest preachers in Southern Methodism will have places on the program. Among the speakers will be Bishop Warren A. Candler, who will be in attendance on the Conference Aug. 1-3; Bishop William F. McMurry, who will be present July 27-29, and Bishop Samuel R. Hay, who will spend practically all the week at the conference. Dr. Henry W. Bromley, noted general evangelist, will speak on the subject, "The Bible and its Relation to Modern Life," and Dr. Clovis G. Chappell, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, Memphis, Tenn., will speak at different times. The appearance of these speakers on any program insures all who attend the best in program and platform speakers.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

WORLD CHRISTIANIZATION.

The church knows she is facing today the stupendous task of world Christianization. The challenge of its magnificence stirs great souls into action. They realize the necessity of the most thorough and intelligent preparation. A definite program of missionary education and training is indispensable. Every principle of modern methods and material must enter into it. It must be made applicable to every period of life and engage the entire working force of the church. The seventeen thousand Sunday schools of Southern Methodism afford an unprecedented field of opportunity carrying forward such an intensive program of missionary education. Teaching missions for doing missions is the highest type of religious training.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

WELL PUT.

The faith which brings us into salvation is not intellectual orthodoxy. You may believe the Bible from cover to cover and yet not be saved. Hold to the truth. A good working definition of faith is "volitional surrender to intellectual conviction." You are not saved because you are orthodox, but because you surrender yourself to what you believe.—Dr. G. Campbell Morgan.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY IS THE THUMBPRINT OF EXPERIENCE.

This was illustrated by an incident that occurred in a Y. M. C. A. meeting held in the open air, just after the Americans had gone into the fight in France. An able speaker was addressing several thousand men, trying to give them some idea of the initiative and pluck of our men, based on what he had read. While he was speaking, a man in the uniform of a United States Marine, wearing a service stripe, the insignia of service over there, hobbled to the rear of the meeting on crutches and sat down on a bench. Soon a couple of soldiers joined him, and noticing that he was a returned marine, began to ask him questions. He had been wounded while fighting at Chateau Thierry, and began to tell them about the fighting, gesticulating as he warmed up, to help his hearers to understand the various positions, and stooping to draw a map on the ground with his stick. Other soldiers dropped back from the rear seats to hear him. When it became known who he was, and what he was telling, the rear seats emptied and the occupants flocked from the speaker dealing in hearsay to the man handing out actual eye-experiences. And in a short time the speaker in front lost his audience and the fighting man in the rear had it. It was a demonstration of the value of reality in a witness. In fact there can be no real witnessing without this element.

We are called upon to witness as to what Christ has done for us.

"Go home to thy friends," Jesus said to the man out of whom he had cast a devil, "and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee."

He did not tell him to go and witness to the Virgin Birth of Christ, or to the fact that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch, or how the Bible is the inspired Word of God, but to what had actually taken place in his own experience; to the Master's touch on the chords of his life.—Methodist Recorder.

SOWING.

Not so long ago Dr. Edgar J. Swift interrogated more than a hundred business and professional men as to the lawless acts of their boyhood. He sought to get from them an opinion as to the best way of dealing with infractions of right and justice. The unanimous opinion was that reasoning proved the most effective means of steering the youthful along straightforward lines. This revelation is interesting particularly at this time when the country is seething with politics, when almost every lip bends in scorn when the moral fiber of our politicians is considered. Evidently if we would obtain honesty in government we must start further back than the primaries. We must implant a more complete understanding of what actual honesty consists. In our school if a child fails to grasp the principle of an arithmetical problem, we drill until the principle is firmly embedded in the mind. In morals we announce the principle but once and expect the standard to be reached instantly, and maintained. Until we implant a better standard of honesty in the walks of everyday life it is difficult to see how from the ranks of such loose morality we can recruit governmental officials likely to reach that standard of integrity for which the country seems to cry in vain.—Springfield (Tenn.) Herald.

SUNDAY EGGS.

The story comes from a rural community in Morgan County of the women of the community raising funds to pay for their church organ by the sale of eggs laid by their hens on Sunday. Every Saturday evening all the hens' nests in the community are cleaned out, and every Monday morning the ladies of the church gather the eggs that have been laid during the intervening period. These eggs are gathered up and pooled and shipped in crates to the market, where they are sold, and the receipts put into the organ fund. The success of the plan was a foregone conclusion, and the idea which caused it was most appropriate. If the hens insist on "working" on Sunday, it is entirely proper that the product of their labor should be devoted to the Lord's cause.—Florence (Ala.) Times.

MEMBERSHIP CONTEST—LOUISIANA VERSUS FLORIDA.

The Plan.

At the recent Council meeting in Tampa there was launched a church-wide State Inter-Conference Membership contest in which every Conference is asked to enter enthusiastically. It is hoped that we may stimulate each other in the good work of increasing the net membership of our missionary societies for the adults and young people.

The Goal.

The goal set is the largest net gain in adult and young people members by the end of 1924.

The Contestants.

These have been arranged by Mrs. A. V. Haywood, of Nashville and are between Conferences in the same State or in the case of Conferences which are irregular in their geographical boundaries or occupy entire States the following adjustments are made:

Virginia—Baltimore and West Virginia.

Florida—Louisiana.

New Mexico—The two districts of the Pacific.

Denver and Arizona—Northwest.

Helena will be counted in and in the Conferences in Tennessee.

Rules of the Contest.

1. No new member is to be reported until she has paid dues for three months. However any new member who pays three months' dues in advance may be reported at once.

2. The measurement of the new auxiliary is to be reported by a district secretary until it has sent in a pastor's report to the district secretary and Conference treasurer.

Will you not count in the help of your Conference?

3. By securing at once as large net gain through effort to enlist as a paying member in your society every available woman and girl of your church.

4. By reading it close touch with your membership and making a determined effort to hold every member already enrolled, so that there may be as few losses as possible to offset the gain.

5. By reporting progress monthly to Mrs. D. B. Carre, 44 Audubon Boulevard, New Orleans.

6. By reporting the progress made to your district secretary each quarter.

The failure of any one auxiliary to do all these things may keep your Conference from winning in the contest.

MRS. C. F. NIESERGALL,
President, Louisiana Conference.
MRS. D. B. CARRE,
Corresponding Secretary, Louisiana Conference.

A LITTLE TALK WITH MYSELF.

I Am Going to Look at a Few Facts.

The population of the world is estimated at 1,533,000,000. Of these, 495,000,000 are said to be Christians, 240,000,000 Roman Catholics, 165,000,000 Greeks, and 150,000,000 Protestants, 16,000,000 Jews, 200,000,000 Mohammedans, and 915,000,000 heathen. About two-thirds of the people in the world do not profess to call themselves Christians, while somewhere like one-half have never heard the Gospel, although the whole world, with the exception of Arabia and parts of Central Asia, is more or less open to missionary effort.

I Am Going to Study Some Great Words.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Ye are the light of the world."

"As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

"Ye shall be witnesses unto me."

"Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

I Am Going to Ask Myself Some Personal Questions.

Am I going or have I ever gone to the unsaved?

Am I praying for the unsaved?

Am I sending a messenger to the unsaved?

What is my attitude towards "the one-half who have never heard the gospel of salvation?"

I Am Going to Put Certain Conclusions to Myself.

If I give nothing to gospel missions, I shall practically favor the closing down of every missionary enterprise.

If I reduce my usual gifts I shall help bring about a proportionate reduction in missionary workers and efforts.

If I continue my usual gifts I shall help to hold ground already occupied, but there will be no advance.

If I give more than my usual gifts, and pay more there will be an advance in the work of "harvesting" for Christ.

A Final Word.

"And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Selected.

OUTGOING MISSIONARIES TO THE ORIENT.

There will be two outgoing missionary parties of Council Workers this summer. One party of six will sail on the steamship Siberia Maru, of the T. K. K. Line, from San Francisco on Aug. 15. The other party will sail on the steamship Empress of Canada, of the Canadian Pacific Line, from Vancouver on Aug. 14. Bishop Boaz will sail with this second party. The personnel of each party has not been definitely decided. It looks now as though the Korean missionaries will go by the Northern route and the China missionaries by the Southern route. Definite announcement of these details will be made later.

NEW MISSIONARIES SAILING.

Reservations have been made for the steamship American Legion, of the Munson Steamship Line, from New York to Rio de Janeiro, to sail on Aug. 2, for Miss Alice Denison and Miss Ruth Kellogg, who were consecrated at the recent Council meeting and are under appointment to Brazil.

MISS ROSALIE BROWN TELLS OF HER WORK IN BRAZIL.

Miss Rosalie Brown, of Athens, Ga., who sailed for Brazil in 1922, now in charge of the physical education department in Colegio Centenario at Santa Maria, Rio Grande do Sul, writes enthusiastically: "I'm simply charmed with Santa Maria. I love it more and more, and wouldn't change places with any one in the world. The joy of the work is most growing on me, and I get happier and happier in the service of Jesus Christ. The people back home who made this beautiful building possible ought to be very proud of it. Besides my work in the gymnasium, I have three English classes, a class in Bible, which I am trying to teach in Portuguese, a class in American history, and a class of boys in manual training."

BIBLE READING IN SCHOOL.

The Catholics, Jews, and some few Protestants have always fought against Bible reading in the public schools. They argue that it is a sectarian book and that teaching or even reading from it in our schoolrooms is an infringement of religious liberty. This in face of the fact that we print "In God We Trust" upon our coins, have chaplains in our army and navy, use the Bible in our course, and observe religious holidays, such as Christmas and Thanksgiving. An illogical argument to say the least!

It is interesting to note that the bill providing for the daily reading of the Bible in the common schools of Kentucky was signed late in March, 1924, to become effective in ninety days. It must be read in every classroom every day in the presence of the pupils under this act, and the penalty for failure to comply with its provisions is the revocation of the teacher's certificate. They do not believe in half-way measures in Kentucky. A law similar to this was passed by the RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism, when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Bushnell says, "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all scientific treatment, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." Annually use organic Nuxated Iron to build up red blood, strength and endurance.

There are thousands of people who are going all breaking down at this time of life when they should be enjoying that perfect health which carries defiance to disease simply because they are not aware of the condition of their blood. Without organic iron, your blood carries no oxygen, and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food so what you eat does you no good. It is like putting coal into a stove without fire. You can now obtain organic iron like the iron in your blood, and like the iron in spinach, lentils, and apples from any druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron. Nuxated Iron also contains the nuclein chemical constituent of active, living nerve force. It is, therefore, a true blood and nerve tonic. It helps create and rebuild new and stronger red blood cells. It enables nerve force, which is stored in the nerve and brain cells of man. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down men and women in two weeks' time. The manufacturers guarantee successful results to every purchaser or they will refund your money.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, GLASGOW, JUNE 26, 1924.

Nine resolutions were adopted. Following the general words of appreciation, the following statement was made concerning world brotherhood and peace: "This Convention views with profound concern the long-continued national jealousies and racial antagonisms, and expresses its deep conviction that these things are contrary to the will and purpose of the Eternal and Universal Father, and should be replaced by the spirit of Christianity, which makes for brotherhood and peace. It therefore earnestly calls upon all Sunday school people throughout the world to promote, by every means in their power, and especially by prayer and teaching, by example and co-operation in service, the coming of that Kingdom, which alone can secure on earth peace and goodwill towards men."

The declaration on total abstinence and prohibition was: "This Convention, recognizing the Sunday school as the chief educational department of the church, strongly holds that it should be a vital force in creating and maintaining public opinion in favor of total abstinence from intoxicating liquor and the prohibition of the manufacture and sale thereof. It urges upon leaders and workers to use the Sunday school movement as a powerful agency in promoting world-wide prohibition by appropriate instruction, for which adequate place should be found in the lesson courses and by the use of the total abstinence pledge; and it calls upon every officer, teacher, and scholar to promote by precept this great moral and social movement among the youth of all nations."

Child Welfare was thus emphasized: "The Convention, in the light of the incarnation and mission of our Lord, and in the belief that the hope of the world lies with the young and the yet unborn, urgently advocates the adoption in all lands of such standards for child-welfare as will increasingly secure for children everywhere their essential rights. And this Convention calls upon Sunday schools and other Christian workers to give leadership in a world campaign for a higher valuation of child-life and to devote service to national and local movements toward the practical application of the gospel to the betterment of the world's children."

Emphasis was placed upon the need for Sunday school leadership: "The Convention is of the opinion that the time is ripe for a forward movement for religious education through the Sunday school. To this end, trained and efficient leadership is of vital importance. It strongly recommends that a theoretical and practical course in religious education be included in the training of candidates alike for the ministry at home and on the mission field. It welcomes the increasing success of those colleges set apart for religious education, commends the opportunity they offer for training in Sunday school leadership, and rejoices in the establishment of colleges for the better equipment of an indigenous leadership in the mission field."

The immediate program was defined: "This Convention expresses its deliberate judgment that in the Sunday school and its auxiliaries, the church of God possesses its most effective instrument for world evangelization. It, therefore, earnestly recommends an immediate advance along the whole line, especially by the steady recruiting of unreached children and young people and of fresh teachers; the promotion of leadership and teacher training; the supply of lesson courses to meet the needs of each field; the provision of more adequate buildings and equipment; the development of instruction and auxiliaries; and by the stimulation of missionary enterprises and other Christian activities."

The observance of International Golden Rule Sunday, Dec. 7, 1924, in the interests of the tens of thousands of orphan children and refugees of "Bible Lands" was endorsed.

The present challenge was announced: "The Convention is convinced that the present world situation constitutes a rare opportunity and a startling challenge to Christian churches and Sunday schools to improve and extend their work of Bible instruction and of educational evangelism, and to pursue with faith and courage the task to which the World's Sunday School Association is committed of bringing the children and young people of every land, and in every language, to the knowledge of God in Christ, through living teachers of revealed truth, and so, in time, to secure the world against the calamity of war; and it sends its heartiest greetings to the Sunday school workers throughout the world, and calls for many new volunteers to dedicate their service and wealth in this best and most hopeful of capital causes."

OUR BOYS A GREAT NATIONAL ASSET.

"The boy is looming large upon the horizon as worthy of special attention. Our hope lies in our children as never before. The boy of to-day becomes the factor of to-morrow in the replacement of America's manpower. The strongest bodies and the clearest minds are needed now as at no other time. The wisest care we can, therefore, bestow upon our boys is the surest investment for our country's future. They must be made strong in every fiber. Their minds must be wisely trained; their hearts must beat strong and right. The responsibility of the American father is suddenly increased a hundredfold. For, truly, as we sow so shall we reap, and never was it so necessary and so vital that the harvest of American men of the future shall be productive of the best."—Edward W. Bok.

PURPOSE OF FATHER AND SON WEEK.

To keep alive the very best in American home life for the growing boy.

To get fathers to renew their interest and re-consecrate themselves to their paternal obligations.

To lead sons to deeper respect and appreciation for their fathers and for their homes.

To lead both fathers and sons to recognize the church and Sunday school as necessary to the finest development of their character and to co-operate in the work and support of the church in extending and making effective in every-day life the will of God.

To acquaint fathers more intimately with simple principles of boy psychology.

To encourage fathers and sons to accept in a larger way their privileges of citizenship.

To emphasize the necessity for home's beginning early with boys the training in physical, mental, spiritual, social and economic activities.

To create interest on the part of fathers and sons in nature study, woodcraft, and God's great out-of-doors.

Father and Son Week for this year is Nov. 9-15.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Virginia house, but met defeat in the senate.

The Supreme Court of California has also acted on this matter and handed down a decision declaring the Bible is not a sectarian book, that it does violence to no creed, and providing that it shall be read in the schools of the State.

The public regards the Bible as the source of moral training. Surely it would be a woeful mistake because of differences of interpretation to exclude it from our schoolrooms.

To have the Bible read daily in our public schools in Louisiana should be our constant prayer. If the womanhood of our entire church would work unitedly for this one aim, it would be realized. Let us work and pray for this one thing.

REVIVAL FIRES BURNING IN BRAZIL.

Rev. C. L. Smith, of Porto Alegre, Brazil, writes of the great revival in that city and elsewhere in Brazil. He says: "Central Church, Porto Alegre, has never been so crowded in all its history. One hundred and eighteen new candidates were enrolled. Rev. Derley Chaves did the preaching. The Institutional Church, this city, enrolled one hundred and eight new candidates. We have had fine meetings throughout the Conference. During the last two months about fourteen hundred new believers have been enrolled as probationers. Our schools are crowded."—Missionary Voice.

ARE YOU RICH?

There has never been a time perhaps in the history of the world when a rich man could do so much for the welfare of society as he can do at the present time—if he has the desire to do so. Every moral and religious movement needs energizing—and money is stored-up energy. By its release, tremendous energy can he released—for weal or woe. We are thinking just now of our educational institutions. If some of the rich men of Mississippi, for example, would invest some of their wealth in Millsaps College, Grenada College, Whitworth College, what forces could be set in operation and kept at work forever—for the blessings of the oucoming generations of that great commonwealth! Are you a rich man? What is your money doing?

WHY GO TO CHURCH.

A great many people go to church every Sunday; but in every community there are men and women, some of whom very seldom attend a religious service, and many of whom never go to the house of God. Are there good reasons for going to church, and what are some of those reasons?

1. Professed Christians should go to church, first, because they have promised to go. One of the voluntary obligations assumed by those who become members of the Methodist Church is to "attend upon its ordinances." This promise is not forced by any form of compulsion from an unwilling applicant for membership, but it is freely and voluntarily made. Being thus made, it becomes a test of sincerity. The keeping of one's word is everywhere rightly looked upon as an indispensable mark of moral integrity, of uprightness of character. To call a man a liar is to bring against him an accusation that involves the sum total of his self-respect, an accusation that is indignantly repelled as a reflection upon the honor of the one against whom it is brought. Simple respect for one's word, therefore, should make every member of the church a regular attendant upon the services of the church.

2. In the second place, professed Christians should go to church because the world expects them to do so. The Christian claims to have something that the non-Christian does not have; he claims to stand for a mode of life that is far superior to that which the non-Christian accepts; he has yielded allegiance to a ruler whose kingdom is not of this world, whose laws make men better, happier, holier. The church is the one institution among men which embodies, enforces, and propagates the high ethical, moral and religious standards of its Head, and the world expects—and it has a right to expect—that those who have accepted its teachings should attend regularly upon its services. The world is always looking with critical eyes at the church, and when it sees church members neglecting its services and staying away from its portals, it immediately begins to wonder why they should claim so much and practice so little. The indifferent church member is one of the greatest obstacles to the success of the church in any given community.

3. In the third place, professed Christians should go to church because it is the simplest and easiest way to show their faith by their works—and one of the surest. Not every member of the church can contribute largely to its budget or take a leading part in its activities—but practically every one can attend its services. Going to church is an easy thing, a simple thing, yet it shows to the world a consistency of practice with profession that is tremendously powerful as a witness to the reality of faith and the blessedness of the Christian life.

4. But most of all the professed Christian should go to church because he stands constantly in need of the means of grace that it alone supplies. The Christian life to be sustained must be nourished, and it must be nourished regularly and adequately. The services of the church, with the reading of the Scriptures and the exposition and application of the truth contained therein, the worship in song and prayer, and the fellowship of like-minded people, furnish a means of grace that cannot be neglected by those who really are concerned for their spiritual welfare. The Christian must go to church to maintain his Christian experience.

But there are good reasons why those who are not members of the church—not even professing Christians—should go to church. We merely suggest some of them:

1. Every man needs to come definitely into contact with those spiritual forces and influences that minister to the development of that part of his life that craves expression apart from that which is purely sensuous and material. Just as the physical body now and then needs to get away from the heavy atmosphere of the lowlands and experience the exhilarating tonic of the mountain air, so the normal mind needs to get away from the cares and vexations of every-day life and rest in the calmness of a period of mental reflection and spiritual contemplation. A man does not have to be even religiously inclined to be benefited by a religious service.

2. Every person in a community, whether religious or not, owes a certain debt to the institution which helps to maintain property values, makes life more secure, and contributes largely to the development of a social order in which decent people can live happily. The agnostic and the atheist inevitably enjoy the benefits of an institution with which they are not alliliated and with which they profess to have no sympathy; for purely selfish reasons, therefore, they should make some acknowledgment of these benefits by attendance upon the services of the institution by which they are so greatly blessed. "Show me, if you can," in effect said a famous writer, "a spot ten miles square upon the face of the earth where the life of man or the virtue of woman is safe, apart from the influence of Christianity, and I will renounce the Christian religion."

3. Every citizen should encourage and support, at least by his attendance upon its services, the best organization that has yet been devised for the promotion of altruistic and moral ideals and standards among men. There were no charitable and benevolent institutions before the Christian era—and those we now have would disappear if the world should lose all knowledge of the teachings of Jesus and blot out the influence of those teachings upon human nature since his gospel was proclaimed. It is the church, as the exponent of the teachings of Jesus, that can rightfully claim the credit for the vast philanthropic movements that seem to us today to be a very part of life itself. Effective altruism has its source in the gospel of Christ, and the altruist owes a debt to the church of Christ that he ought to acknowledge, whether he does or not.

Those who go to church do well—let them not become weary in well-doing; those who do not go to church, whether professing Christian or not, ought to go.

POOR VISION.

The Eyesight Conservation Council of America declares that over half the workers in the United States engaged in building motor cars lack normal vision, the percentage running as high as 56 in one of the largest automobile plants. Perhaps this explains why so many things go wrong with the mechanism of the average car. We have not made a careful investigation, but we are inclined to believe that more than half the drivers of automobiles also suffer from defective vision—either that or imperfect co-ordination of the mental faculties. Blind people and mental defectives ought to be stopped from driving cars.

DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

It may not be amiss to remark that the Conference year is fast drawing to a close and that much yet remains to be done in many of our churches for the winding up of a satisfactory year's work. It is to be hoped that boards of stewards will not be lax in bringing their collections up to the point where there will be no "blood-sweating" process in the last few weeks before Conference in order to bring up all collections in full. "A stitch in time saves nine," is a proverb that applies to church finances as well as to many other things. There is still enough time to do what needs to be done—but there is no time to waste.

WEARING OUT LOVE.

"You'd die before you'd hurt me Intentionally?" True;
But is it not, O dearest,
The thing you mean to do?
It's what you do unthinking
That makes the quick tear start;
The tear may be forgotten,
But the hurt stays in the heart;
And though I may forgive you
A dozen times each day,
Yet each forgiveness wears, dear,
A little love away—
As the impatient river
Wears out the patient sand,
Or the fickle ocean
Wears out the faithful land.
And one day you'll be grieving
And chiding me, no doubt,
Because so much forgiving
Has worn a great love out.

THE UNIFICATION VOTE.

By Bishop John M. Moore.

The vote of the General Conference at Chattanooga July 4, 1924, on the Plan of Unification is full of interest to all parties, whether for or against unification. The announced vote was 297 to 75, but the published vote shows 298 to 74. Our study must necessarily be based at present on what the published records show.

Of the 74 votes against the plan of unification, 40—more than half—were from Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina, States having a total vote of 64 and a church membership of 470,689; the 34 votes were from all the rest of the church with a total vote of 332, and a church membership of 2,007,934. That is an interesting fact. From all the territory west of the Mississippi River, with a church membership of 785,000, and with a total vote of 140, only 5 were against the plan. That is another interesting fact. Missouri, with a total vote of 26; Arkansas, with a vote of 20; Oklahoma, with its 16; Louisiana, with its 8, went solidly for unification. Texas, with its 64 votes, had only 3 in the negative, and they in the Northwest Texas Conference. One vote in the Arizona Conference and one in the Pacific represented the total opposition in all our far western work. Delegates from the four established Missions, Japan, Siberia, Texas, Mexican and Western Mexican, were present without vote, but all were for unification. No representative of the 55,500 communicants in all our mission fields has yet raised his voice against unfication. These are speaking facts which cannot be disregarded or even regarded lightly.

The border line east of the Mississippi River also reveals interesting facts. In that territory comprising Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia and the Baltimore Conference there were only 5 negative votes. Two Conferences, the Kentucky and the West Virginia, were solid. Taking the Conferences in Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, with a church membership of 610,000 and a total vote of 80 in the General Conference, only 9 were against the plan. Florida Conference had only two negative votes. Georgia, with its 30 votes, had 8 against it. Tennessee, with 38 votes, had 9 against the plan. The border territory east of the great river voted largely and strongly for unification.

Where is unification regarded as being most needed? On the mission fields. There they are for the plan. In Oklahoma and Missouri, in New Mexico, Colorado and the far west. There they are for the plan. In Illinois, Eastern Kentucky, West Virginia, the Baltimore Conference and the Florida Conference. There they voted overwhelmingly for the plan. Where is unification considered least needed and where would its coming have little or no effect upon existing church conditions? Unquestionably in Alabama, Mississippa, and South Carolina. It is there that the opposition is most pronounced. Where unification is a real practical issue there the people have voted strongly for the plan presented. This fact is worthy of very serious consideration by those who would vote against it.

The opposition declares that this plan will not work, that it will not accomplish the real purpose of unification. The men and women in the west, on the border, and wherever the two churches are in competition, and who will be most affected by unification have shown their confidence in its workability by voting their approval in no uncertain measure. It is not a luxury that those on the border are asking, but a practical necessity in church life. They are not theorizing about the workableness or the non-workableness of the plan. They propose to make it work by the spirit, purpose and methods which they expect to put into it. The opposition is largely located where no local conditions require that they make the plan work.

It would not be fair to claim too much for unification by the facts pointed out. Not every one west of the Mississippi River or along the border or down in Florida and Louisiana is, or will be for unification. No one expects that. But it would be a rather bold assertion to say that the members in the General Conference did not fairly represent their constituents. They came to Chattanooga out of the atmosphere of their home territories, which two months of discussion has produced, and to claim that they were unmindful of and unfaithful to the sentiment and will of their constituents is to discount the character and representativeness of the outstanding men and women who came as delegates. The vote in the General Conference can scarcely be considered as other than the voice of the church in all the respective sections.

The leadership of the church to an unusual extent has spoken and largely in favor of unification. Only the heads of the delegations from the Alabama, Arizona, Illinois, Pacific and Upper South Carolina Conferences voted in the negative, while the heads of the other 38 Conferences voted in the affirmative. Of the 20 colleges and university presidents and professors in the General Conference, only one voted against the plan. Our educators and our students throughout the church, whenever they have spoken, have done so in favor of unification. Then there are our women to whom, if to any one, fears of social relations would appeal. How do they stand? Of the 21 women in the General Conference only one voted in the negative. The women of the church who make up the leadership in our General and Conference missionary work are all but unanimously favorable to unification. Only one connectional officer has declared against unification. The church press, excepting that in Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, supports strongly the plan of unification. Have all these been hoodwinked or hypnotized and rendered utterly incapable of seeing the impracticability, the snares, and the inevitable hazards of this plan if they really exist? Why is it that so large a portion of the leadership of the church has found the plan practicable, adequate, desirable and defensible? That this is true, the facts which the analysis of the unification vote reveal amply and unmitakably make clear.

What use is to be made of the facts here deduced? It is difficult to answer. Facts to partisans carry different values. The argument in the debate at Chattanooga changed the votes of very few, if any delegates. The estimate of the vote made three weeks before the General Conference practically tallied with the actual vote taken. The men were there largely with minds made up to win a victory on one side or the other, and the fight only entrenched each party. Defeat does not often convince the defeated. With another chance to win or to lose, the battle array may be maintained. Already persons are saying, "Can we beat them in the Annual Conferences?" But to my mind the war spirit is a poor spirit for the church, whatever it may be elsewhere. The question may be "can we defeat them?" but it does seem that some other question should now take precedence over this. Some of them are: Why did the Conferences in the West, along the border, in the localities where there is competition, and in the mission fields vote so overwhelmingly for unification? Why did the opposition mobilize largely in the lower South and in the sections where the two churches are not in competition? Why is it that the connectional officers who deal with the entire church and the bishops in charge of foreign fields favor unification so strongly? What would the lower South lose if it joined the border sections in their vote for unification? What would the West and border sections and the mission fields lose for themselves if they went over to the position of the lower South? The question is not, "Who can win next time?" but rather "What do the facts in the present situation indicate should be the course of the church?" The primary question henceforth in the lower South must necessarily be "Shall we try further to deny the West, the border, and the foreign fields by a militant minority that which they have declared so unmistakably that they urgently need and ardently desire?" While that in the West, on the border and the mission field should be, "What can we do further to reassure the people of the lower South against their fears and convince them of the urgency of our needs and the adequacy of the plan for the consummation of the full unification desired?" Efforts to answer these questions conscientiously cannot fail to be productive of a beneficial atmosphere.

The finest fact of the Chattanooga General Conference was the superb Christian spirit which prevailed. When the entire matter is at end, may the record bear incontrovertible evidence that this same spirit of mutual consideration and brotherly love has never departed from our Zion.

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are still rambling hither and thither on the Mediterranean, but three more days will find us beginning our inland journey through Syria, Palestine, and Egypt.

Last Wednesday we spent in Algiers. The city to-day is half French and half native. There is nothing particularly interesting about the architecture, but the situation is unusually picturesque. The city stretches from the water's edge up the side of a mountain which curves around the harbor. The Arabic quarter is threaded by narrow, steep, winding, and dirty streets; and is thronged by every variety of petty peddler and insistent beggar that the western mind could possibly think of, and an endless variety whom he cannot know until he sees for himself. The people seem to run true to their racial traditions. They are a lot of dirty hucksters who have certainly inherited the piratical instincts of their fathers. Their business methods are as primitive as their designs are piratical. Our ship was coaled by a tribe of half-naked Arabs, who jabbered and fought while they packed the coal on their heads. In the windows of European stores were placards which read: "Store closed from 12 to 4:30 o'clock." They sleep in the middle of the day. The Arab sits and dozes in his market booth, and no oral bombardment will secure his attention. The wonder to me is that some enterprising Yankee has not introduced a new style in trade methods, and waked these rude and unprogressive shopkeepers who follow the style of a thousand years ago.

On Sunday morning we steamed into Piraeus, the port of Athens. We lost no more time than was necessary to meet the customs requirements and find a guide. My mind was not occupied with the palaces and theatres of modern kings, nor with the British navy, which chanced to be visiting Athens that day. My interest was in the drama of two thousand five hundred years ago, when Pericles and those superb artists established a rule from the Acropolis which neither war nor desolation and misfortunes have been able to destroy. I am frank to say that I do not understand the mind whose profoundest emotions are not stirred by ancient Athens.

There were disappointments connected with the visit to the Acropolis, and to the other ruins. They were due to the changes which have been wrought since Pericles adorned those heights. But after all exceptions have been made, a day in Athens must be a high day in the life of any man.

A sight of Mars Hill had the effect of upsetting some of the contributions which my mind seems to have made to St. Paul's historic discourse on that spot. I had thought of Mars Hill as a garden to which the social and intellectual giants of antiquity repaired for a discussion of the principles and ideas which interest people of open vision. But Mars Hill is a great boulder projecting from the side of the hill, on the top of which is the Acropolis. It is as bare and bald as any crag of the Rockies. All the eminences about Athens are rocky and bare. The kings and nobles lived and consulted in the theatres and temples of the Acropolis, and Mars Hill was probably the resort of philosophers and speculative cults. They were of the humbler folk whose thoughts and deeds continue to rock the world. St. Paul spoke in a forum whose uneven floor bore the markings of Eternal Genesis and whose vaulting roof was set with the stars of the Infinite Designer. Time and the invader have marred and wrecked the splendid monuments of the age of Pericles, but the forum of the great apostle continues to proclaim the glorious gospel: "The foundation of God standeth sure."

ONENESS OF HUMANITY AND VARIETY OF RACES.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

St. Paul, addressing the Areopagites at Athens, said: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell in on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitations; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of them." (Acts xvii:26-27.)

In all literature can be found no more clear and comprehensive statement of the creation and providential purpose of nationalities than is found in this inspired declaration of the great Apostle to the Gentiles.

He declares that while human nature is one and the same in all men and all nations, God has overruled the rise of nationalities and determined national boundaries for the fulfillment of the supreme purpose that mankind everywhere should seek and find their heavenly Father.

This teaching of St. Paul has been denied in various forms of contradiction by men who felt themselves wise enough to correct the inspired utterance of eternal truths; but some of their contradictory theories, which they affirmed so confidently in the past, have been exploded, and others, still held with equal assurance, are foredoomed to final rejection.

For example, when St. Paul said God had "made of one blood all nations of men," his assertion was regarded as preposterous nonesense. Every nation then held itself aloof from all other nations, and looked upon them with a measure of contempt because of their supposed inferiority of nature and history.

The Greeks called all other peoples barbarians, and the Jews characterized all the outlying races of men as Gentile dogs, while the Romans, with imperious pride, dominated all but themselves as simply "the others."

The idea of a universal religion for universal human nature was scouted with the most derisive condemnation.

When St. Paul made defense of himself before his Hebrew fathers and brethren at Jerusalem, they heard him with the greatest patience and attention until he told them that God had commanded him to leave Jerusalem, saying, "Depart: for I will send thee far hence to the Gentiles." Then, says the historian of the Acts, "They gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live." (Acts xxii:21-22.)

Thus they rejected with heated intolerance the idea of a religion equally adapted and equally necessary to both Jews and Gentiles.

In like manner the Gentile opponents of Christianity, then and in later centuries, repudiated with perfect contempt the conception of a common humanity with a universal religion. So spoke Celsus, Porphyry, and others.

Indeed, until comparatively recent times the scientists have rejected Paul's idea that God has made all nations of one blood. They have taught not the unity of the human race, but the varieties of racial stocks, insisting that the white, black, red and yellow races could not have had by any possibility a common origin and ancestry.

In more recent years they have gone to the opposite extreme, and have affirmed that all men have sprung from the anthropoid ape.

But Paul's teaching stands as unshaken truth, while scientific speculations whirl about like weathercocks turned by changeful winds.

Everywhere the doctrines of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man are proclaimed now as established beyond all doubt or question.

But these great and precious principles are being applied by many in a most unscriptural and unreasonable manner. Extreme men would have all racial lines effaced and all national boundaries wiped off the map of the earth, in order to make way for an impossible and undesirable form of sentimental internationalism. This cannot be.

God has made "all nations of one blood," but it is equally true that he has "determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation, that they should seek the Lord."

Racial lines and national boundaries are divinely ordained for the achievement of religious ends. So St. Paul taught at Athens, and so all history teaches.

Miscegenation between races of different character works moral disorder and human degradation. It rejects the ordinances of God for the purity of racial stocks, and sets at naught the religious purpose designed to be fulfilled through the varieties of human nature. Mongrelism is a monstrous type. It hinders human progress and withstands the providential government of mankind.

Not less hurtful are indiscriminate migrations of all sorts of peoples into one country. They engender conflicts and inflame the most dangerous antagonisms.

The American people have ignored this plain truth in the past, and they are now beginning (not too soon) to see the error of their way.

Covetous capital, seeking cheap labor, has subsidized and stimulated an excessive and dangerous species of immigration. This danger was brought alarmingly in view during the World War. We found thousands among us who were not of us or with us. We had multiplied thousands of foreign elements who had not been assimilated. Into our political system had been taken far more foreign bodies than it could digest. And the peril of such a condition has not yet passed.

We have been fond of talking about our country as "a melting pot," in which illimitable numbers of dissimilar substances might be poured and fused into a homogeneous mass.

But the "melting pot" theory does not conform to facts. The fusing process has failed to operate as rapidly and as effectually as the case demands. A great bulk of immigrants have refused to melt and to be fused into a new and nobler mass.

No right-minded—certainly no Christian man—will look with any degree of allowance upon an anti-foreign agitation. The incitement of racial prejudices and national antipathies cannot be deprecated too earnestly or denounced too strongly.

But it must be candidly confessed that foreign immigration to the United States has been far too great and far too swift.

It must be limited to the measure of the capacity of the nation for safe assimilation. It is not good for other nations, or for our country that immigration be allowed to run longer in such an immense volume.

Migrations are most critical movements, and they have often led to wars and created age-long antagonisms between nations. The provinces of Alsace-Lorraine exemplify this principle.

Emerson said, "America seems to be the last effort of divine Providence on behalf of the human race," and so it does.

Our country cannot ignore its international obligations, or neglect its duties to other lands. It would be as unsafe as it would be unwise to treat the wounded peoples over seas as the priest and the Levite treated the unfortunate man who had fallen among thieves on the Jericho road. It is both dangerous and disgraceful for us to avert our eyes from distressed Europe, and pass by on the other side in heartless indifference.

But we shall not be able to do our duty by other nations if we fail to preserve our own national characteristics whereby we are enabled to aid and bless them.

It is well, therefore, that we now have laws restricting immigration. They are not the expression of a narrow and selfish policy. They are safeguards to the life and progress of our nation. For conditions to have continued as they have been for many years past would have been disastrous to our country as well as hurtful to other lands.

Since the close of the World War, many millions of people have desired to emigrate to the United States, and, but for our laws restricting immigration, they would have poured into our country like a submerged tidal wave.

That would not have been good for the prosperity of Europe or for the peace of America.

Already there are in our country quite enough discordant elements. There are class collisions in commerce and industry and dangerous blocs in politics.

We need no more blocs, whether industrial or political. Least of all, we do not need foreign blocs composed of immigrants from different lands, and contending with each other and with all the rest of the people.

Government blocs mean the tyranny of an organized minority over the unorganized majority. A tyrannical monarchy is no more oppressive than that.

We need time to apply wholesome and elevating influences to the foreign elements already among us, to the end that the population of the country may become more homogeneous and more harmonious.

The best solvent for this problem is a widespread revival of religion throughout the country, purifying and pacifying all classes from ocean to ocean. Such a visitation of grace would be an immeasurable blessing to America, and its saving influence would pass over the seas and bless many other nations.

The greatest foreign mission work the American churches can do to-day is that which is at their doors. God has sent to them many millions of unsaved men and women and children who wait for their healing and helpful ministrations of evangelical Christianity, dispensed in the tenderest spirit of brotherly kindness.

Let them enter with redoubled efforts this great and effective door of opportunity and make the most of it.

There is little room in the United States just now for any great increase in the number of foreigners, and there is no place at all for an American who will not treat with justice and kindness the foreigners already among us.

God bless our beloved country and lift upon it the light of his countenance and give it peace!

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Since the first day of July we have had unusually cool weather. Sleeping under blankets and coverlets, lighting fires in the early mornings and feeling a bit shivery when first rising, is not the ordinary temperature of Indepenednce Day. Snow in Illinois, geese flying south in Texas, fierce, destructive tornadoes in Ohio, with a General Conference and Democratic convention in session at the same time keeps us busy thiuking, and stirs things considerably. But this week of glorious, bracing weather has passed, and today the intermittent fires of the sun are again making up for the loss of time. "'Twas ever thus from childhood's hour," the extraordinary, the irregular, the unusual, are over the disorder of the day. When one thinks of the tremendous forces in nature, the earth with its throbbing heart of fire, the vast envelope of air about this planet, with the great sun pouring or withholding its heat, the ice caps of Arctic and Anarctic climes, the torrid heat of equatorial regions and then men at work denuding the forest lands, and thus stripping hills and valleys of their garments of protection,

"Change and decay on all around I see;
Oh, Thou, who changeth not, abide with me."

We poor mortals, like ants on a mole hill, are running to and fro, each chasing his transient calling, while the great stars shine serenely on in heavens above, the vast rivers flow onward to the sea, while Old Dame Nature, smiling or frowning, as her prankish moods may suit, keeps her tryst and guards her own. Heat or cold, rain or shine, storm or calm, Nature is in God's keeping. Faith takes up the scroll, that weak human vision may not read, or with trembling hands has dropped, and reads the old, old lessons anew. Across the street I saw a father kiss his baby boy as the little fellow climbed down the car into the dooryard, and the father hurried on to his daily toil—and I thought love is changeless, abiding, eternal, for which and all other riches of grace, I am glad and grateful.

RUSTON DISTRICT NOTES.

As I am now nearing the end of my third round of quarterly conferences, I find the work progressing in each charge. Rev. J. W. Faulk and his people are co-operating, and the outlook is fine.

Rev. T. W. St. John is hard at work, and the Spring Hill people always do their part well.

The Gibsland people seem to think that they have the best plan for their finances, and that Rev. C. E. McLean is the best preacher in the Conference.

Rev. W. H. Jordan is making his fourth year at Winnfield the best.

Our third quarterly conference at Bernice was remarkable in that we had five preaching services—two services and the quarterly conference on Saturday, and three preaching services, with the Lord's Supper at each, on Sunday. There are only three churches on the charge. Rev. H. W. Jordan is leading his forces well.

* * *

The good people of Homer voted their pastor a vacation, but it is going to be hard for Brother Tucker to take much vacation. He is too energetic.

Rev. A. F. Stem is filling out the work at Farmerville well.

Rev. J. O. Bennett has had to be relieved of his work at Athens on account of ill health. While this is sad, Brother Bennett is cheerful and hopeful. Rev. David Tarver, of Centenary College, is supplying the work.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard's people gave him a trip to the General Conference at Chattanooga.

The good people of Haughton and Doyline are co-operating well with Brother E. J. Buck, their pastor.

Rev. L. W. Smart has led his people in building a splendid and much needed parsonage on the Clay circuit.

Rev. D. F. Anders, pastor at Cotton Valley, gave us a good report of the revival meeting conducted by Rev. Dan Kelley.

The Jonesboro and Hodge work has made splendid progress during the year. Rev. J. M. Boykin reported a fine meeting at Hodge.

Our Men's Bible class meeting at Ruston on the 29th of June was a great success. Five hundred and twenty-two men from the different parts of the district were present. Prof. R. E. Smith, of Centenary College, made a splendid talk to the men's classes. Brother Joyner, the pastor of the Ruston church, preached a splendid sermon at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon we met again for the purpose of completing our work. Talks from A. J. Gearheard, W. M. Dees, and others were very inspiring. We all went home with a new vision. The place selected for the next meeting, which will be on the fifth Sunday in August, was Minden.

Time and space forbid me to tell all the good things that are being done by pastors and people, who are untiring in their work.

I want to thank all concerned for my trip to Chattanooga.

ADDITIONS TO MILLSAPS FACULTY.

Millsaps College announces the election of Dr. J. Franklin Walker as Professor and head of the Department of Education, and Mrs. Fadra Holmes Wilson as Dean of Women and Assistant in the English Department.

Dr. Walker comes from the University of California, where he received the Ph. D. degree in Educational Psychology, having also spent some time in research work at Stanford University with Profs. Cubberly, Ternan, Kelly, and Sears. He was for a number of years connected with the splendid public school system of California, having been principal of the noted Anaheim Union High School for eight years. He was also Vice President and Head of the Department of Education in the Northern Arizona Normal College, and Professor of Secondary Education in the California State Teachers' College at Fresno. His family consists of a wife and three children, of whom one son is at Oxford, England, as a Rhodes Scholar. Dr. Walker is a Methodist, a Mason, and a member of the Sigma Chi, Phi Delta Kappa, and Tau Psi Epsilon fraternities.

Mrs. Wilson, wife of the late Dr. E. P. Wilson, of Houston, Miss., has the B. A. and M. A. degrees from Tulane University, and has been a member of the Tulane Summer School faculty for several years. For a number of years she has been a member of the faculty of the Southern Illinois Normal University, at Carbondale, Ill. Mrs. Wilson is a brilliant young woman, a splendid lecturer on American and English literature, and comes highly recommended by President Dinwiddie and Dean Bechtel, of Tulane; by Prof. Hall-Quest, of Teachers' College, Columbia University, and President Shryock, of the Southern Illinois Normal University.

The college also announces two scholarship honors for the past session, distinctions finally determined by the result of the examinations which came after the last commencement. The Tribbett Scholarship Prize of $200 was awarded to Mr. A. L. Weems, of Sun, Miss. This prize is given for general excellence in scholarship and character as representative student. The Bourgeois Medal for the highest grade in the Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior classes, offered by Mr. Alfred Bourgeois, of Jackson, was won by Mr. W. L. Hannah.

Registrations are being made rapidly and everything at present indicates the largest enrollment in the history of the college.

SOME REMARKS ON UNIFICATION.

Dear Advocate: To be sure, I favor unification—union of all white Methodists. I regret that we ever had to split. I am sorry the Church of England "fired" us. I wish that it had not been necessary to have any "protests" or "reforms," ever. But we had. We had to have.

Some of the articles you quote from exchanges sound good. Some of them are beautiful. Some of them you do not quote do not sound good. For example: The editor of the Central Christian Advocate, Kansas City, has served notice that the Negro bishops, on all occasions, will be on a par with other bishops and have full recognition. Certainly. Why not? They are bishops. "The General Conference shall not change or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to do away episcopacy, or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." The editor says: "At the General Conference, in case of a parliamentary tangle, a Negro bishop may be called upon to untangle it." "Red rag stuff," I call it—impudence.

Bishop Mouzon said: "Some say they favor Unification, but make no effort in that direction. It is like one saying he wants to go to California, but never starts," etc. That's me.

One of the bishops asked me if I would like to transfer to California. I said yes. We discussed it for an hour. Finally the bishop said: "You do not want to go to California." I said: "Yes, sir; but not bad enough to leave my friends in Mississippi."

I'm for unification—whatever that means; but so long as some of the best men and women of those who made us what we are against it, I cannot vote for it. In the language of Jefferson Davis: "I love the Union; but I love liberty and Mississippi more."

If we get together, I do not think we'll know any difference down here—"Where de cotton and de corn and taters grow," just as long as there is any color left in the line. After that we won't care.

Nobody is ever going to try to "color" the Mississippi Conferences—more than once, any way. I'm not scared, either way it goes.

SPIRITUAL INTUITION.

By Rev. W. H. Giles.

Whatever may be the distinction between the human mind and spirit, it may be safely assumed that they are vitally related and inter-dependent. The normal development and highest possibilities of the one are dependent upon the other. Thus spiritual life, development and knowledge are dependent upon relative mind. What the open window or door is to the cold, dark and air-polluted room, the mind is to the spirit. Through it enter warm rays of energizing and inspiring light, purifying and making possible a normal development. While spiritual inspiration, revelation and life enter through the mind, the essential condition to their realization is spiritual regeneration. When Nicodemus "came to Jesus by night" with his earnest but rational query regarding "the wonderful works," or numerous miracles wrought by him, Jesus authoritatively and emphatically stated that for one to see or enter into a spiritual understanding and appreciation of the mystery and power of such, is possible only through the "new birth." (John 3:1-21.) Thus to understand with that degree of satisfaction and consolation the mystery and power by which these wonderful miracles are wrought, that most wonderful of all miracles must have been realized in one's own heart and life—the converting power of God: through the atoning death of Christ and the operative power of the Holy Spirit. When one has experienced this miracle, then, and then only, can he begin to know experimentally and authoritatively what the Bible and "witnesses" have theoretically stated about it. Previous to this miracle wrought in one's life, the spiritual sensibilities are dulled and incapable of receiving spiritual light and inspiration necessary to growth. "Having eyes, they see not, and having ears, they hear not." Thus a man's spiritual eyes are blind to spiritual revelation; his spiritual ears are dulled to the voice of God. In fact, he is blind, deaf, and dumb to any experimental relation to God. He does not know or really understand God in any satisfactory degree.

St. Paul makes it plain that the natural or unconverted man cannot receive spiritual knowledge, because the condition of fellowship with God and of the revelation of himself to the person by his Spirit has not been experienced (1 Cor. 2): "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit. The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

Therefore it is indisputable that any person, however intellectual, whatever his exalted position and authority in temporal affairs, or in the church for that matter, independent of spiritual regeneration and of continuous fellowship with God, is incapacitated and experimentally unqualified to become a religious author or divine messenger either by pen or word. To arrogate to himself such authority, independent of such experiences, is little short of presumption. Too many in our age are yielding to this presumption. The consequences have been that we read and hear much that is minced with distorted moral and purely rationalistic views, and of rank heresy, not a little.

To become a divine messenger or spokesman; that is, either by word or pen, to deliver a divine message, to speak the mind of God to a sinful, doubting and dying world, one's mind and spirit must have experienced the work of grace; there must be an experience of inspiration and revelation. Those proceeding contrary to this principle will give the world much to read and hear that is erroneous, unwholesome, and detrimental to the moral and spiritual life of many people. Numerous and various sects and isms will arise and spread, also.

May the hearts and minds of our religious authors and of our ministry be so adjusted as to "tune out the annoying static," the confusing and hilarious jazz, and other frivolous noises of the world, and set them atune to the heart and mind of God. Thus, and thus alone, can God be heard, in that "still small voice" which we may understand and know to be his voice! that we may publish or proclaim his message to the world.

CHURCH ANNIVERSARY AT RAYNE, LA.

The Methodist church at Rayne, La., will commemorate Sunday, Aug. 3, at 7:45 p. m., the fortieth anniversary since occupying the present church building. This was the first church on the Southern Pacific Railroad between New Orleans and Lake Charles.

The church started with only three or four families. It now has between seventy-five and one hundred families. The present membership is 206. Rev. H. N. Brown, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, will be present and speak on this occasion. Brother Brown was the first pastor to occupy the present parsonage, and he served the Rayne charge for four years. Rev. Alonzo Early, of Crowley; Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, of Indian Bayou, and Rev. J. H. Hoffpauir, of Crowley, have consented to attend and take part on the program.

Former pastors who cannot attend will send greetings to be read to the congregation. The publicity committee for the anniversary service is looking for a large congregation, for several of the Methodist churches near Rayne have agreed to dispense with their evening services so that their members may attend. Several fraternal organizations have also accepted an invitation to attend. The committee is sending invitations to former members, and will expect this to be a home-coming for them.

R. S. WALTON, Pastor.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

The Methodist church at Collins, Miss., was destroyed by a storm on the night of May 26, as were many of the homes of the church members. Some of them are not able to rebuild their homes, some of them have moved away, and the congregation is in great need of help to rebuild their church, which will cost approximately $5,000.

It is sometimes the case that the first reports of a storm that go out to the public are rather exaggerated, but not so in the case of Collins. For some reason, the story of the destruction there has not been told. The public has not been advised of their needs, and I fear they have not received the assistance that was due them.

As we sit in our comfortable churches and worship on Sunday mornings, let us remember the little congregation over at Collins that has no place to worship in, and is not able to rebuild.

Allow me to insist that every pastor present this need to his congregation and give the people a chance to contribute, and every individual who reads this appeal, send a liberal contribution to the pastor, Rev. J. W. Thompson, Collins, Miss. Thank you.

Your brother in Christ,
W. W. GRAVES, P. E.

BOARD OF LAY ACTIVITIES ARRANGES MEETINGS IN LOUISIANA.

Please give notice in the Advocate that we will have a series of meetings for the lay leaders and pastors in the State and all others who will attend them, as follows:

Shreveport, August 4.
Ruston, August 5.
Rayville, August 6.
Alexandria, August 7.
Lake Charles, August 8.
Baton Rouge, August 11.
New Orleans, August 12.

Prof. G. L. Morelock, our General Secretary, will be present at all of these meetings, and there will be round table discussions and some addresses, and I hope that not fewer than one thousand laymen in the State will take advantage of this opportunity to master the work of the Lay Activities Board, and that pastors in general will be able to attend these meetings also.

T. W. HOLLOMAN,
Conference Lay Leader.

THE OXFORD CAMP MEETING.

Again we take genuine pleasure in extending to our presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Tucker, and all of the ex-pastors of Oxford and Abbeville, a cordial invitation to join us at our fifty-third camp meeting, which convenes the 2nd day of August and runs ten days, under the supervision of our good pastors, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Oxford, and Brother Hunt, of Abbeville, with Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Greenwood, as pulpit general. Everything now indicates a glorious season. "Come with us and we will do thee good."

Board on the ground, and a bed at the preachers' tent free.

THE CHURCH SOUTH FOR UNION.

Very gratifying to the advocates of Methodist union was the action of the Genral Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which met at Chattanooga on Wednesday of last week to consider and vote on the plan now pending.

A grave question had been raised as to the legality of the meeting at the time designated by the College of Bishops.

When the Conference met, Dr. A. J. Lamar introduced a resolution proposing adjournment until May next year in order to meet the legal objections which had been urged by some bishops and others, many of whom were known to be opposed to the plan, if not to unification under any plan.

This resolution was discussed but was defeated by so large a majority that the vote was not challenged for a count by those who opposed action at this time.

The report of the Commission was presented by Bishop J. M. Moore. The minority report, signed by three members of the Commission, was read by Bishop Collins Denny, and was moved as a substitute for the main motion. Then the debate was on.

The substitute was defeated by a large vote. The count vote for the adoption of the plan was 297 in favor and 75 against. The law of the church requires a two-thirds vote for the adoption of a measure involving a change in the constitution.

It will be observed that practically four-fifths of the members of the General Conference favor the plan of unification on its merits and that those who favor the plan have not the misgiving of the minority as to the legality of the meeting of Conference at this time.

The movement toward the union of the churches has been distinctly advanced by this action of the Southern General Conference. The question now goes to the Annual Conferences of both churches. The Conferences of the Church, South, will vote first. It will require three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences present and voting to carry the measure. It will demand some hardihood to oppose what so many people desire.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A CHILD'S FAITH.

Ruth's mother was thankful when those in authority at the hospital told her that she might stay with her little daughter when after a long illness the little girl had to be taken there for an operation. Ruth was quiet and patient; she seldom complained, and never said anything to show how she felt about the operation through which she was to pass. She did not seem frightened, and she met every one with a brave smile.

Being with her night and day, her mother noticed that she was careful to keep her handkerchief in a place where she could get it easily. There was nothing strange about that. But her mother also observed that whenever the nurse brought her a clean handkerchief, Ruth would transfer to it something that was tied into the corner of the one she had. Her mother was naturally curious about the mysterious something of which the child was so careful, and one day she gently asked her what it was she guarded with so much solicitude.

Ruth looked up with tears in her eyes. "I found it," she answered, "in the drawer when we left home, and I wanted that much with me." She let her mother untie the knot in the corner of the handkerchief, and there in a tight little roll was a leaf from the Bible.

She wanted "that much" with her; she could take "that much" to the operating room; she could keep "that much" in her hand when the dressings were made. She had it when the stitches were taken out, and it meant much to her! On the scrap was this verse: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God."—Youth's Companion.

The hard part is to love your neighbor as yourself.—Muskogee Phoenix.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

OVER $500,000 PAID ON SPECIAL EFFORT QUOTAS TO DATE.

Hurrah for our great church! Notwithstanding the many financial obligations which must have attention, the debt we owe to the Forgotten Man is being paid. Already more than $500,000 has been received since March 16, 1924, and the remittances from the charges continue to pour into the offices of the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

KEEP THE FIRES BURNING HOT.

The fireman of a steam-engine must keep on shoveling coal, or his steam-gauge will backslide. When the steam goes down the engine goes dead. The big Special Effort mogul is throbbing with life and power just now, but we must keep up the fires or it will change quickly to a dead and powerless machine. It is pitiful to see a big engine that is unable to move even itself, when it was designed to pull a train of loaded cars a mile long. We do not want our Special Effort-pulling power to be like that. We have sweat and toiled a long time to get up steam, and now let us keep it up by constantly piling the fuel on the fire. Remember, those who quit never win, and those who win never quit.

ASLEEP WHEN OPPORTUNITY CALLS.

Some people never get very far doing anything—they nap too much. This week a prominent lay member who made a liberal subscription on the Special Effort quota of his church, inquired to whom he should pay the amount of his pledge which was due July 1. This means that the treasurer of that charge's Special Effort Committee has not notified the subscribers about payments due July 1. He is a snoozing Rip Van Winkle on the day when over 2,390 superannuated preachers and widows of preachers depend upon him being wide-awake, and on the job. Ugh! Wake up, brother, you are doing worse than "fiddling' while Rome burns"—you are snoring while your church's heroes call for bread.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS—TWO OF A KIND.

It is bad enough for the treasurer of a Special Effort Committee to fail to make a real effort to collect pledges due July 1, but what should be said about a pastor who does not lift a finger of protest about such failure? A layman might forget his duty in this matter, on account of pressure of other work committeed to him. But, in the name of Mercy, how can a pastor forget it? A brother said to me recently: "Some pastors will never budge to do a single act for the Special Effort after they appoint the charge committee." Surely this cannot be true! It is unthinkable that a pastor would treat so lightly a matter which deals with the old-age necessities of his kind. And yet I am receiving letters from some of these committees, stating that certain pastors are not doing a thing to help along this great movement. Are you one of them? If so, you will have time to repent when your own name appears on the list of the superannuates.

THE WORST THIEF OF ALL.

It has been said that "Procrastination is the thief of time." We have learned by experience that these words are true. The worst thief is that one which robs us of our priceless hours of opportunty. This thief has persuaded some pastors to "postpone" securing the Special Effort pledges until later in the Conference year." At a district conference held recently, it was discovered that half of the charges had not secured these pledges but expected to take up the matter at an early date. Well, this thief stole from these charges a precious chance to succeed when other charges were doing it. That time cannot return. The only thing for those charges to do now, is to get busy immediately and do their part in this wonderful movement. It is to be hoped that every charge in the entire church will be able to report at Annual Conference this fall that the Special Effort was applied and a substantial sum sent to the Board of Finance for the first year.

SHINING LIKE THE STARS ABOVE.

I try to publish every charge that pays the first year one-fifth or more of its total quota. Occasionally one slips by unnoticed, but it is always a mistake arising from handling thousands of remittances. If your charge has done this good thing, and the fact has not been noted on this page, notify the Board, and proper notice will be given.

Red Oak, Central Texas, Waxahachie, Rev. Edward Heinsohn, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,460; amount remitted, $297.50.

First Church (Tampa), Florida, Tampa, Rev. H. F. Tolle, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,068; amount remitted, $991.55.

Epworth (New Orleans), Louisiana, New Orleans, Rev. J. B. Grambling, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,750; amount remitted, $360.

The Home Circle

HOW JOHN PAID NAN.

The family were at the supper table when John came in with his skates. After supper his father said to him: "John, you have been gone all the afternoon. You did not get your work done. It must be finished to-night, you know.'

John went into the shed with gloomy brow. It was not long, however, before the tones of his voice came in very cheerfully through the closed door into the sitting-room.

"Is that Nan out in the shed with John?"asked Janetta.

Her mother smiled and nodded.

Janetta was almost grown up. She felt herself to be wise and often liked to give her mother advice, as most of us have liked to do in our time. She gave her some now: "I think, mother, that you ought not to let Nan help John so much. She will spoil him. It is no girl's work for her to be carrying wood for him into the cellar. She never seems to mind what she does if it will only make things easier for John."

"He pays her pretty evenly, I am sure," said Mrs. Neville quietly.

"Pays her?" repeated Janetta in surprise, looking doubtfully at her mother. "How?"

"Keep your eyes open and see," said Mrs. Neville. She would give no hint of what she meant.

"John," said Nan when they had come back to the house and were warming themselves luxuriously, "Eva Haslings cannot go to the singing class because she has nobody to take her home. We could walk just that little distance around the corner with her, couldn't we?"

"Where's her brother Jim? Why can't he go for her?"

"He'll not be bothered, he says. You always come after me, anyway. So I think that it wouldn't be so very much farther to take Eva home."

"I suppose it wouldn't," said John. "All right."

Janetta looked over at her mother. But Mrs. Neville's head was bent over her work.

The next day at noon John was full of a plan which the boys were making.

"We are going to get up a sleigh ride—just we ourselves, amongst us boys. Then we will invite the young ladies to come with us."

Janetta condescended to show a little interest. She usually felt herself much above John and his friends; but if it was a question of having a sleigh ride when sleigh rides were few, perhaps she might forget her dignity for once to advantage. John noticed this. He was divided as to whether to feel flattered or to grumble.

"Yes, of course, some of the fellows want you, Janetta," he said. "They know that generally you don't remember that they are alive, and it is just possible that now and then you slip out of their memory for a minute or two at a time. But on an occasion like this we can make-believe all round. You see, it adds something to the style to have girls on board with long skirts and their hair put up."

Nan was listening wistfully. Her skirts were not long, and her hair was in a pigtail. Still, she oughtn't to be selfish; it was nice for John and Janetta, and her turn would come by and by.

"In my case, though," John continued, "I didn't choose my girl for style. I have more sense. She is young; she may fall asleep during the proceedings; but she is the nicest girl in town, for all that, of any size, except mother. Nan is."

"O, John, you didn't!" cried Nan joyfully. "How perfectly, perfectly lovely of you!"

Janetta thought of several things, of which the sleigh was only one. Meantime Dr. Neville had come in for his dinner.

"John," he said, "I hope you have not been making friends with those two Barbour boys."

"I haven't," said John: "Nan wouldn't let me. I couldn't see anything bad in them and they are awfully entertaining. But Nan made such a fuss that I had to give in."

"Well, you may be very thankful to Nan," said his father. "They have got themselves into a miserable scrape. They were picked up on a back street drunk last night and put in jail."

While the others exclaimed and questioned, John was uncommonly silent. At the end, before he started back to school, he said soberly: "A fellow doesn't lose much by taking Nan's advice. Maybe if Harry and Phil Barbour had a sister like her, they never would have got into such bad ways."

In the course of the afternoon Janetta drew her chair up close beside her mother's. "Mother," she said, "I have watched, and I see. Nan gets high pay from John for carrying wood and drawing water—the highest."

"I knew that you would see it before long," said her mother. "A girl cannot do better work than build little fences of kindness and love and goodness about a brother that will help to keep him safe. Even if she roughens her hands a little at it and works rather more than her share, it is well worth while. Isn't it?"—Instructor.

SURGANA'S WEDDING DRESS.

You have heard of Pnndita Ramabai, and how she devoted her life to relieving the miseries of the child widows of India. This little story tells how the missionaries are sometimes able to keep a little girl from becoming a victim to the child marrlage custom.

Surgana came as an orphan to the mission school when she was eight years old. Her eyes were big and ronnd, and her black hair all soft ringlets. She had a sunny disposition and a sweet little voice, and made friends with everybody.

So she grew and learned, and worked, and was happy, till she was twelve years old. Then one day her older brother came to her and told her he had arranged a marriage for her with a young man of the village. According to the custom of India, that was her brother's duty now that their parents were dead.

But Surgana knew something about the sufferings of the little girl wives and widows, and she declared firmly, "No. I will not marry him."

Her brother and the young man were very angry when they found that they could not force Surgana to obey them. They declared that it was an outrage upon the custom of the country, and went away calling upon the evil spirits to bring sickness and destuction upon Surgana and the school.

So Surgana lived on at the school. She was eager to learn how to teach the women of India about the Christ who had saved her from a life of sorrow. She wanted to help them when they were sick, and so she trained as a nurse.

When she was eighteen, she had developed into a beautiful woman, and her true romance came to her when John, the son of one of the older trained nurses, came to visit his mother.

"John and I are going to be married, Anna Amma," she told the missionary, "and go out to the villages and tell the people how to be Christians, and how to be well and happy."

The day for the wedding was set, when suddenly influenza broke out in the school, and Surgana had enough to do to care for the sick.

When all were out of danger only three days to the wedding, and no wedding dress! Surgana was hustled out to the bazaar, and the cloth was bought, and the few who could sew went to work upon it. On the morning of the wedding day the garments were rushed off to a tailor to be finished.

Ding-dong! rang the bell. Only half an hour to the wedding, and the garments had not come home. A small boy was sent after them, and he did not return. So the cook was sent after the boy. Some of the nurses went to investigate, and they found the tailor, the small boy, the cook and the syce (housekeeper), all sitting on the back veranda, all sewing for dear life on Surgana's wedding dress. Done! The cook came running as fast as his legs could carry him, his arms full of white garments flying in the breeze. Ten minutes later—it's hard to believe this part of the story, but the missionary declares it is true—ten minutes later Surgnaa walked up the chapel aisle as sweet a little bride as loving hearts and willing hands ever helped into her wedding dress.

When the last guest had gone, Anna Amma stepped out upon the veranda to rest in the moonlight. In the distance she heard a flute playing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Near at hand was a gaudy idol procession, with tom toms and bells. But drawing nearer day by day was the spirit of Christ, heard in the clear call of the flute, and seen in the happy face of the bride who had just gone out to carry the message to her people in India.—Christian Intelligencer.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Cradle Roll department of the First Methodist Sunday School, Greenville, Miss., has 86 names on roll.

The editor of the Advocate greatly regrets not being in the office when Rev. R. F. Harrell, our pastor at Gilbert, La., called on Thursday of last week.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, recently visited his daughter and family in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Rev. H. A. Wood, pastor at Flora, Miss., is having a great pastorate. The membership at Flora has been increased by almost half during the year.

Rev. A. E. O'Dell, of Richwood, W. Va., a delegate to the General Conference, announces that his vote was incorrectly recorded on the unification question—he voted for instead of against it. This makes the total vote 298 for, 74 against.

Dr. H. E. Woolever, editor of the National Methodist Press, Washington, D. C., will deliver an address on "The Church and the Nation" at the meeting of the Southern Methodist Press Association, Mount Sequoyah, Ark., August 7.

Miss Clara Chalmers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Chalmers, who spent her vacation with her parents in this city, returned to her post as teacher in one of our church schools in Havana, Cuba, on Saturday of last week.

When President Coolidge decided to remain at the White House during the summer, taking week-end trips on the presidential yacht, he directed that a navy chaplain should conduct services on board every Sunday. These services are attended by the President and his family.

Rev. L. E. Alford, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Saturday of last week. He was in the city with his daughter, who has been attending the Tulane Summer School.

Miss Ruth Kellogg, of Boyle, Miss., who has recently completed the course at Scarritt Bible and Training School, has been assigned to work in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Miss Kellogg was the honored guest of the Woman's Missionary Society and congregation at Durant, Miss., on Sunday and Monday, July 20-21. She spoke at both the church services on Sunday.

Rev. R. H. Bamburg, who transferred some years ago from the Louisiana to the Northwest Conference, has returned to Louisiana. Brother Bamburg requests us to say that he will be glad to assist the brethren in meetings till Conference, and that he is willing to go anywhere. His address is Coushatta, La., in care of J. F. Thornley, R. F. D. 3.

The Yearbook of the General Sunday School Board for 1924 has just reached our desk. It is a complete record of the work of the Board for the past year, with a vast amount of valuable information concerning this important department of the church's activities. A copy of the Yearbook may be had by any of our readers, free of all cost, by addressing a postal card request to the General Sunday School Board, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, requests us to call attention to the fact that Prof. G. L. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, will be present at a laymen's rally at Rayville, La., on Wednesday, August 6, and speak, and that he will also deliver an address at the First Methodist Church, Monroe, La., at 8 o'clock the same evening. All pastors and laymen are urged to hear Prof. Morelock. A barbecue dinner will be served at Rayville.

Louisiana and Georgia carried off the honors last week at Lake Junaluska, N. C., on "State and Conference Night." According to the vote of the judges, Georgia won two first places and one second place, while Louisiana won one first place and two second places; but on the percentage basis, Louisiana was ahead by several points. The pageant presented by Louisiana, "A Hundred Years of Religious Education in the Land of Evangeline," was written by Dr. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, New Orleans.

We take the following from the Methodist Advocate of July 23: "Rev. J. M. Huggin, for more than thirty-two years an active minister in the Methodist Church, died last week at the home of his daughter, Mrs. O. D. Nunnally, at Memphis. Dr. Huggin was born in Spartanburg, S. C., and was a graduate of Wofford College. He joined the North Mississippi Conference, served for thirty-two years, and was superannuated in 1909, having lived in Memphis for the past fifteen years. Funeral services were conducted from our First Church by Rev. W. F. Acuff, of Binghampton, assisted by Dr. Clovis G. Chappell." We trust we shall be furnished with a memoir of this faithful soldier of the Cross in due time.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. Guy M. Hicks, Belcher, La., 4; Rev. J. T. McCafferty, Louisville, Miss., 2; Rev. W. H. Giles, Kurtwood, La., 5; R. K. and F. L. Wier, Starkville, Miss., 3; Rev. H. A. Wood, Flora, Miss., 3.

TAKE A CHANCE.

A Story of Fifth Avenue Out-of-Door Evangelism.

By Daniel A. Poling, Co-Minister of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City.

"Take a chance!" the young profligate said, as through bleary, boyish eyes he looked at me. The Sunday evening service had closed only a few minutes before. Perhaps a dozen men and women had stood to request an interest in the closing prayer. One of the officials of the church had brought to me a young man soaked to the skin—the night was a downpour—and brazenly drunk. He wanted money and his story was utterly impossible. He told me that he was the son of wealthy Southern parents; that he had gotten into trouble in New York City and lost his money; that his baggage was being held at a prominent hotel for an unpaid bill, and finally that a representative of his family would meet him at the Waldorf Astoria on Tuesday afternoon and fix things up! He needed $15 to meet his immediate necessities, and would repay me, "Sure!"

I knew he was lying, and my friend had started him for the side entrance when he blurted out—"Take a chance!" What it was that prompted me to give that miserable boy another look I do not know—perhaps the omnipotence of a mother's prayer, but I did look at him again. A New York preacher is deceived so often, and by those who tell more ingenious stories than this lad had told, that the disgust with which the official of the church received my request to advance him fifteen dollars and charge the amount to my personal account was entirely warranted.

The young fellow went squashing out, half-sobered by my parting words. "I'll take the chance," I said, "as wild a chance as any gambler ever took for gold. I'll take the chance, but, boy, for the sake of many another needy fellow who will come to this church for help, as well as for your own, make good, play the man."

The Church Gambled and Won.

Let me be perfectly frank. Not every story that begins as this one ends in a return and a remittance, but the boy from the South came back—came back clean and polished—came back with fifteen dollars, and to take me to the Waldorf Astoria where I met a gracious Southern lady, who stood there in the stead of the boy's invalid mother, to thank the old Fifth Avenue Church that had gambled with the sin of the city for the soul of her son, gambled and won.

Our simple evangelistic program is based upon the principle that the supreme business of the church is leading women and men to Jesus Christ, sustaining and strenthening them in the Christian life, training them for and engaging them in Christian service. Let it be mentioned in passing—mentioned, I say, since there is no time for an extended statement—that this evangelistic emphasis is blood-brother to a program of social service. As I write, one of the most effective social-survey and settlement workers in New York City is a brilliant individual who one year ago stood at the close of a Sunday evening sermon to express a desire to become personally acquainted with Jesus Christ. An average of 800 business girls aind women pass through our parlors every Tuesday for luncheon together and a series of fifteen minutes inspirational and religious addresses. There are self-help classes of various kinds, special lectures and social gatherings.

New Builders Needed for a New World.

But to build the new world we must have first new world builders. If our modern civilization is learning anything to-day, surely it is learning that redemption is more than an intellectual interpretation, sin more than a name, the atonement more than a myth. No new world can there be without new world builders, and only Jesus Christ can make new creatures out of men.

But it is the very simple story of a very small beginning in congregational evangelism on Fifth Avenue that I have to tell. It is a very modest story as to results, and one that may be told without the presumption that might attach to more distinguished achievements.

For a period of five years now it has been our invariable custom at the close of the Sunday evening service in the Marble Collegiate Church, to extend the evangelistic invitation. With one exception through this period, there have been definite responses to every such invitation. The number has varied from three to above thirty. The invitation itself is based upon three assumptions: (1) That in every congregation there are men and women who need and desire God. (2)

That God's Spirit is always active. (3) That the least we should do is to make it possible for those who are in need of meeting "the One who is able" to do so. The method is simple. Following the sermon, whatever its theme, a member of the choir sings a gospel hymn. The audience is requested to bow in prayer, and the announcement is made that if there are those present who have burdens of any sort for which they would seek Christ's strength, or sin from which they would ask his release, they may make themselves known by standing or by lifting their hands. All such are assured that they will be specially mentioned in the closing prayer preceding the benediction. Never more than three minutes is consumed making and completing the invitation. The principle involved is what may be termed "the line of least resistance," and the plans for a follow-through, though unobtrusive, have been measurably effective.

An Evangelistic "Follow-Through."

Forty "posts" for personal workers have been designated. Each personal worker occupies his "post" at every service, or supplies a substitute. The personal workers' group, made up generally of Christian Endeavorers, has a chairman and secretary, and meets for consultation and prayer following the mid-week service. Always those who stand or raise their hands are cordially greeted following the benediction, and invited to meet one of the ministers or any other member of the staff. As a rule, a personal worker does nothing more than extend this perfectly natural invitation. This policy enables us to use effectively many naturally timid young people who grow gradually in confidence through experience. One out of three such invitations brings a favorable response. Interviews are arranged to suit the convenience of the individual. In every instance an earnest effort is made to follow the case through to a decision.

The Marble Collegiate is supremely a "downtown" church with all the peculiar and baffling "downtown" problems. A comparatively small number of people who lift their hands or stand in these services unite with the local church. They come from all sections of the country, and world, and many of them are related by correspondence to churches in other cities. Even so, eighty-five have been received into the fellowship of the Marble Collegiate congregation during the past eight months. Also it should not be overlooked that the invitation extended is a general one, and that the problems entered into are not confined to those individuals who are seeking Christ as Lord and Saviour.

More than 350 have responded to the invitation during the past eight months by standing or raising their hands. Through one period of the winter an old-fashioned "sing" was conducted in the parlors of the church, following the close of the evening service. People stood and sang familiar hymns while the ministers and their associates moved about informally. The attendance ran from 150 to 250. There was never an address, and the benediction was pronounced absolutely on time! We shall certainly use the plan next year.

Weekly during the six weeks preceding Easter, on what is called "Marble Collegiate Family Night," a chance for our personal workers, a special Bible class is conducted. Each personal worker signs a simple declaration of purpose, and keeps a card, a duplicate of which is in the hands of the pastor. On this card are entered the names of those in whom the personal worker is especially interested and for whom daily, definite prayers are offered.

Taking the Gospel to the Street.

Beginning two years ago with a series of talks from Mr. Edgar Strother, General Secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union, in China, an expert in street speaking, we instituted an open air pulpit at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, at the noon hour in one of the most congested centers in New York City. These meetings were held daily, Saturdays and Sundays excepted. On Sunday evening, preceding the regular service, the minister spoke out-of-doors for ten minutes. The Young People's Society adjourning early gave the nucleus of a congregation, and supplied the singing. Begininng in May of this year the plan has been perfected and the program enlarged. An attractive platform has been built in the arch of the doorway facing the street and avenue. In co-operation with the Greater New York Federation of Churches, services will be conducted daily while the weather allows. Brief sermons are preached by the leading ministers of New York, representing all denominations. As a rule the same speaker appears for an entire week. The contralto soloist, of the Marble Collegiate Church, Miss Margaret Weaver, sings two gospel hymns, and Miss Emma J. Dubois, a trumpeter, plays. Speakers and musicians wear the academic gown. We find that the use of the gown at once distinguishes the service in a city of many street meetings, and gives to its message a touch of impressiveness and a note of power.

During the first month of the out-of-door meetings more than 6,000 people were in attendance, in addition to those who moved to and fro on the street, and more than 1,000 copies of the Scripture, in Yiddish, Italian, Spanish and English were given to those who asked for them. The announcement is always made that the little books are available, but a careless general distribution is avoided. The message of the outdoor pulpit is constructive, evangelical, patriotic, and non-controversial. From the lips of New York's outstanding pulpiteers and most talented musicians, the good news of Jesus is told daily to an increasing number of people. As was said in the opening service of the campaign—"If with our message here we shall send a careless Hebrew to his synagogue, an indiffrent Catholic to his cathedral, or a neglectful Protestant to his church, and if we shall make better citizens, we shall be glad and we shall trust the Spirit of God to perfect the work we have begun.

Some "Twice-Born" Men and Women.

From the Sunday evening services, as well as from the open-air meetings, though of course there are more definite results to tabulate from the former, there come many stories that belong to yet another volume of "Twice-Born Men." A distinguished artist sailing on Monday for her studio in Budapest was led to Christ; the senior lawyer of a great firm was brought to his knees and to his God; a mining engineer of wealth and influence was convicted of sin and changed; a West Point graduate came seeking an introduction to Christ; the manager of one of the greatest institutions of its kind in America, standing with his wife, professed his Lord; a half-frantic and humble toiler, brought to repentance, married his common-law wife—both have been for a year loyal members in a church. One night, as the minister entered his study to change his pulpit gown, after an interview in the church parlors, he found his wife kneeling in prayer with two young nurses—both are now members of the church.

When one contemplates the vast and growing, the appalling spiritual problems of New York, so small a thing as we are doing here does not warrant a pretentious or even formal setting. My acceptance of the invitation to write about it has been prompted entirely by earnest hope that all churches shall, on every possible occasion, open the way for those in need to meet Jesus Christ, and with feeling, too, that the very modesty of our success, with the simplicity of its plan, will be an encouragement to others.—New York Christian Advocate.

LIQUOR.

For a century and a half the traffic in liquor was a perfectly lawful business, just as much so as banking and farming. Millions of money were invested, and there was no single item of trade that yielded profits so large. Moreover, drinking was a popular social custom and a personal habit of hundreds of thousands of our people. Did any one imagine that a traffic so deeply entrenched could be destroyed overnight? There are century-old laws upon our statute books against burglary and arson and murder. But are not these crimes committed every day? We affirm that, under all the circumstances, the Federal prohibitory law has been a great success. Its success is to be seen in the enlarged savings deposits at the banks, increased expenditures for legitimate commodities, the decrease of crime, the increased efficiency of labor, in broken homes repaired, in separated families reunited, and in the fact that the Church of God is permitted to do its work without the handicap of a drunken and brutalized community. All agitations seeking to modify or repeal the prohibitory law have failed and will fail. Prohibition has become the permanent policy of the American people. The prohibitory amendment is in the Federal Constitution to remain as long as the Constitution remains.—Arkansas Methodist.

PASTORS' SCHOOLS.

There is a pastor in one of the Georgia Conferences whose career of conspicuous fruitfulness in the last dozen years has been a constant inspiration to his friends. The interesting fact in the case is that for ten years prior to this period of unusual success this pastor was nearly a failure. There is a secret which he himself tells his friends. He went to a pastors' school, where his whole outlook was enlarged, new inspirations were instilled and the whole course of his life became pitched on a new and ascending scale.—Bishop W. N. Ainsworth.

Student pastors are maintained by the Centenary at the University of Missouri, University of Texas, Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, University of Oklahoma, University of California, Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, and a woman worker is maintained in the State Normal School at Cape Girardeau, Mo.

On Sunday morning, June 29, 1924, the Angel of Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Taylor and took little HERBERT. After an illness of only one week the Death Angel said, "Enough." It was sad to see him go—yet God knows best. He had been with us only about eighteen months. He leaves father, mother, and one brother, together with many relatives to mourn his going away. The children's tender Shepherd came and called him, and in his loving arms he went away. He is not dead, but only gone before to wait with Jesus for the coming of his loved ones. Let us strive, then, to meet him in Heaven above.

His Auntie,
MRS. BEATRICE STAMPLEY.
Mechanicsburg, Miss.

IN MEMORY OF CAPTAIN J. M. STIGLETS.

CAPTAIN J. M. STIGLETS, a leading citizen of Harrison County, Miss., died April 5, 1924, at his beautiful home at Woolmarket, after an extended illness and waiting for God to take him to his home in heaven. He was seventy years old. He was a well-known lumberman of Harrison County, Miss., and was at one time both a manufacturer and exporter. He retired twenty years ago, and since then lived in his grand and pretty home on the banks of the beautiful Biloxi River, at Woolmarket. As a Christian, he was a member of the Methodist Church, South, and a devout Christian gentleman. We bid him good-by for awhile, and we will meet him again where there is no more death. Captain Stiglets was a member of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Biloxi, and was a director in many other enterprises along the coast. He was a captain of industry. When a young man he was married to the pretty Miss Melissa Steward, and a happy union was this—"two souls that mingle as one thought, two hearts that beat as one." Besides his good wife, he is survived by the following beautiful and accomplished daughters: Misses Marguerite, Elizabeth, and Annie Stiglets; also Mrs. W. A. Cox, Mrs. W. E. Beasley, Mrs. J. E. Martin, Mrs. R. S. Kimball, and Mrs. G. E. McCaskey. One of Captain Stiglet's daughters preceded him to heaven some years ago. Sweetly and quietly that fine Christian girl went to live with God in realms of bliss. Captain Stiglets passed away in great peace—not a murmur, and without a struggle, a golden sunset without a cloud. No father ever left a finer and more refined family than did Captain Stiglets, and also a number of fine and splendid grandchildren, to mourn their loss. This good man was honored and loved by all good and honest people. This writer was at one time pastor for the Stiglets family for four years, and we have been very intimate for quite twenty-five years. In the passing away of this good man, our church and community, our county and State, have lost one of our greatest men. It was the family's request that I should conduct the funeral service for this blessed man, and also write this memoir. Captain Stiglet's nephew, the Rev. James V. Bennett, Conference evangelist, will read these lines with interest. The funeral of Captain Stiglets was honored and attended by people from almost every walk of life. His friends from the cities and towns along the coast came in large numbers, and from the countryside came his friends by hundreds to honor their friend and neighbor. It was a sad occasion for us all. Beautiful floral offerings and flowers of exquisite beauty were placed on the casket, until it was covered and embanked in flowers of lustrous beauty. We laid our dear friend away in his grave to await a blessed resurrection. God's presence was so tenderly and sweetly with us that day in helping us to bear our sorrow. Many hearts ached and tears were shed on that Flanders field of sorrow in the church and cemetery; yet amid our sobs and tears, silken poppies of a great bright hope and a sweetly blissful and eternal future were blooming sweetly in our souls. We pray God to bless and comfort the sorrowing and bereaved family.

G. W. HUFF.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. EVIE WILBOURNE, nee Bridges, was born May 1, 1856; was married to A. H. Wilbourne, March 21, 1872, at Athens, La., and lived there until God called her home, May 14, 1924. Only one child was born to this union, a daughter, Clara, an unusually gifted child; but just as she was budding into womanhood, the very hope and joy of her parents, the silent Reaper claimed her, whose untimely death cast a great shadow of sorrow over this household, and it seemed for a while that the mother, the subject of this sketch, could not bear her sorrow. But He who has said, "My grace is sufficient for thee," and who sustained and comforted her through life, was indeed "a stronghold in the day of trouble." Mrs. Wilbourne was a beautiful type of true Southern womanhood. Her example as a wife and mother, friend and neighbor, is worthy of emulation, for she possessed many traits of Christian character. She joined the Methodist church in early life, and loved it and the principles for which it stands as perhaps few do. She often expressed her faith and trust in her Saviour. She had been in falling health for several years, and we realized for some months that she was slipping away from us. The beautiful spirit took its flight during the silent watches of the night—on and out beyond sorrow and suffering, to dwell with God and the saints forever. We laid the tired, worn body in old Athens cemetery, by the side of the daughter, where they await the great resurrection morning. "He giveth his beloved sleep." To the sorrowing husband and others who spared nothing for the comfort and welfare of her, we exclaim with the poet:

"We pass from the clasp of mourning friends,
To the arms of the loved and lost,
And those smiling faces will greet us there,
Which on earth we have valued most."

MRS. J. H. PITTMAN.

FROM THE ARCOLA CHARGE.

Miss Hazel Holley, of Water Valley, member of Grenada College extension team, has just completed a very successful two weeks' work on Arcola charge, Greenville District.

Classes in teacher training were held at Murphy and Lock, two communities on Sunflower River. The people of Murphy are proud of their new chapel, with its four Sunday school rooms, etc., and people at Lock are determined to add more class room to their schoolhouse to accommodate the Sunday school.

This course, "The Pupil," so ably taught by Miss Holley, has proved to be an eye-opener to Sunday school teachers and parents alike. A goodly number took work for credit and several others were present at the lectures. All were inspired by Miss Holley's splendid teaching, her charming personality, and her zeal for the church, the Sunday school and the kingdom. We all want her back next year.

Oh, the challenge that religious education offers! If we would only realize the unlimited possibilities in training the young people and children and realize the infinite capacity of the children to receive right instruction, we would not want for a job that would demand the best that is in us; and we would not be content with less than diligent study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Let's join the 400—the Gold Seal group.

FROM DE SOTO CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Just to say we have had a great meeting at De Soto church. Brothers Moll and Mangham came July 20, and stayed ten days with us. Mangham's singing was fine and did its part, while Moll preached every time, whether large or small congregations. He had the old-time altar service, and people prayed through to God. There were some bright conversions, with a ringing testimony. There were eighteen accessions to the church. Another thing about Moll, he held up the pastor's hands.

We closed our meeting at Cooper's Chapel last night. It was a good meeting—people saved, others re-dedicated to God. There were seven accessions to the church. The pastor did the preaching.

We are with Brother M. R. Jones at Louin, beginning July 20.

Our work moves well on the charge. We had our third quarterly conference last Saturday, and had the best reports this quarter of any of the three.

NEED OF CLEARNESS IN PREACHING.

By Payton A. Sowell.

Through the half century, approximately, I have realized my lack in making clear and full to the listener the truth involved. Since I have become a listener, I am convinced I was far from being the only one guilty of obscurity. I have had to listen, these dozen years, to a "deal of poor preaching" in the line of "clearness and explanation."

I hear preachers say: "Love God with all your heart," "love your neighhor as yourself." Men cannot do this—unless they are shown how.

The following from "Hereafter," by Rev. John Paul, I think is clear:

"Two Kinds of Normal Love."

"One is a relative, one a benevolent. With the former, we love people according to their relationship to us, according to their loveliness. This love makes possihle the organization of society into families, communions and nations. With this love it is natural and right to love some better than others, and to love at all in some cases.

"It was never intended that with the relative love faculty man should love his neighbor as himself, or love the heathen on the other side of the globe with this same faculty.

"The heart is a vessel which can be full of both kinds of love at once, just as a vacuum can be filled at once with air and light, and the increase of one does not diminish the other.

"This other love of benevolence is little known by those not horn of the Spirit, and not known in its completeness to any hut those who are filled with the Spirit.

"With this love we love all alike; other people's families as well as our own; mean people as well as good people; heretics as well as kindred minds; people whom we have not seen; the homely as well as the beautiful."

RECOMMENDED BY HER DOCTOR

Found Strength by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Kankakee, Illinois.—"My mother-in-law always took your medicine for weakness, and then in the Change of Life it did her so much good that she induced me to take it for a weakness I had for a year and a half. It has strengthened me and now I have a nice baby boy. I do all my own housework now, and I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I have the opportunity. I am taking it again for weakness, as my family doctor has recommended it for this purpose."—Mrs. HARRY COULOM, 984 N. Harrison Ave., Kankakee, Illinois.

Real Evidence of Merit

For the relief of female weakness, pains and backache, nervousness and irregularities, with other troubles common to women, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine.

Its worth is thoroughly established by such letters as the above. There are women everywhere, who, having received benefit, gladly tell other women about it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

FROM EVANSVILLE AND DUBBS.

We have heen fortunate on this charge in having with us for two weeks Miss Kate Payne Owens, of Grenada, Miss., who is teaching a class in Religious Education. All our Sunday school teachers and some others are taking the course. Miss Owens is a gifted speaker and great teacher. She has gained many friends on the charge who value her services.

We have here one of the hest parsonages in North Mississippi, just finished and heautifully furnished. We have a loyal and appreciative people who are planning and working toward the highest and best. We are expecting great progress in Sunday school work. MRS. W. S. SELMAN.

Dubbs, Miss.

"THE HOUSE OF HEAVENLY REST."

Miss Ida L. Shannon, of Japan, found it in Songdo, Korea, and this is what she says: "During the spring vacation, my sister and I had a delightful visit to Korea. The Sunday we were in Songdo they were opening the new Central Church. For a week before, the missionaries had met every afternoon in a prayer meeting in preparation for a week's revival with which they planned to celebrate the opening, and the Korean Christians met in the evening. When the final time came, it was an inspiration not soon to he lost to see the people crowd into the hall. I suppose there must have heen a thousand people present, or possihly more. While I was in Songo I had my tonsils removed at Ivey Hospital, Dr. W. T. Reid very kindly officiating. I didn't know hospital life could be so peaceful—for the patients. I told Dr. Reid I thought they ought to call his hospital the 'House of Heavenly Rest.' where white-robed angels came to visit you. Miss Lowder and Miss Turner were so very kind to me. As I rested those two days I found myself trying to imagine what that hospital was meaning to the Koreans who come sick and lonely. It must he an oasis in a desert of pain. And what a monument to the founder! Of course, he did not build it as a monument, but there it is to go on blessing those people for years and years. The work out from the hospital with the evangellstic band is conserving the work done with the patients, and making an ever broadening circle of those who know and love Jesus."

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, arranged a series of institutes and quarterly conferences, beginning July 10, at Van Buren, on the Fulton circuit. Brother Wasson, Miss Virginia Thomas, and I held services from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. The house was full of people, mostly young boys and girls. The superintendent made the startling announcement that they held Snnday school only twice a month so the people could attend the all-day-singings held all over this section for the entertainment of the people. We did the best we could to reorganize the school at this place.

We were at Asbury, on the Tremont circuit, July 11. The house was crowded to the limit from door to pulpit. Although the weather was scorching hot, the people remained for the last service. We had four superintendents and ten teachers, who took a deep interest in the instruction we were giving. Each of the four superintendents agreed to appoint some one to take charge of the Cradle Roll. By the way, there is material sufficient to increase the present enrollment twenty-five per cent. Brother Betterton is enthusiastic over the work his teachers did at the training school held at Tupelo.

Saturday, July 12, we held services at Friendship, on the Greenwood Springs circuit. Brother Hester made an unusually fine report, giving high praise to our teacher training program. I never heard such a report. We are making progress. Greenwood Springs paid the salary in full, and Riggin's Chapel overpaid. This is a new record for the circuits. The people at this church had turned their children over to the Baptists to teach, hut agreed to hegin looking after their own children.

Sunday, I preached at Greenbrier, and Miss Virginia met with the teachers at Aherdeen. Monday we all three held services at Paine's Memorial. Brother Murff is pastor of this church. Four superintendents and five teachers made it worth while for us to be at this church. Brother Wasson and I baptized the infant son, James Connell, of Brother and Sister Murff.

We were at Shiloh, in Lec County, on the Nettleton circuit, July 15. Brother Gregory could not be present; in his absence his daughter read his report to the quarterly conference in a way that was creditable to her and to her father. It was a new experience to hear a girl read as she did. Miss Virginia left us at this place, as our Ford was too small to take her with us.

Wednesday, Brother Wasson and I held services at Strongs, where that veteran and saint, Rev. D. W. Babb, is in charge. The church building bespeaks the culture and intelligence of the people of this delightful community. Just a glance upon the inside of the building tells the visitor that this church is ahout the Master's husiness.

We held prayer services at Houston Wednesday night, and Thursday we held forth at Cross Roads, in Calhoun County.

July 18, we were at Big Creek, where Brother Bullard was conducting a meeting. Rev. E. G. Kilgore was helping in the preaching. Enrolled one teacher, who agreed to work for her diploma. On our return trip we had a great time pulling and pushing that Ford out of the deep mud. When we got to Woodland, both of us needed a scrubbing to get the red mud off our clothes. The following day we held services at Palestine, on the circuit presided over hy Brother Martin. The Campbellites flourish in this section. We had the promise of a few good women to look after Methodist children in this church. Dr. Guinn came over for me and took me to his home. At night I held a service at Ebenezer, the church of my boyhood days. It was a delight to meet friends of long ago. Dr. and Mrs. Guinn's home is like a little heaven. I had the pleasure of baptizing Ruth, the baby of the home. We organized a class of ten to take one of the books in the course of study.

This closed our round of engagements. We had the house full of people at most every service. Everywhere the girls were well dressed and as well behaved. The women spread a bounteous meal at the noon hour on all occasions. The material development in every section is about twenty-five years ahead of the spiritual progress of the people. No need to dodge the issue, somebody has been playing at the job of teaching the people. Very few churches have altars in them. The buildings are neat and well kept, better than in years past. The behavior of the boys is more decent and respectable than in the past. The people have a love for Methodism. They cry for bread and get in reply, only a crumh. I guess we traveled not less than 500 miles during the ten days. Wasson does not poke along at anything he does. He is a hard worker, a lovable companion. I think both of us are better and stronger after praying and working together these days.

RIPLEY'S MAGNIFICENT NEW BRICK CHURCH.

The first Sunday in September we expect to be ready for worship in our new church, which was begun the 1st of May. The church will be modern in every respect. It has been planned and constructed to meet all the needs of our Sunday school. It has a basement two feet under ground and six feet above. The main auditorium will seat around five hundred, when all the Sunday school rooms are thrown open on this floor. The church, completed and fully equipped, will cost about $20,000. The best of it all is, we are paying for it. It will be ready for dedication on completion. We have the cash. H. P. Chastang, of Jackson, Miss., is the contractor. He is one of the best I have ever seen. He is a Christian gentleman of the highest type.

The pastor has never served a more consecrated, cultured, loyal and fine-spirited people, as a whole, in his ministry. I love my folks. We have already paid $37 more than our quota of $408 for the first year to the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment. All other finances of the church are in fine shape, and we will report all columns level at Conference this fall at West Point. Come on, fellows; we can all do it with God's help. The pastor's salary was raised $200 this year. We have taken in sixteen members so far this year. The pastor held his own pre-Easter services for a week. Am leaving to-day to be with Brother Love in a ten days' revival meeting on the Mantachie charge. I have already been in four revivals and have six more to hold this summer. Brethren, pray for me. God is blessing my feeble efforts in his great cause.

Brother Randolph, our efficient and consecrated presiding elder, has just been with me in our third quarterly conference. I have had the happy privilege of going with him to all the quarterly conferences held on the Dumas charge this year, as well as to some others. Everybody loves him, and our hearts are made sad to realize this is his last year with us as our leader. I have never known a presiding elder who had the work of our Master's kingdom more upon his heart, as well as the interest of his co-laboring ministers and their families. No wonder the old Corinth District has made such wonderful progress along all lines of activity since he came to her four years ago this fall. He is a brotherly presiding elder. He is one of us. God bless him.

I want to say that Brother Oakes, on the Dumas charge, is doing a magnificent work, and is in high favor with his folks, as well as Brother Hammond, on the Blue Mountain charge. These two co-workers in this part of the district are good neighbors. I love them. We will hold this part of the district down with God's help.

God bless you, Brother Carley, in your great work.

UNDER THE OLD TENT 600 HEAR THE BLESSED GOSPEL.

Rev. J. L. Hendry, writing from Nanzing, China, June 5, 1924, tells of the best revival he ever witnessed in China: "We have just held a wonderful evangelistic meeting for eight days in the city of Nanzing. It was held under the old tent that has a thousand holes in its top, but as it did not rain during the meeting, it did not 'leak a drop.' I wish you could have looked into the faces of those six hundred people who assembled every night in the old tent! The rich, the poor, the wise, the ignorant, were there to hear the blessed old Gospel preached. We invited the help of four pastors in the Nanzing District whom we knew well would hold up and magnify our Saviour, and so no uncertain sound was given as to God's plan for redeeming and saving this poor, despairing, dying old world. It was the best, most satisfactory revival I have ever attended in China. The congregations were quiet, close listeners of the preaching. And the 'best of all was, God was with us.' We are now planning for another great meeting early in next October. Do continue your supplications on behalf of the cause that is so precious to our souls."

FROM MONTICELLO, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Permit me to use a short space in the Advocate to report our revival at Monticello, Miss. We had with us from July 6 to July 20 Rev. J. M. Smith, of Hattiesburg, Miss., who did the preaching, and his wife as pianist and worker among the women and young people. The singing was led by Maston L. Lifsey, of Macon, Ga. Ray and Kennis Hill, stepsons of Brother Smith, had charge of the tent. Now, I believe it is a conservative statement when I say that this campaign is the biggest thing that ever came to Monticello. The campaign was big from the standpoint of equipment—a brand-new tent that will seat 2,500 people, folding seats and collapsible platform; big from the standpoint of efficiency and character of work done. Brother Smith is a fearless gospel preacher. He believes in the Old Book and preaches its truths, regardless of fear or favor. He believes all men are either saved or lost, on the road to heaven or hell. He believes those on the road to heaven are living their faith, working to bring in the kingdom of heaven and pull down the kingdom of sin. He believes a man will go to hell who belongs to the church as if he did not belong, if he lives the life of sin in the church. He calls upon the members of the church to wake up and bring forth fruit unto righteousness, or be damned along with other sinners.

Mrs. Smith is one of the finest workers among women and young people this pastor has ever known. Aside from her work as pianist, which is second to none, she gives her service without measure to personal work and to leading the women and young people to higher Christian experience. She and Brother Smith make a splendid gospel team, and the results of their labor will only be known in its far-reaching effects in the glory world.

Then what shall we say of that splendid singer and worker, Brother Lifsey? He is truly a worker that needeth not to be ashamed, a faithful servant of Jesus Christ. He is one of the best choir directors and organizers in the work to-day, and he held the sweetest services for the children and old people I ever saw; the Lord greatly blessed these services. To any one desiring a campaign that will enlist the entire community for the cause of Christ and cause the devil to sit up and take notice, I most heartily recommend these fine Christian workers, Brother Smith and wife, and Brother Lifsey.

This campaign was big from the standpoint of co-operation. The Methodists of Monticello did not put this great meeting over by themselves; the Baptist laymen and Presbyterian laymen, many of them, gave their hearty support, and through their help we put the work over in ancient and due form. Thanks to God for the help these men and women outside of our own church gave to the work of Christ in Monticello!

This campaign was big in results. We met the financial obligations to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, and I believe to the glory of God. The thing that stands out in the success of the campaign is the spiritual side of the meeting. God wonderfully honored the preaching of his Word. There were hundreds of people who rededicated their lives to the service of God, and took a definite stand in the kingdom of Christ. Besides this, there were several professions of faith in Christ and a number of back-slidden church members who took a new start for heaven. The two weeks' meetings drew from the towns outside of Monticello and the countryside around in so much that the last night of the meeting the congregation was estimated at 1,500 to 1,800 people. Praise God for the "old-time religion" that makes Christian people love each other in spite of their denominations! To the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost be all the glory.

Not Equipment, but the Man, Makes the Difference.

Every great school, college or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America can, as a rule, recall some personality in early youth who largely shaped their destinies. The dominating personality of Robert K. Morgan makes him such a man. He unmistakably impresses his personality on his students. His influence brings out the noblest, best traits in a boy. His instructors are so selected that this one idea may prevail, viz—to develop personality in a boy of the highest type.

The ideals of Morgan School are the highest, to train boys for useful citizens in the church and State, and to develop mind, soul and body alike.

Write to Mr. L. I. Mills, Sec., Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., who will send you a catalogue and tell you what Morgan School can do for your boy.

NEWS FROM THE FRENCH FIELD.

Dear Dr. Carley: I have just closed a revival meeting at Lydia. Lydia church is the oldest church in the French field. Members have moved from here in every direction, and its branches are bearing fruit in many places.

We had a very good meeting. Brother G. A. La Grange, of Houma, La., did the preaching, and did it very faithfully. He and his wife are doing good work in the French field.

Brother La Grange and I come from the same community. After our conversion we were called to preach the Gospel, and after working a couple of years among our own people, being greatly persecuted by our fathers and mothers, we were sent to work among the French in this section, and Brother La Grange around Houma.

My mother, after persecuting me over two years, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of sixty-three, of which she is a faithful member, and will die in that faith.

Going back to the revival, I am told that in twenty-five years the church at Lydia has never had such a surprise with so many people. They came from every direction, especially old people who have lived in this community all their lives and had never come to our church.

Among the old, there are three great-grandfathers and mothers who had never entered a Protestant church, and they came almost every night. "God answers prayers"—young and old came from every direction. Even the Caysees came.

With the prayers of every Christian worker and God's help, we will some day open the eyes of our French brethren.

"Let us minister to the blind and the poor." I have discovered in this community people who are so poor they have no clothes and hardly anything to eat. Let us help them if we can. Old men, women, and children of all ages, they are miserable. So if you know of some one who would like to help in any way by sending clothes or anything else, let them send to me, and I will distribute where most needed. Let us remember that we are going forward in the French field.

In ten years from now we will be able to multiply Frenchmen by Frenchmen, and the results will be hundreds of Methodist Frenchmen, if we faint not. So I pray that God may bless all those who work and help work in the French field.

They are hungry and thirsty for righteousness, but they are told not to go to our church because if they go they will never come back.

Let us help them and pray for them the prayer that Jesus prayed while on the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

IN MEMORY OF REV. AND MRS. W. A. BRUNER.

It is quite unusual to write the memoirs of both husband and wife in one, but it seems fitting when we know the incidents of their births and death.

Both Rev. W. A. Bruner and his wife were born the same day, March 27, 1844; they were married at the age of 18, and lived together 62 years, when the end came. Mrs. Bruner preceded him only one month and four days, passing away April 4, 1924, he following May 8.

They joined the Methodist church in 1870, living devout Christian lives ever after. Rev. W. A. Bruner was licensed to preach the gospel in 1883, and was an active minister until his death. No doubt he has been the means of bringing many to Christ.

Not long since the writer said to a friend that Brother Bruner saved his home for him once, and that friend answered that he had done more for him than that—he had pointed his soul to Christ. Another one said if he wears a star in his crown for every soul he has led to Jesus, he will have a starry crown.

Mrs. Bruner was a fitting helpmate to him in his ministerial work. A woman of strong faith, she believed in holding on to the promises until they became a reality.

Though Brother Bruner's greatest battles of life were against Satan and his evil works, he also fought for his country during the struggles of the Civil War, doing valiant service in the artillery.

Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bruner—six girls and four boys. Two girls and one boy preceded them to the better land. Their youngest son, Rev. W. W. Bruner, followed in his father's footsteps, and is now an active minister of the gospel, doing valuable service as a member of the North Mississippi Conference.

Funeral services for Brother and Sister Bruner were held at Turkey Creek church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. James A. McKibben, and the remains were laid to rest in that cemetery. The large host of friends gathered there and the beautiful floral offerings bespoke the love and high esteem the community held for them.

Though we shall greatly miss the true friendship we have known so long, we expect to meet them ere many years in a land where all is purity and love and where no sorrows or heartaches ever come.

Written by a true friend of theirs.

THE MATTER.

There is so much crime and lawlessness that people are asking what is the matter with the country. There is nothing the matter with the country. The matter is with us. Too many of us expect the country to run itself. Only about thirty per cent of the people vote. Business men and influential citizens—the very men who are needed on juries—often make excuses to keep from serving. The country won't run itself.—Judge Hicks, of Knoxville.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Activities at Madison, Miss.

Dear Auxiliaries: I am safe in saying that for forty or more years, consecutively, we have had at Madison a Woman's Missionary Society, yet I can't recall a single communication to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, though there must have been one when the Conference met here years ago.

My aunt and foster-mother, Mrs. R. W. Stewart, was the president for many years, and I speak with authority when I say she let nothing interfere with her attendance thereon unless, perhaps, impassable roads in those days when Madison did not, as now, have a gravel road in every direction from the village.

We have to-day enrolled in our organization about twenty-five, which number is a very good per cent of the matrons of the church. It is almost 100 per cent matrimonial, there being only one spinster in the ranks, that member taking to herself the consolation from Paul's opinion, "but she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and I think also that I have the Spirit of God."

Being Superintendent of Publicity, I take pleasure in putting Madison on the map. I want to tell you a little of our society. We meet every week, one business meeting a month, the other three given to study class and some program on some special field of labor. Mrs. G. P. McKeown, who was with us two years ago, exerted herself to make us a 100 per cent organization, and to her we owe much for keeping us in line. On her departure, the mantle fell on Mrs. Percy Vaughan, our pastor's wife, who even refused us a vacation from meetings during the hot weather, though she, of all present, needed it most. However, she is one, of very few, who is a doer of the Word and not a hearer only. Her individual work along the line of Social Service, I'm sure, takes the prize in the Mississippi Conference. Without help she organized a sewing club for Negro girls, the membership of which is sixteen. On Thursday morning of each week she has them at the parsonage, where she teaches them not only sewing, but Scripture passages, prayers, ethics, and has them sing. Recently they asked for a picnic, which request was granted, and out in a grove near the parsonage she went with them, helping with their lunch, games, etc. After several meetings of the club, there came to her assistance a kindly, capable Negro woman, one of the teachers in the school here. Some of us were enthusiastic over the study of Miss Haskin's well written book, "Handicapped Winners," and we had some interesting programs as we studied it. Tears came to our eyes and hearts as we studied this chronicle, and I believe a more interested and kindly feeling was generated for "our brother in black," but this dear, frail little woman is the only one that has been led out to do individual work for this neighbor at our door.

We have studied a book on African missions, Miss Haskin's "Handicapped Winners," and "The Child and America's Future." Had we a more executive Superintendent of Study, we might have more interest in the study class. However, we can hope that it will be better further on.

M. HELEN STEWART,
Superintendent of Study and Publicity.

A LETTER FROM HARBIN, MANCHURIA.

58 Bolshoi Prospect,
Harbin, Manchuria, China,
June 12, 1924.

Dear Miss Howell: In answer to your letter about the estimates, I would say that though I know that on most fields failure to receive the full estimates must be a great disappointment and handicap to the work, yet in our case it is better so, we think, for we feel that we are not yet ready in language or in understanding of the people to begin work on a much larger scale. If we can receive the estimates we asked for the following year, we shall be glad.

With another year of study I believe we can get the language to such an extent that afterwards, with the further study we may be able to do along with our work, may be able perhaps almost to master it. We have found, too, that we greatly need to study the people and their customs and institutions, for it is easy to make mistakes not knowing them any better than we do.

At the last meeting of the Missionary Society in Modigou, the women decided to make a pledge for foreign missions. They left it for a committee to choose the place to send it and to suggest the amount, but gave as their desire that they help send the gospel to "those who know the least about Jesus Christ." These refugee women at the present time are not only poor themselves, but are trying to help other refugees that are even poorer, but I am glad that while they are helping to relieve the material needs of their own people they want to share in spreading the gospel in other places of the earth. The committee met last night and decided to report Korea as their choice and 25 yen as the amount. I wish you could be present at one of their meetings and see the pride they take in preparing and making their talks. The men had a great deal of curiosity to see how women could conduct a meeting, so last time the women said they might come if they wanted to. They came, and with all we had more than a hundred present. There are twenty-six members.

The women in New Town are doing much to relieve the poor. They gave a concert and made more than two hundred yen. They had a very noted violinist, besides other artists, and were given tea and cakes by different stores to serve and sell. In all it was a great success. Yet we have decided never to have any more concerts, for everything we have—elementary school, institute, church, concerts and all—must be in the same building, and this is beyond the comprehension of the Russian people, especially that a concert should be in the place where church services are held.

It is summer in Harbin. We have found that sometimes it is as hot here in summer as it is cold in winter. Russians love picnics even more than Americans. Last week I took my Sunday school class for an outing to the first little station outside of Harbin. There is a quiet little lake there, not very deep, in which the boys swam and fished and the girls went boat-riding. It did me good to see how thoroughly they enjoyed it all.

The first of June our elementary schools and institute closed, the schools for the summer, and the institute for three weeks. We shall open the institute again on June 23 for a special six weeks' summer session, of Bible, church history, and English. Mr. Erwin is to teach the History of Methodism, Miss Wahl, the Life of Christ, and I the Life of Paul. During the last two weeks of the school we are planning a revival meeting, two missionaries from Korea coming up to conduct them. We are sorry that Mr. Stokes will be unable to come.

I wanted to tell you all about Easter in Harbin, for Easter is the biggest and most interesting Russian holiday, but it has been almost impossible to find time to write, and now that is out of date.

Lillian sends love.

Sincerely,

SUMMERTIME!

Taking down the draperies?

Putting the rugs away in camphor balls?

Geeting ready for the long, warm, summer days?

Fine!

Just one thing we are asking you not to put away this year—your missionary enthusiasm. If you should, in spite of this request, insist on putting same away, remember it will not only hurt you, but your Missionary Society, your church, and the Conference. So don't do it; try keeping it out and using same all summer.

For your summer reading, we recommend the Conference Minutes, just out. (If you didn't get a copy, write Mrs. Cunningham and ask her if she has an extra copy). In spite of the fact they are just off the press, we would already like to make a change or two. The President stated at Bogalusa we would have no girl in Scarritt next fall; she disliked making the statement, but in March it really looked as if it would be true. Now we have the girl; and one of the finest in Louisiana, Miss Eva May Pierce, of Natchitoches. All we need now is the scholarship money to send her to Scarritt. Money is much easier to give, than to give your life as Miss Pierce has done, yet to some one the giving of this scholarship money will be a real opportunity to make a fine investment. You have the "talent" that God needs. As prayer brought us the girl, we are sure prayer will bring the money to send her to Scarritt. — Louisiana Missionary News.

WORTH THINKING ABOUT.

Dear Brother Carley: I would like to have space in your paper for a short article. When a boy, I was converted kneeling at my mother's knee. I have never had any doubt about my conversion, though the devil has often tried to cheat me out of the blessing. The last words my mother said to me just before she died, were, "Reuben, we will soon be there."

Mother has been in heaven seventy years, and I have as long been trying to get there. Blessed be God, I am now nearing the end, and will soon be there!

It has been a hard fight, a long struggle; the devil has sorely tried me, but a fervent trust and faith in God have brought me through. My home training was the best. The altar fires never ceased to burn in my father's home, and every encouragement necessary was given me. I often felt the need of encouragement from the church that I did not get. While a boy at Pleasant Valley church, the preacher asked me to take a walk with him. We walked out into the grove, and there he had me to kneel in prayer with him. I remember to this day that earnest, fervent prayer that was offered especially for me; and it was helpful. It did not occur again.

I had one pastor that was very helpful to me. When I would try to pray, and would almost be driven from the church with shame at my failure, he would place his hands on my shoulders, and say, "God bless you, Brother Millsaps, your prayers do me so much good—they have the right ring." That did me good and gave me courage.

I was talking to a young man who was not a Christian. He said to me, "You are the first man that ever talked to me about religion." If we have the love of God in our hearts, we will want to help others.

A cold, indifferent church is a poor nursery for the young. Jesus said to Peter, "If you love me, feed my lambs," meaning, as I understand it, "If you love me, you will feed my lambs." For the want of that love in the church the lambs are neglected. Many fall by the way for the want of encouragement. Many do not get the needed encouragement in their homes.

Last year I spent some time in a nearby town and enjoyed being with the Junior Flying Squadron—a class of fine boys, who promise to be good workers. I loved the boys and loved to be with them in their prayer meetings and hear their earnest prayers and bright testimonies. I was happy.

Last week I was in that town again, and the first thing was to inquire of the leader how my young friends were getting on. I was told that they had disbanded. I wanted to know why, and was told that they had become discouraged. They did not get the needed encouragement from the church or their homes. It made my heart sad.

It is a sad state of affairs. More religion, old-time family altar religion, is needed. Will it come? It must come. Parents must take more interest in the religious training of their children. The church membership must become the shepherds that Jesus wants them to be.

R. W. MILLSAPS.

"Mother Why Not Try The Newer Form Of Iron

And Be Strong and Well and Have Nice Rosy Cheeks Instead of Being Nervous and Irritable all the Time and Looking So Haggard and Old?"

"The doctor gave some to Susie Smith's mother and she was worse off than you are and now she looks just fine." There can be no healthy, beautiful rosy-cheeked women without iron. Good physicians have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more of the newer form of iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking patients. When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks, and strength and vitality from their bodies. This newer form of iron, like the iron in your blood and like the iron in certain green vegetables, is highly recommended to thousands who wish quickly to increase their strength, power and endurance. It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you the proper amount of good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale, and sickly-looking, just like a plant trying to grow in soil deficient in iron.

You can tell the women with plenty of iron in their blood—beautiful, healthy, rosy-cheeked women, full of life, vim and vitality. You can get Nuxated Iron from any druggist under an absolute guarantee that it will do the same for you or your money back.

AN AMAZING FACT.

Dear Brother Editor An amazing thing has just happened. The Congress of the United States has passed a bill ordering a refund of a part of taxes already paid! Truly we are like the man in the parable whose grounds brought forth plenteously. Shall we be like him in his decision that he would feed his soul on his corn? Will we take all God's blessings for ourselves? If we do, there will be for us the same awful verdict from the lips of the same loving but just Lord, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be which thou has provided."

I am sending with this note a statement which has been reeently sent to the New York Times by Mr. Charles V. Vickery, General Secretary of the Near East Relief, which I hope you will print at an early date.

JAMES CANNON, JR.,
Chairman Near East Relief Advisory Committee, M. E. Church, South.

June 18, 1924.

To the Editor New York Times.

Sir: Is there any record in history of any country, previous to 1924, systematically refunding taxes once levied and collected?

We are certainly, at this time, enjoying a most unusual sensation of receiving back or having cancelled a portion of income taxes which we had expected to pay.

Are the American people sufficiently appreciative of the privilege of living in a land where there is property, prosperity, employment and wealth, with a government so well administered that even a portion of our taxes may be returned for other allocation?

America is, beyond all comparison, the richest and the most highly favored nation on earth, possessing approximately $320,803,862,000 (statistics of 1922) of the world's wealth, practically controlling the world's credit, with less than 7% of the world's population, owning and enjoying 87% of the world's automobiles, and spending annually $8,710,000,000 for luxuries. Serious unemployment in the United States at present is practically unknown.

By way of contrast, in Bible lands to-day, as well as in Greece, along the shores of the Aegean Sea, and in Armenia, there are tens of thousands of little orphaned children, many of whose parents were once prosperous and wealthy as we are to-day. Their parents (were they living to-day) would welcome the sensation of paying taxes. But cruel, devastating war, in which we participated, in which they were our allies, and of which but for a kindly Providence we, like them, might have been the victims, has not only robbed them of income on which to pay taxes, but of property and employment from which to draw income. These orphaned children, deprived of property, parents and country, if properly trained, are the hope of the Near East and of permanent peace at the crossroads of the world.

These thousands of children—most of them under twelve years of age, without father, mother or country—are dependent upon us for daily food and every necessity of life.

The unusual disbursements in saving the lives of many thousands of refugees following the Smyrna disaster exhausted the treasury of Near East Relief. The normal income during the summer months will support not more, than two-thirds of the children already in the orphanages, exclusive of those in refugee camps. Unless additional resources are pledged immediately, the order must go forth to discharge at least 10,000 and possibly more of these children.

Five dollars a month for six months (thirty dollars) from our rebated income taxes or from our regular weekly pay checks will save one of these children.

Golden Rule Sunday, to be observed throughout the world Dec. 7, together with the usual Thanksgiving and Christmas offerings, can be depended upon to replenish the treasury.

The problem is to tide these 10,000 or more orphans through the six summer-autumn months, from July 1 until Golden Rule Sunday, Dec. 7, or Christmas.

Will they live to have a Christmas?

Sincerely yours,
CHARLES V. VICKREY,
General Secretary.

"METHODIST DAY" AT DURANT, MISS.

The eleventh annual gathering of friends and fellow-workers in religious circles, known as "Methodist Day," was held at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. T. R. King, two miles north of Durant, on the Jeff Davis Highway, Wednesday, July 23, when about seventy-five were present, having responded to the invitation to take part in the occasion.

Eleven years ago, when Mrs. King was District Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, she invited a number of her fellow-workers to be her guests, and so pleasant and profitable did the occasion prove that the next summer the "Day" was repeated, and it has now come to be an event during the last days of July or first of August.

After the social hours of the morning, dinner was spread on tables out under the trees, and the company feasted to their hearts' content; then gathered in the large hall, where several games and interesting contests were engaged in, and many of the old-time songs rendered by the company.

Mrs. King, in a few words, assured the friends and co-workers that they were happy to have them gather for the annual occasion, and said: "When I get old and cannot go about or be active in church work, I want these gatherings to continue each year, because then I will enjoy you more than now."

Mrs. R. P. Neblett, for the Missionary Society, responded in thanks to Mr. and Mrs. King for their hospitality, and the program concluded with a prayer by the pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett, bringing the company to the end of "a perfect day."

FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

Dear Brother Carley: On Friday night, July 18, we closed a fine revival meeting with Brother O'Bryant at Eden, Miss. We are now beginning a tent meeting with Brother Mayo, on the High Point charge. Four churches, Center Ridge, Rural Hill, Whitehall, and Owen's Chapel, have all united in one central revival. The outlook is certainly promising for a great meeting. My young nephew, Hubbard Bass, is my singer.

I desire to sell my gospel tent at very low figure. Any interested write me. I prefer a larger tent.

JUST AN AMERICAN BOY.

Where the grass is green and the maples grow on a hillside in the village cemetery, they buried the body of Calvin Coolidge, Jr. The Green Mountains of Vermont stand guard over his silent resting place, which is the burial ground of his ancestors. The village, the quiet New England village, twelve miles from the railroad station, bears the name, Plymouth. We think at once of Plymouth, Mass., where the Pilgrim Fathers landed, and properly so. For about it all is a Puritan simplicity. "My faith looks up to thee," "Saviour, like a shepherd lead us," were sung by a mixed quartette, the minister read a few familiar words from the Bible, offered prayer, read the simple commitment service and a marine's bugle blew "taps." Such were the simple services at the grave, and these were in accord with the religious services at Northampton and in the east room of the White House. The grief-stricken father was the Chief Executive of the greatest nation on earth and the broken-hearted mother was the "first lady of the land," but nowhere appears the least show of royalty. The sixteen-year-old lad, whose "untimely taking off" the nation mourns, had nothing about him of the traditional prince. On the contrary, he was an American boy, a high school lad, a Boy Scout, the members of whose troop filed by and each dropped a rose into his open grave. This Puritan simplicity and pure Americanism which characterizes the present occupants of the White House makes a tremendous appeal to all who love those things which have made Puritanism so great a power in the history of the English-speaking world, and have set America apart from the pretensions of kings and courts.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

THE COST OF SELFISHNESS.

How much we rob ourselves or life through our selfishness! The Saviour of men has taught us, both by precept and example, that the highest happiness can come only through an unselfish and a continuous service. "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees," which was the very essence of all that was selfish and petty and self-righteous, for that leaven can work nothing but spiritual death.

It is high time that we examine these hearts of ours in the light of the teachings of Christ. Before we get too severe with the priest and the Levite, we would do well to see how much glass there is in our house. "According to Christ" is the divine criterion for us. To have the spirit of the Christ in our souls should be our supreme aim in life. Our prayer should be that of the poet who wrote:

"Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

COLLEGE TIME COMING.

In a little more than a month, the colleges throughout the land will throw open their doors to the thousands of young men and women whose purpose it is to prepare themselves adequately for the responsibilities of life. A college education is an exceedingly important part of the preparation that is more and more necessary for the achievement of the highest success in life. College training is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. It does not always accomplish what it is intended to accomplish but no other plan of human devising always works exactly as it was expected to work. The best we can do is to do the best we can. A college education has proved its value beyond question as a preparatoin for life, and it should be sought and obtained whenever at all possible. Wise parents will do all in their power to send their children to college, and the young people themselves should covet earnestly the privileges and opportunities of advanced study. We are speaking, of course, of Christian education.

WILL IT PROMOTE PEACE?

The designation by the Secretary of War of Sept. 12 as National Defense Day, at which time there is to be a mobilization of the resources of the nation such as would be called for in case of a national emergency, has aroused widespread comment and vigorous opposition. The opposition is based upon the view that such a mobilization will create suspicion in the minds of the people of other nations as to the sincere adherence of the United States to a program of peace, and also upon the fear that it will be looked upon by other nations as intended to overawe them by a show of resources that would be available in case of another war. There is also the feeling on the part of some that there are certain influences at work in this country to promote and maintain a militaristic spirit that was greatly weakened by the horrors of the World War.

Our own attitude toward this movement by the War Department is determined by the effect it is likely to have upon the efforts to promote world peace. The world is sick of war. It is now ten years since the Great Conflict began—and the world is still suffering acutely from the evils of that conflict and struggling to solve the problems that grew out of its waging. Millions of lives were sacrificed on the field of battle; the map of Europe was changed; incalculable economic losses were incurred; untold suffering was endured even by noncombatants and civilians of all nations; the social order has experienced an upheaval, and the morals of the whole world have suffered—all as the result of war. And the views of military experts of all nations are freely expressed to the effect that another war would be more terrible in every way than the one whose evil results are still being felt!

That the United States has resources sufficient to enable it to meet any national emergency, no well-informed person can doubt; and our whole national history proves that the people of this country will respond when such an emergency arises. Why, then, enter upon a mobilization movement when all our thinking and all our efforts are—or should be—toward peace? Prayer for peace, and not preparation for war should engage the attention of the whole world at this time.

GUESSING—OR WORSE.

In connection with items appearing in the press recently to the effect that during the last thirty days 1,600,000 cases of liquor were smuggled into the United States, Acting Federal Prohibition Commissioner James E. Jones has issued the following statement:

"It is impossible to obtain official figures on the amount of liquor that is being smuggled into this country. The Prohibition Unit has no such figures, and Under-Secretary of the Treasury Winston has stated that the United States Coast Guard has no figures on the quantity of liquor being smuggled into this country. It is not known where the figures upon which these newspaper articles were based were obtained, but they were not secured from an official government source. Any such figures must necessarily be based on estimates and guesses, for if it were possible to check up accurately on the number of cases of liquor smuggled in, it is a fair conclusion that the Government would know where, when, and by whom such was being smuggled, and it would immediately be seized. Personally, I am of the opinion that the amount is, and has been, very, very greatly exaggerated. From time to time articles similar to the one referred to have appeared in the press, only to be later discredited by the facts."

It is evident that the bootleggers and their friends are doing some tall lying. They are capable of either one, or both.

HOW DO THEY KNOW?

It is interesting to us to observe the logical certainty with which some people make statements concerning the effect of the adoption of the plan of unification. A little calm reflection will, we believe, convince anybody that it is utterly beyond the power of any human being to predict certainly what will be the result in case of adoption. Those in favor of the plan believe that certain greatly to be desired results will follow; those opposed to its adoption believe that certain [illegible] will follow. Those opposing [illegible] are based upon a [illegible] of the [illegible] of the Annual Conferences, the General Conference [illegible] is supposed to be, and not upon a clearly defined revelation as to what will be the outcome. For the moment, we have before us a statement based upon a group of [illegible] of the plan, in which the writer expresses the opinion that "if the Annual Conferences should adopt it, our church would be speedily disintegrated and absorbed by the Northern Methodist Church. But if our people are [illegible] and informed about the matter, the Annual Conferences will reject it." To put it mildly, that is certainly an extreme statement. It is extreme, for out of a vote of 572 in the Chattanooga General Conference, 498 were recorded in favor of the plan, while only 74 were recorded against it. Does any say that the fact that the plan lacked only about fifty votes of being carried in the General Conference is proof that it did not have a very strong appeal to the members of that distinguished body; when we remember however that it took a two-thirds majority to adopt it and that it actually received a large majority, it would seem that the plan commended itself overwhelmingly to the representatives of the people. There [illegible] to the support of such a measure on the part of the representatives of the people, it seems to us hardly called for any to consider that plan as a matter over which to [illegible]. A majority is not always right, but when over eighty-five of a carefully selected, generally intelligent, typically American body of men and women approve a given measure, the presumption at least is in favor of the view that their judgment is correct. But we do not fall out with the minority [illegible] honest, intelligent, sincere in their views as to the plan, but we do not know that if the plan should be put into effect it would mean the destruction and absorption of the Southern Church by the Northern; that only time can tell.

WHICH?

"Did you make your job, or did your job make you?" is a question we came across the other day and paused a few moments to think about. Most little jobs are held by little people. When a little man gets into a little job, he and the job both stay little. If a big man gets a little job he makes the job big. If a little man gets into a big job he either grows up for the job and then drops out. As a rule, the man makes the job: little man little job; big man, big job. A big job cannot make a big man out of a little man; a little man cannot make a big job out of a little job. "Did you make your job, or did your job make you?"

PLAN OF UNIFICATION AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler,

Many imagine, and some are saying, that the proposed plan of unification will prevent the overlapping of the work of the two churches in foreign fields, and thereby do much good and save much expense.

But this is not true. There is no overlapping in the foreign fields. The Southern Methodists occupy Cuba exclusively and also Brazil, while the Northern Methodists occupy exclusively Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and other countries in South America. Similar separation of the two churches is maintained in other lands. There is no unseemly setting up of "altar against altar" in any foreign field.

In our own land only does the Northern Church invade the work of the Southern Church.

This has been admitted and deplored by official representatives of the Northern Church in a declaration adopted by the Federal Council of Methodism, Jan. 21, 1914, and approved by our General Conference at Oklahoma City, May, 1914. That document was signed by three bishops, three elders and three laymen of the Northern Church. Referring to the agreements of comity and federation to the framing of which the Council had devoted its efforts, the document thus signed says:

> "As the visible outcome of these efforts toward more cordial relations we have agreements preventing competition in the mission fields of Asia, South America, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Phillipines.
> "With deep humiliation it must be confessed that two great families of one Methodism, while agreeing abroad and singing the same hymns and teaching the same doctrines everywhere, have not ceased to contend at home and in the very presence of the people whom they are seeking to save through the gospel of peace and reconciliation.
> "But if these two churches, so close akin, cannot live together apart, they would surely live apart if together. Strife cannot beget love. Nor can it be honest stewardship to waste the Lord's treasure in building altar against altar, while the missionaries of both churches, who, marching shoulder to shoulder to the conquest of the world, are anxiously appealing for the re-enforcements we might send them with the money now being used to maintain frontier antagonisms all along our home border. Under such conditions how dare we continue war expenses at home?"

But "the war expenses at home" have been continued, and under the proposed plan of unification the agreements of comity and federation designed to reduce them are repealed, and the invasion of the home field of the Southern Church by the Northern Church is made legal and legitimate. Thus "the war expenses at home" will be increased. Indeed, since "the plan" was published they have been increased as never before.

So it is obvious the plan does nothing to remove overlapping in foreign fields, where there is no overlapping; but it does legalize and stimulate the increase of "war expenses at home," whereby money that ought to go to foreign fields is wasted on the needless duplication of work in the home field.

Moreover, the proposed plan confers upon the Super-General Conference of the United Church the power "to make provision for such organization of the work of the united church outside the United States as may promptly consummate the unity of Episcopal Methodism in foreign lands."

The plain implication of that is that the mission boards of the two churches will be merged into one. And the Northern Church, by its superior numbers, will control that one Board.

This significant fact must be considered in the light of another provision of "the plan" which makes it impossible to organize any new mission without "the approval of the General Conference."

If that had been the rule in 1898, our Cuban Mission could not have been set up without the consent of the General Conference, and the delay would have defeated its organization.

In this connection attention should be directed to the power conferred on "the Judicial Council" by "the proposed plan," whereby that body is authorized to extend its supervision over all boards.

The language of "the plan" on this point is as follows:

> "The Judicial Council shall also have power to arrest an action of a connectional board or other connectional body when such action is brought before it by appeal of one-fifth of the members of said body present and voting or by a majority of the bishops.
> "All decisions of the Judicial Council shall be made by a majority of the total membership of the Council."

It is easy to see how the exercise of this power may seriously affect foreign missions—and may ill-affect them.

Another fact to be considered is that all the foreign missions of both churches will ultimately become independent churches.

Already the Methodist Church of Japan has been set up, and at no distant day similar churches will be organized in Brazil, Mexico, China, Korea, and the other mission fields. Indeed, such churches ought to be organized; for both by the practice of the primitive church and by the historic precedents of Methodism, evangelical Christianity has been promoted by such divisions and separations.

Attemps to organize what are called "world churches" are unscriptural as well as unwise. They ignore national lines and racial characteristics, and thereby engender hurtful antipathies and injurious strife.

It may be doubted if it is altogether proper for foreign members of our church, who must soon cease to be members of it and become members of their own national churches, to be used in efforts to influence opinion and control policies in the home field concerning which they can have but little interest and still less information. A becoming modesty should suggest to them their incompetency to pass on such matters and their unfitness for advising the church at home about what concerns immediately and exclusively conditions in the home field.

Those who seek to use them for such ill-advised purposes are not wise, to say the least of such methods.

A STATEMENT BY THE MAJORITY OF THE BISHOPS TOUCHING THE LEGALITY OF THE SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference in session at Hot Springs, Ark., in May, 1922, adopted the following resolution as part of the report of the Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause:

"Instead of the Joint Convention proposed we recommend a special session of the General Conference of our church. When a plan of unification is enforsed by a two-thirds vote of each Commission and approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, then our College of Bishops is empowered and instructed to call the special session of our General Conference."

In obedience to, and in accordance with, the instructions contained in this resolution, the bishops, on May 20, 1924, issued the following call:

"By order of a majority of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a special session of the General Conference is hereby called to meet July 2, 1924, 9:30 a. m., to consider the Plan of Unification and approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"The place of meeting of this special session will be selected and announced by the committee appointed and authorized by the General Conference which was held at Hot Springs, Ark., May, 1922, to choose the place and arrange for the entertainment of the next session of the General Conference.

"WARREN A. CANDLER, Chairman.
"COLLINS DENNY, Secretary."

"Nashville, Tenn., May 20, 1924."

Inasmuch as certain questions have been raised as to the powers of the General Conference to deliver instructions as are contained in the above resolution, and as to the power of the bishops to call a special session under these instructions and the provisions of Paragraphs Nos. 37 and 38, of the Book of Discipline, we feel that it is our responsibility and duty to lay before you our interpretation of the authority and powers of the General Conference.

Concerning the powers of the General Conference we would in this connection call your attention to the fact that in the year 1820 the General Conference set off to the British Conference of Wesleyan Methodism the several circuits and societies in Lower Canada; and that in 1828 they separated the Annual Conferences of Upper Canada from their jurisdiction and erected the same into a distinct and independent church. In neither instance was their action referred to the Annual Conferences for ratification, and their authority to do this has never been called in question. What to us is of yet greater importance is that, in 1844, the Plan of Separation whereby the setting up of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was authorized, was agreed upon by the General Conference; and this Plan of Separation was not sent down to the Annual Conferences. Then in 1870 the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was erected into an independent church, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, by action of our General Conference without thought of its references to the Annual Conferences. We are, therefore, of the opinion that since the General Conference has power to take such actions as we have just mentioned, it has ample authority to empower and instruct the bishops to call a special session.

The Action of the 1922 General Conference Has Become One of the "Rules and Regulations" of the Church.

We would respectfully call attention to the fact that the General Conference has "full powers to make rules and regulations for our church" under the limitations contained in the six Restrictive Rules (see paragraph 42). However, holding that the General Conference should not be the judge of the constitutionallty of its own acts, the church provided in 1870 for the arrest by the bishops of legislation which, in their opinion, required the concurrent action of the Annual Conferences. The law is as follows:

"When any rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference which, in the opinion of the bishops, is unconstitutional, the bishops may present to the Conference which passed said rule or regulation their objections thereto, with their reasons, in writing; and if then the General Conference shall, by two-thirds vote, adhere to its action or said rule or regulation, it shall then take the course prescribed for altering a Restrictive Rule, and it thus passed upon affirmatively, the bishops shall announce that such rule or regulation takes effect from that time."

In paragraph 632 is an important Episcopal decision which was concurred in by all the bishops, and is an authoritative interpretation of this law. it is as follows:

"The General Conference directed an Annual Conference to divide its territory into two Conferences, and made it 'the duty of the Conference at its next session to choose the line of division.' The legality of this action of the General Conference was questioned during the next session of the Annual Conference concerned. The presiding bishop decided and the College of Bishops concurred that the determination of the unconstitutionality of an act of the General Conference has been committed, not to the single bishop who is presiding either in the General or in the Annual Conference, but only to the College of Bishops; and that body presents, not to an Annual Conference, not even to any General Conference, but only to the General Conference which passed the rule or regulation, its written objections to the action of the General Conference, in which written objections their reasons are to be set forth.

"The General Conference having made it the duty of a Conference to divide, it is competent for the Conference to order that no line of division shall be fixed except upon a separate and distinct vote on that line itself; that the division of the Conference does not take place till some proposed line shall secure a majority of the votes cast; and that should no proposed line secure a majority of the vote cast, the whole question must be referred to the next General Conference."

The gist of this decision is "that the determination of the unconstitutionality of an act of the General Conference has been committed" "only to the College of Bishops" "and that body presents, not to an Annual Conference, nor even to any General Conference, but only to the General Conference which passed the rule or regulation, its written objections." It is a matter of fact that neither in the case of this resolution of the General Conference providing for a special session nor of a similar resolution of the General Conference of 1918 did the bishops interpose any objections. It is evident, therefore, that since the bishops did not interpose any objections to the resolution providing for a special session of the General Conference, this action has become one of the rules or regulations of the church, and is, therefore, binding on the bishops.

Paragraphs 37 and 38 Confer Full Power on the Bishops to Call a General Conference at Any Time.

But apart from the resolution empowering and instructing the bishops to call a special session of the General Conference, Paragraphs 37 and 38 of the Discipline confer full power on the bishops "to call a General Conference at any time, if they judge it necessary."

The history leading up to the enactment of this law is illuminating. The last General Conference of our church held prior to the War between the States was in the city of Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1858. Shortly thereafter came on the war and all the disorder both in State and church that followed. For eight years there was no session of the General Conference. The bishops were at that time without authority to call a special session. Under the law then in the Discipline, a General Conference could not be called until every Annual Conference, including the smallest and most remote, had joined in the call. Evidently it was to meet this difficulty that the present law as contained in Paragraphs 37 and 38 was enacted. If this law of 1866 had been intended to mean no more than that a called session of the General Conference could not be held until all the Annual Conferences, including the smallest and most remote, had had opportunity to elect delegates to the General Conference, then it would have been no improvement over the old law which left the calling of the General Conference to the vote of all the Annual Conferences, and our fathers of 1866 failed entirely to do what they plainly intended to do, namely, to make it possible to have a session of the General Conference at any time the bishops judged it to be necessary.

The Bishops Are the Interpreters of the Law.

It should not be forgotten that, according to the uniform usage and law of the church, the bishops are the interpreters of the law when questions come before them in the regular administration of the affairs of the church. Frequently, in District and Annual Conferences, question of law come up for episcopal decision. In the due administration of their office as General Superintendents, the interpretation of Paragraphs 37 and 38 came before the bishops. The question involved was: "Have the bishops authority under the law to call a General Conference at any time? Or must they see to it that the called session of the General Conference comes at such a time as will permit all the Annual Conferences to elect new delegates if they so desire?"

The College of Bishops have decided that Paragraphs 37 and 38 confer upon them the authority to call a session of the General Conference "at any time, if they judge it necessary." The decision of the highest Civil Courts in the land removes all fear that the interpretation of the law of the church by the College of Bishops can be successfully challenged. The attitude of the courts toward ecclesiastical decisions is fully covered in the case of Watson vs. Jones, 13 Wallace, 679, where the Supreme Court of the United States in discussing ecclesiastical decisions, says (at page 729):

"Nor do we see that justice would be likely to be promoted by submitting those decisions to review in the ordinary judicial tribunals. Each of these large and influential bodies (to mention no others, let reference be had to the Protestant Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal, and the Presbyterian Churches), has a body of constitutional and ecclesiastic law of its own, to be found in their written organic laws, their books of discipline, in their collection of precedents, in their usage and customs, which as to each constitute a system of ecclesiastical law and religious faith that task the ablest minds to become familiar with. It is not to be supposed that the judges of the civil court can be as competent in the ecclesiastical law, and religious faith of all these bodies as the ablest men in each in reference to their own. It would, therefore, be an appeal from the more learned tribunal in the law which should decide this case to one which is less so."

It is manifest, therefore, that a decision of the ecclesiastical tribunal is final, and binding upon the courts.

The Supreme Court of the United States Has Decided What the Powers of the General Conference Are.

The final reply to all who question the authority of the 1922 General Conference to order a special session, or the power of the General Conference to enact Paragraphs 37 and 38, is contained in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Smith vs. Swormstedt, which is the Cincinnati Book Concern case, which was heard in Washington, D. C., in April, 1851. The opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Nelson, the entire court concurring in the decison. Upon this decision rests our legal standing as a church. It was this decision that gave us possession of property which was rightfully claimed as our own. If the Supreme Court of the United States was mistaken in its conclusions, then up to this good hour we have not legally separated from our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the property which the courts turned over to us is not rightfully held by us. We call your attention, therefore, to this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, because it is the supreme and final authority from which there can be no appeal, and it forever settles the question touching the powers of the General Conference. We quote as follows:

"In the year 1844 the traveling preachers, in General Conference assembled, for causes which it is not important particularly to refer to, agreed upon a plan of division of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in slave-holding States from [illegible] necessary, and to the erection of two [illegible] ecclesiastical organizations. [illegible] According to this plan, it was agreed that [illegible] Conferences adhering to the Church, South, by a majority of their respective members, should remain under the pastoral care of that church; and all of the several Conferences adhering, by a majority of its members, to the Church, North, should remain under the pastoral care of that church; and, further, that the ministers, local and traveling, should, as they might prefer, attach themselves, without blame, to the church, North or South. It was also agreed that the common property of the church, including this Book Concern, that belonged specially to the traveling preachers, should, in case the separation took place, be divided between the two churches in proportion to the number of traveling preachers falling within the respective divisions. This was in 1844. In the following year the Southern Annual Conferences met in convention, in pursuance of the plan of separation, and determined upon a division, and resolved that the Annual Conferences should be constituted into a separate ecclesiastical connection, and based upon the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, comprehending the doctrines and entire moral, ecclesiastical, and economical rules and regulations of said Discipline, except only so far as verbal alterations might be necessary; and to be known by the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"The divisions of the church, as originally constituted, thus became complete; and from this time two separate and distinct organizations have taken the place of the one previously existing. . . .

"It is insisted, however, that the General Conference of 1844 possessed no power to divide the Methodist Episcopal Church as then organized, or to consent to such division; and hence, that the organization of the Church, South, was without authority, and the traveling preachers within it separated from an ecclesiastical connection which is essential to enable them to participate as beneficiaries. . . . .

"But we do not agree that this division was made without proper authority. On the contrary, we entertain no doubt but that the General Conference of 1844 was competent to make it; and that each division of the church, under the separate organizations, is just as legitimate, and can claim as high a connection, ecclesiastical and temporal, as the Methodist Episcopal Church first founded in the United States. The same authority which founded that Church in 1784 has divided it, and established two separate and independent organizations, occupying the place of the old one.

"In 1784, when this church was first established, and down till 1808 the General Conference was composed of all the traveling preachers in that connection. This body of preachers founded it by organizing its government, ecclesiastical and temporal, established its doctrines and discipline, appointed its superintendents, or bishops, its ministers and preachers, and other subordinate authorities to administer its polity, and promulgate its doctrines and teachings throughout the land.

"It cannot, therefore, be denied. Indeed, it has scarcely been denied, that this body, while composed of all the traveling preachers, possessed the power to divide it, and authorize the organization and establishment of the two separate independent churches. The power must necessarily be regarded as inherent in the General Conference. As they might have constructed two ecclesiastical organizations over the territory of the United States originally, if deemed expedient, in the place of one, so they might at any subsequent period, the power remaining unchanged.

"But it is insisted that this power has been taken away or given up by the action of the General Conference of 1808. In that year the Constitution of this body was changed so as to be composed thereafter by traveling preachers, to be elected by the Annual Conferences, in the ratio of one for every five members. This has been altered from time to time, so that, in 1844, the representation was one for every twenty-one members. At the time of this change, and as a part of it, certain limitations were imposed upon the powers of this General Conference, called the six restrictive articles: 1. That they should not alter or change the Articles of Religion, or establish any new standard of doctrines. 2. Nor allow of more than one representative for every fourteen members of the Annual Conferences, nor less than one for every thirty. 3. Nor alter the government so as to do away with Episcopacy, or destroy the plan of itinerant superintendencies. 4. Nor change the rules of the united societies. 5. Nor deprive the ministers or preachers of trial by a committee, and of appeal; nor members before the society, or lay committee, and appeal. And 6th, nor appropriate the proceeds of the Book Concern, nor the Charter Fund, to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows and children. Subject to these restrictions, the delegated Conference possessed the same powers as when composed of the entire body of preachers. And it will be seen that these relate only to the doctrine of the church, its representation in the General Conference, the Episcopacy, Discipline of its preachers and members, the Book Concern and Charter Fund. In all other respects, and in everything else that concerns the welfare of the church, the General Conference represents the sovereign power the same as before. This is the view taken by the General Conference itself, as exemplified by the usage and practice of that body. In 1820 they set off to the British Conference of Wesleyan Methodists the several circuits and societies in Lower Canada. And in 1828 they separated the Annual Conference of Upper Canada from their jurisdiction, and erected the same into a distinct and independent church. These instances, together with the present division in 1844, furnish evidence of the opinions of the eminent and experienced men of this church in these several Conferences, of the power claimed, which, if the question was otherwise doubtful, should be regarded as decisive in favor of it."

We draw your attention especially to the following language: "Subject to these restrictions" (namely, the 'restrictive rules'), "the delegated Conference possessed the same powers as when composed of the entire body of preachers. . . . In all other respects and in everything else that concerns the welfare of the church, the General Conference represents the sovereign power the same as before." If then "in all other respects and in everything else that concerns the welfare of the church the General Conference represents the sovereign power the same as before it became a delegated body it unquestionably has full authority to empower and instruct the bishops regarding the call of a special session of the General Conference, and full power to enact Paragraphs 37 and 38.

To say that the General Conference does not possess this power, is to deny the correctness of the central and vital principle upon which is based the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to gainsay and deny the correctness of that decision would land us in a predicament which would be extremely embarrassing.

Such are the powers of the General Conference and such the authority of the bishops as interpreters of ecclesiastical law, invested in them by the law of the church and secured to them by the law of the land. In the exercise of these powers and of this authority the General Conference has been assembled in Chattanooga, Tenn., to deal with the most important question which has come before the church since 1844.

NEWTON DISTRICT NOTES.

In some respects, the Newton District is making a fairly good record. More than one-fourth of the present membership of the Mississippi Conference came from the bounds of this district. None but three regular pastors in the district have a promised salary, including the mission appropriation, of less than $1,200, and only one with less than $1,100. This district has had more students in Millsaps College than any other district except the Jackson District, and equals that one, not counting the local students. We have a fine lot of hard-working, consecrated pastors in this district, due to the work of the former presiding elder, Rev. J. A. Moore.

Starting with the appointments in alphabetical order, we have the Bay Springs charge, being served by Rev. P. H. Grice. From the work he has done, you will readily see that Brother Grice appreciates the fact that the pastor is a man sent to serve rather than be served. And I think that can be said of every pastor in the district. He has organized and built one church during the year, has had approximately eighty accessions to the church, and his finances were in good shape at the third quarterly conference. He serves five organized churches.

Next in order is Rev. T. B. Winstead, of Carthage, the county site of Leake County. He has six organized churches, but, having the greater portion of the county under his supervision, he has sixteen preaching places. This is his fifth year on that charge, and he is doing fine work.

* * *

Our young man, Rev. H. J. Oakly, on the Chunkey circuit, is in high favor with his people, and has had a good increase in membership, and also in financial support over last year.

* * *

Rev. C. H. Strait is serving his third year on the Decatur and Hickory charge. He is a man who tries to live up to the name he bears. He does his best to keep his membership straight, and when time comes to hold a quarterly conference he has all reports and records straight and in order. He is in fine favor with his people. He hopes to finish paying for the church at Hickory before Conference.

* * *

Forest and Morton make a delightful charge, and the pastor, H. J. Moore, is happy in his work there. Forest is now building a commodious annex to the church in order to do more efficient Sunday school work. The cost will be something over $4,000.

Harperville and Lena is a charge of eight organized churches—a great field for service. Harperville has one of the largest and best agricultural high schools to be found anywhere in the State. The pastor, Rev. W. W. Murry, has been faithful and earnest in his work. He has led the moral and law-enforcing agencies of that section of Scott County until the illegal traffic in liquor is not profitable.

* * *

Lake, where S. N. Young is serving his third year, is doing fine. The church has been repainted, and the parsonage repaired and painted. With the deep well, and new improvements, Lake has one of the best parsonages in the district.

* * *

Rev. T. C. Cooper, on the Homewood charge, thinks he has the finest four-point circuit in the whole Conference—and I know he is not far wrong. There are nearly 700 members in the four churches, and each church located in a prosperous farming section, none of them more than ten miles from the parsonage, but owing to the condition of the roads and the coming of the automobile, he travels about forty miles to reach two of his appointments.

* * *

In the growing city of Laurel we have three pastors. Rev. J. R. Jones, of First Church, is in high favor with his people, that church being one of our strong congregations to-day. They have the resources, numerically, financially, and spiritually, to do great things in that church.

Brother Ramsey is doing faithful work at West End. He is serving his third year, and is still working hard. He has his plans in good shape to re-cover and repair the church. I was with him last Sunday.

Rev. T. A. Ferguson has done a fine work at Kingston during his year and eight months' service. I preached for him Sunday night and held his third quarterly conference. Salary paid to date, and he was given a vacation at this time.

Rev. M. R. Jones is serving the Montrose charge. Everything seems to run smoothly with him. Only words of commendation concerning his life and work have reached me.

* * *

Rev. N. B. Harmon, our pastor here in Newton, met with an accident on Monday, the 21st of July, which came near being a serious matter. He was struck by a runaway horse, and rendered unconscious for a while. He is on the mend. He has been given a month's vacation, and will leave in a day or two for the coast to be present at the Seashore Camp meeting.

I will mention the work of the other pastors in a later report.

HOW THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE IMPRESSES THE MIND OF A JAPANESE CHILD.

By W. E. Towson.

One feature of our tent meeting in Kyoto was a series of special services for the children of the neighborhood. These were conducted by Brother J. M. Aoki, of the Japan Evangelistic Band, a specialist in this kind of work. The children came in increasing numbers for the ten nights, numbering as many as 250 at the close. The leader asked them to write out for him a statement of what impressed them in each message, and a number did so. He has kindly furnished me with a translation of a few of these "impressions." They have a distinct value, revealing as they do how the Christian message impresses the mind of a child and what appeals to him when he hears it for the first time. The reader of this paper should recall that these children are all from so-called "heathen homes," that they had had no Christian instruction, and even very little, in an ethical way, from their teachers.

As a wise master builder Brother Aoki, in his addresses, gave to the children such foundation truths as the existence of the one true God; our relation to God, his righteousness, his law; man's sin and need of salvation and his own utter helplessness. He then gave the gospel message of God's love to us sinners, in the gift of Christ for our salvation. Did these "heathen" children take it in, did they understand the message? Let the following "impressions" written by his little auditors, boys and girls, answer the question.

A boy of eleven wrote: "Although I have known that idols were made by men's hands, yet I have been inclined to think that, perhaps, they were true gods, after all; but in these meetings I have understood clearly about them and all my belief in them has vanished." Another boy of the same age wrote: "I was greatly impressed with your talk last night. I learned from it, (1) God is almighty. (2) He made man. Our teachers have been telling us that men came from monkeys. (3) I have not only an earthly father, but another Father, who is Almighty, and is the Creator of heaven and earth, and that is a great blessing to me, I think." A girl of ten heard, for the first time, that God created the heaven and the earth, making man from the dust and gave him a living soul. "I am so glad," she wrote, "that our true Father is God in heaven." A girl of thirteen wrote, "I think that we are so blessed that we can call God 'Father.'" A girl of twelve was "much impressed" with the thought that "her soul is the most important thing," more valuable than learning, money, rice, etc. She adds, "I learned that it is impossible to carry money and things, even if we are very rich, into the other world."

The following shows that these children think on the serious things of life and are impressed by their solemnity. Saburo San, a boy of eleven, wrote as follows: "I have been wondering whether there is a heaven and a hell, after our death. Sometimes, I have thought there are no such places; but now, I quite clearly understand, and I believe there is a heaven and a hell to which men go after death." The same boy wrote, after a talk on the righteousness of God, illustrated by the story of the deluge: "All of Noah's family were saved because they were righteous, and the rest of men, who were not righteous, perished in the terrible flood. So we must not forget the righteousness of God." A little girl of only eleven, after hearing the same address, wrote Brother Aoki: "I am impressed with the thought that though we desire to go to heaven after death, if we are sinners we cannot go there."

The children were told not only of God and sin, but also of salvation. The following statements from two girls of twelve and thirteen show how clearly they grasped the truth, though they were listening to it for the first time: Misae San wrote thus: "For my sins Jesus died on the cross instead of me. I mocked him some time before, but hearing that he loved me so much, I decided that I must believe in him, and I did so." Yoshigo San, the older girl, shows, from the following plain statement, she had gotten a very clear conception of the truth: "All men must die, and afterwards they will be judged. Those who have clean hearts go to heaven, but those who have bad hearts cannot go there. It must be a dreadful punishment to be sent to hell. But if we confess our sins and believe that Jesus died on the cross for us, there will be no fear of death. Believing this and that I will enter into heaven when I die, unspeakable joy bubbles out of my heart."

As to the genuineness of the work among these children, let the following incident speak: A little girl of twelve, towards the end of the meeting, heard the story of Jesus. Her heart was broken up and she went home crying. When she reached the house, her grandmother asked her what made her so sad. She replied: "Jesus, who never committed any sin, had to die for us. O, I do feel so sorry for him. I have no excuse to make for my sins." Then she proceeded to open her little heart and to apologize to the old lady for all her naughty conduct. This greatly impressed the entire household, and they told the story to a Christian relative, and expressed their surprise at the teaching of Christianity. The next day, the little girl went to Aoki San to pray with him and, with tears from her heart, she repented and put her trust in the Saviour.

Some one has said something like this: If you save an old person, you save a soul; but if you save a child, you save not only a soul, but a life as well. There is no way of telling the full result of any work done in the Master's name, particularly so with that among children. Eternity alone can tell the final story. Sometimes, we do not know of any results till years afterwards. "One soweth and another reapeth. Other men laboured and ye are entered into their labours." This is eminently so in work with children. We are constantly meeting, out here in Japan, those who, years ago, first heard the message from some faithful missionary, in a Sunday school or an English Bible class. Last year, a young man in Osaka was condemned to death and executed. While in prison, he was genuinely converted. He said, "It was the memory of what I received, while a child, in a Sunday school, from a missionary, that caused me to write you and ask for instruction in the way of salvation."

"The sower soweth the Word" (provided he knoweth the good seed), and that Word is vital with spiritual life and power and will bear fruit. The parable tells us that that which "fell on good ground did yield fruit"—and there is no better "ground" than the heart of a child that "it sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold." And Jesus added the imperative exhortation, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." May all who read this simple tale of our tent work among some of the children of Kyoto pray earnestly for these little ones. And then, if they have paid their Centenary subscriptions, for it was the Centenary that made this work possible, they should rejoice that it has been given them to have a part of telling these children of the Saviour of whom they heard for the first time in these tent meetings.

CHINESE SOLDIERS ARE EAGER FOR THE BIBLE.

By Carleton Lacy, Secretary China Agency, American Bible Society.

At 2:30 o'clock on Easter Monday afternoon, six of us sat down to lunch with Brigadier General Chang Tze-chiang in his headquarters at Tungchow. It was a simple meal; yet our host passed up two courses with the quiet apology that he was a vegeterian. "The first chapter of Daniel made me so," he explained.

The meal over, we pushed back our chairs and gathered around the little General in an eager group. He had promised to tell the story of his conversion, and that of the battle of Chen-chow, for which he had been decorated by the President of China. Mr. Davis (George T. B. Davis, Secretary of the Pocket Testament League) was ready with his pencil and pad. He intended to get every word of that priceless interview, and three of us were there to interpret. For us who could understand the General's eloquent and dramatic narrative, the next two hours were filled with inspiration and delight. For Davis, I think, it was a trial of patience. He remarked afterwards that his interpreters acted as though they were hypnotized. We were. It was quite impossible to interrupt that thrilling recital of events which had made of this modest, unknown soldier a national hero, whose life and testimony were radiant with the indwelling presence of Jesus Christ.

Again and again, as he told his story, General Chang jumped from his chair and seized his Bible to read some loved passage that had really taken hold and shaped his life. He read from the Psalms, from Jeremiah, from Daniel, from Proverbs, from Samuel. The story of David and Goliath was linked up with the words of proverbs, "There is no wisdom nor understanding, nor counsel against Jehovah. The horse is prepared against the day of battle; but victory is of Jehovah."

And the whole message was personally applied in his effort to restore order in the ravaged province of Shensi. The heroic declaration of the Hebrews in Babylon had become the motto of the warrior in the face of overwhelming forces: "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us; but if not, we will not serve thy gods," and had steeled his allegiance in constant loyalty to the Lord. "Thy God, whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee," had become his shield and buckler in war and in peace.

After we had been photographed together and were sitting informally about the General's desk, I asked him to let me see his Bible. He had referred to Ezekiel 3:10 and 17, and I turned to read the words which had placed on a Chinese soldier the conviction that he must preach the gospel. The whole page was heavily lined with various ink and pencil marks, but this verse stood out: "When I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus [illegible] with the Lord Jehovah." Then I [illegible] on the proceedings, Good Friday [illegible] of the camp had preached [illegible] Anderson. According what was termed [illegible] the greatest [illegible] our students have ever heard."

With that [illegible] my heart I could not resist [illegible] over it, [illegible] there was really one [illegible] it was the Bible of a very different [illegible]. It proved the truth of [illegible] sermon. "I [illegible] third day in [illegible] Holy Scriptures." Perhaps that explained the events of the morning. For several days there had been [illegible] religious services in the camp. The secretary of the Pocket Testament League had been giving the soldiers to a more difficult, persistent study of the Scriptures. At last on that memorable Easter Monday, four thousand men in uniform marched past the tent and received from the hands of their colonels each a pocket Testament. Then with the open book held high overhead they solemnly swore to read a portion every day and seek to bring its message into the life of another man. Most of them will keep that pledge, for before them is their brave commander, General Chang Tze-chiang, a worthy example and inspiration to carried Bible daily and consecrated, manly living.

STRAIGHTEN UP.

"I'm quite afraid you're not tall enough," said the merchant. "I want a boy who is a little bigger."

"Oh," remonstrated the boy, eagerly, "but I'm a good deal bigger when I stand up straight. See!" And he drew himself up to his full height.

"That's better," commented the man, approvingly. "If you would always stand like that you might do. But why do you stoop so? Why don't you stand up straight?"

"I don't know," the boy replied honestly. "I suppose it's just a habit I've got into."

"A habit! Humph! It's a pretty poor habit, young man, and you'd better draw away from it as soon as possible. Let me tell you three things: The first is, the world isn't waiting to hand out success to any man who doesn't make himself as big as he can be. I don't mean that he is to be conceited; but that he must stretch himself up to his utmost capacity, and try to fill as large a place as possible.

"The second is that a man is always biggest when he is straightest. Stooping makes him little and insignificant. If you knew how much better you look with your shoulders thrown back and your head up, you'd never let yourself fall into your clumsy gait again. And that is just as true in a moral sense as it is in a physical. Lots of people don't believe it. They are trying to be big and successful and prosperous by stooping a little to mean tricks and unchristian ways. But don't let them fool you. Straightness is the real bigness. The straighter you live the bigger you are.

"And the third is this: You can't stop becoming what you've got into the habit of. Well, standing and living straight is just as much a matter of habit as standing or living crooked. It is something that comes with practice and hard practice, too. You've got to get into the way of doing it by doing it. I suppose that most young men think it's a good thing and a desirable thing and they wish they might do it, and they mean to do it after a fashion. But the trouble is they don't begin. They are waiting for some kind of a miracle to come along and straighten them out at once, and keep them straight. But it isn't done that way. You've got to begin this minute with the first thing you come to, and be straight in that; and to keep right at it all the time until it gets to be second nature.

"There!" he continued, with a whimsical laugh, "I've preached you a little sermon out of church. I'll leave you to make the application of it, and maybe I'd better give you the place and watch you so that I can see whether you are doing it. You may come at 8 o'clock next Monday morning and make a trial of it."—Selected.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

THE CHANCE TO WIN A VICTORY IS WHEN THE STRUGGLE IS ON.

It is useless to "whine over spilt milk." It is better not to spill it. If we while away our days of opportunity in the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment, it will not avail us anything to mourn over the failure which will surely come. These are the crisal days of our chance to win, and if we use them properly there will be no occasion for vain regrets.

WHO'S WHO IN THE SPECIAL EFFORT.

Over 3,000 remittances have been made to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., on quotas. Many of the charges which have remitted have paid one-fifth or more of their total amounts assumed. These charges have been reported on this page from week to week. The following can now be added to the long list:

Cedar Key, Florida, Gainesville, Rev. L. E. Wright, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,725; amount remitted, $355.

State Street (Bristol), Holston, Abingdon, Rev. J. S. French, pastor; total assumed quota, $10,000; amount remitted, $2,000.

Perryville, Kentucky, Danville, Rev. J. F. Richardson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,008.50; amount remitted, $213.

Payne Memorial (Atlanta), North Georgia, North Atlanta, Rev. W. J. DeBradeleben, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,265; amount remitted, $453.

First Church (Tampa), Florida, Tampa, Rev. H. F. Tolle, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,068; amount remitted, $1,068.

St. Mark's and Mary Werlein, Louisiana, New Orleans, Rev. J. A. Alford, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,000; amount remitted, $231.46.

Centenray (McComb), Mississippi, Brookhaven, Rev. James L. Sells, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,000; amount remitted, $800.

Union Point, North Georgia, Athens, Rev. T. D. Cantrell, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,200; amount remitted, $441.30.

Kirkwood, St. Louis, St. Louis, Rev. H. H. Johnson, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,160; amount remitted, $436.10.

Waverly Hall, South Georgia, Columbus, Rev. J. O. J. Taylor, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,450; amount remitted, $800.

Blue Springs, Southwest Missouri, Kansas City, Rev. W. S. Butts, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,320; amount remitted, $380.50.

Monroe Street (Nashville), Tennessee, Nashville, Rev. L. B. Craven, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,570; amount remitted, $318.

Olmstead, Illinois, Murphysboro, Rev. C. F. Corzine, pastor; total assumed quota, $600; amount remitted, $136.01.

Hopkinsville, Louisville, Hopkinsville, Rev. A. R. Kasey, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,000; amount remitted, $2,200.

Lakeport, Pacific, San Francisco, Rev. S. E. Grenfall, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,400; amount remitted, $350.50.

St. John's (St. Louis), St. Louis, St. Louis, Rev. Ivan Lee Holt, pastor; total assumed quota, $20,000; amount remitted, $5,500.

Santa Fe, Tennessee, Columbia, Rev. J. B. Estes, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,144; amount remitted, $289.25.

Chatham, Virginia, Danville, Rev. W. C. Gum, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,320; amount remitted, $267.31.

Epworth (Norfolk), Virginia, Norfolk, Rev. J. W. Moore, pastor; total assumed quota, $10,000; amount remitted, $6,583.

Central (Richmoud), Virginia, Richmond, Rev. L. S. Flouruoy, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,216; amount remitted, $726.80.

Keywood, Holston, Abingdon, Rev. D. M. Graybeal, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,368; amount remitted, $348.90.

Felicity (New Orleans), Louisiana, New Orleans, Rev. H. T. Carley, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,695; amount remitted, $466.50.

Chickamanga, North Georgia, Dalton, Rev. J. D. Radford, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,690; amount remitted, $338.

First Church (Abilene), Northwest Texas, Abilene, Rev. W. M. Pearce pastor, total assumed quota, $3,500; amount remitted, $700.

Polo, Missouri, Richmond, Rev. L. C. Maggart, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,968; amount remitted, $393.60.

THE JOY OF DOING THE THING.

I wish you could read the letters from pastors whose charges are paying the amount expected from them for the first year. They tell of the great delight of the people which comes from meeting their obligations to the Superannuate Cause. Frequently wonderful revivals have resulted, and without exception the reaction in every charge's work has been heartening. As a sample of these letters I quote from one written by Rev. J. O. J. Taylor, pastor of Waverly Hall charge, Georgia, as follows: "This is without exception the most popular cause of all with the people. I have not had one single word of complaint from persons whom I have solicited for their payments. All pay promptly and are happy in doing it. Brother Pitts, when writing his check for $400, which was the amount of his first payment on a pledge of $2,000, said: 'That's the sweetest money I ever spent in my life.'" Other letters are written in similar strain. It is delightful to have the people paying to this worthy cause, but the fact that they are experiencing real pleasure in doing it proves that the blessings of the Lord are upon this great work.

JUST ONE MONTH MORE TO WORK.

Within thirty days from this writing the Annual Conferences will begin their fall sessions. When these bodies meet, reports will have to be made by the pastors on what has been done during the year for Superannuate Endowment. A large number of pastors will have smiling faces when they make their reports on this matter, for they have already sent the amount due the first year to the Board of Finance. But what about the pastors who will have nothing to report as having been paid for this cause? Of course the conditions in some places have been very difficult, but even so it seems that any charge under any difficulties could at least do something. If any pastor is fearful that his charge will be wholly blank on this call at Conference, there is yet time to put on a movement of collecting money for his quota that will save him humiliation and embarrassment.

DO IT NOW, AND DO IT RIGHT.

All payments on quotas should be remitted direct to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo. Make checks payable to the Board of Finance, or to Luther E. Todd, Secretary.

In making payments, be sure to use the Treasurer's Book of Remittance Forms which was sent long since to every charge in care of the pastor.

QUIT PUTTIN' OFF.

By Georgina W. Pelton.

Quit a-puttin' on To-morrow
Half the duties of To-day!
Don't you do it any longer!
Quit your puttin' off, I say!

Mr. Morrow'll have his duties,
Quite enough for him to do.
If you pile up trouble on him,
See if he don't punish you!

'Stead of helpin' you right friendly,
Doin' just his level best,
"You let Yesterday off easy,
I'll do half an' leave the rest.

"He had just as many minutes
As have I—you know that's so—
If he wanted rest or pleasure,
So do I, I'd have you know."

So he'll say an' with some reason,
Then he'll pass the word along
To the host of little Morrows
Comin' on, an eager throng.

Like as not you'll call 'em lazy,
Seein' 'em shirkin' many a task,
Just because you've put upon 'em
More than it was right to ask.

Quit a-puttin' on To-morrow
Half the duties of To-day!
Don't you do it any longer!
Quit your puttin' off, I say!

"TIP."

By Mary D. Barber.

Tip was one of the three baby squirrels who, orphaned by the death of their mother, were nursed by a cat that lavished on the little squirrels the same affectionate care she bestowed upon her own kitten, as told in the January number of Our Dumb Animals. Thus Tip lived, thrived, played with his brothers and the kitten and loved his big foster-mother on whose broad back he delighted to sit. This mixed family had to be broken up, and after about two months Tip was given into my keeping.

He is now nearly full-grown; his silver-gray coat is soft and sleek, his broad fluffy tail seems puffed up with pride, for he is a very happy squirrel. His cage, with door always open, is his nest in which he has made a luxurious bed of grass, twigs, ferns, bits of cotton and paper woven together in the shape of a deep bird's nest. In the room where he is kept I placed two trees on which he runs up and down for exercise. With me Tip is a playful, affectionate little fellow, but he resents the presence of strangers, making known his disapproval by shrill squeals, after which he darts into his nest, and from that safe retreat gives a low chuckle of satisfaction. But when I enter the room he runs to meet me, climbs up to my shoulder, rubs his soft little nose against my cheek caressingly. He plays with my fingers, rolling over and over when I tickle him, dives into my pockets, pulls at my skirts as a puppy would.

When he is on the table and I say "High jump!" he takes a flying leap, with tail outstretched for a rudder, and lands lightly on my arm. I began by teaching him short-distance jumps, but he now takes a fifteen-foot leap easily and gracefully.

When tired with much play, Tip comes to me to rest, spreading himself out flat, full length on my lap, as limp and lifeless looking as an "animal scarf" in a fur shop. He loves to have me stroke him from tip of nose to tip of tail with a slow, rythmic motion; thus, in perfect trustfulness, he sleeps upon my knee.

I leave several pounds of nuts in his room, also fruit and lettuce which he can eat whenever hungry, so he comes to me for companionship and not for food.

One day he opened the table drawer and in it stowed away all his nuts, packing them carefully, Brazilian nuts in one compartment, almonds and walnuts in another—a winter store.

So unerring is the instinct of wild animals that, although comfortably housed, Tip, at the approach of a storm, begins to gnaw branches of his trees and lay them on top of his cage as an extra protection against the expected rain. In domestic animals this instinct is absent. There is more charm in watching the ways of this little squirrel than I ever found in caring for any domestic pet.

In May, when Tip will be a year old, I shall give him his freedom. In the grove of oaks, bays and madrones surrounding my house in San Anselmo, Cal., he will build his nest and find a mate among the wild squirrels. There will always be nuts for him, and I know he will come to take them from my hand. Dear little Tip! I love him too much to keep him. I love him enough to let him go.—Word and Way.

WHAT AILED A PILLOW.

Annie was saying her prayers, and Nell was playing with a shadow picture on the wall. She was not satisfied to play alone; she would talk to Annie, that mite of a figure in gold and white, golden curls and snowy gown by the bedside.

"Now, Annie, watch!" "Annie, just see!" "O Annie, do look!" she said over and over again.

Annie did not look up, but finished her prayer and crept into bed, to which her thoughtless sister followed, as the light must be put out in just so many minutes. Presently Nell took to tumbling, pushing, and saying: "Oh, dear!" Then she lay quiet a while, only to begin again more restless than before.

"What's the matter?" asked Annie.

"My pillow," tossing, thumping, kneading, "it's as flat as a board and hard as a stone; I can't think what ails it."

"I know," answered Annie in her sweet, quiet way.

"What?"

"There's no prayer in it."

For a second or two Nell was as still as a mouse, then she scrambled out on the floor, with a shiver it's true; but she made up her mind never to sleep on a prayerless pillow again. "It's all right now."

I think that is what ails a great many pillows on which restless heads, both little and big, nightly toss and turn; there are no prayers in them. Nell's remedy was the best, the only one. Prayer made the pillow soft, and she sank to rest under a sheltering wing.—Selected.

IN THE MORNING.

When, in the morning, fresh from sleep,
I from my open window peep,
I always find some new surprise
To greet my grateful, wondering eyes.

I like to kneel and say my prayers
Before I hurry down the stairs—
Before the breakfast bell has gone—
And thank the Lord for all he's done.

While I was sleeping peacefully,
The Lord was working hard for me,
Making another lovely day
So I could stay outdoors and play.

Hundreds of daisies new and sweet
He's spread like stars around my feet.
And, knowing what I like the best,
He's put new birdlings in a nest.

Such heav'nly things he loves to do
For little folks like me and you.
I often wonder, while I play,
When does he take his holiday?

WONDERS.

Pittsburgh gave a concert that, relayed from London, was heard to Calcutta. A little while ago such a feat would have made a far-heralded sensation. Now it receives a casual notice of eight lines in a news dispatch. Thus as facilities of communcition rapidly develop we adjust ourselves to daily miracles. It is not the part of wisdom to-day to declare anything impossible, in the presence of recorded accomplishment of applied science.—New York Evening Post.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. W. L. Duren, pastor of Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, this city, is expected back next week from his tour of Europe and the Holy Land.

Rev. T. L. Oakes, of Dumas, Miss., writes that he has just closed a great revival meeting at one of his churches. The entire membership of the church was greatly blessed.

It is stated that the Gideons, since their organization sixteen years ago, have put 370,000 Bibles in hotels from one side of the country to the other.

Rev. C. C. Wier, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, and Rev. C. K. Smith, pastor at Pineville, La., left on Monday of this week to begin a meeting at Wiergate, Texas.

The recent death of Mr. George Dorsey, the oldest conductor in the service of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, will bring sorrow to many travelers whose journeys were made pleasant by his unfailing courtesy and kindness.

Rev. and Mrs. F. B. Hill, of McDonoghville, La., returned on Friday of last week from their trip to the World's Sunday School Convention at Edinburgh, Scotland, and a visit to relatives and friends in England.

Rev. A. W. O'Bryant, pastor of the Eden charge, Mississippi Conference, was recently assisted in a fine meeting at Lake City by Rev. T. J. O'Neil, in which there were fourteen additions to the church, twelve of them on profession of faith. The work of the whole charge is prospering.

Rev. J. O. Bennett, who was forced to give up his work as pastor at Athens, La., is now making his home at Colfax, La., where correspondents should address him. We are sure Brother Bennett's many friends will pray that he may be restored to health.

Brother O. W. Copeland, of Lux, Miss., gives us the good news of a fine meeting held at that place, in which the preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. H. B. Williams. There were four accessions to the church, and the whole community was blessed.

"Chien Ging, the Demon-Possessed," is the title of a serial story which will begin in the September number of the Epworth Era. The story is about a Chinese girl, daughter of a bandit, who is driven from her home by her father on account of her becoming a Christian. The publishers promise a narrative of thrilling interest.

The tithing committee of the church at Amory, Miss., is carrying through a prepared plan for informing the church on this Christian duty. The committee, of which Dr. A. I. Boozer is chairman, is furnishing the church with leaflets every three weeks on the subject. It is expected that great results will follow. Rev. W. R. Lott is the pastor of this progressive congregation.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. A. W. O'Bryant, Eden, Miss., 2; Rev. R. G. A. Carlisle, Sallis, Miss., 2; T. M. Babingtn, Franklinton, La., 3; W. P. Foxworth, Columbia, Miss., 2; Mrs. Callie Allen, Plantersville, Miss., 2; Rev. M. R. Jones, Montrose, Miss., 2.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please say in the Advocate that all things are ready for the Seashore Camp Meeting. I think we have as fine band of workers as can be had, with a very fine pianist in the person of Miss Alice Fountain, of Logtown, Miss., and Mrs. Jos. A. Smith, of Picayune, Miss., for our solist; W. J. Ferguson and Jos. A. Smith to do the heavy preaching; O. S. Lewis to direct the music, guide the young life, and conduct the vesper services, and, with your humble servant, to conduct the early morning services, keep the chunks pushed up, and do the heavy standing around. Tell all the people to come and bring their friends, bring their dinner and stay all day, or bring their tent and have a real outing on the Coast while enjoying a real old-fashioned camp meeting.

We begin Friday night, Aug. 8, at 7:45 o'clock, and continue until Sunday night, Aug. 17. Come with us and we will do you good.

L. L. ROBERTS.

A TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: Since my last letter we have visited Alexandria, Joppa, Beirut, Baalbek, and Damascus; and from these, traveling through the historic plain of Haran, we crossed the Sea of Galilee from the southern end and visited Tiberias, Capernaum, and Cana, and we are now in Nazareth. It has required but five lines to trace in a casual way this journey, but within the compass of these travels is a procession of history which staggers our thinking. For, beginning with Abraham, many and mighty have been the generations which have left their footprints upon these hills and plains. But for all that procession of history the Arab still wanders over the plains, and the shepherd drives his flocks forth in much the same way as did his ancestors.

In Beirut the chief place of interest is the American College of Beirut. Dr. Bayard Dodge, the president, was very gracious in his efforts to acquaint us with the plant and program of this truly great institution. During the session which had just closed, one thousand students were enrolled, embracing twenty-eight nationalities and practically every variety of social and racial class. The president is a minister of the Presbyterian Church and the faculty Christian; but in the work of the college there is not the definite Christian program which we could wish were there.

On July 5, we visited Baalbek, where we saw what it took no persuasion to make us believe is the grandest ruin on earth. In Athens, the Acropolis presents a classical culture to which the Baalbek ruins do not pretend. Here we find evidences of Phoenician, Roman, Arabic, and Christian contributions which show a long-persisting purpose—a purpose which for physical daring and grandeur of design is without a parallel. But for all this, the people of this little village are living under the very shadow of this splendid monument to the genius of their fathers in squalor and in ignorance.

Damascus was next. The thousands of minarets and tombs of Saladin and Fatima, all proclaim the triumph of Mohamet over the faith of the man who went forth from "the street called Straight" to preach the power of redeeming love. But still there were items of interest. One thing was the luxuriant valley—a stupendous garden, surrounded by parched hills on every side. All because the "Abana and Porpher rivers of Damascus" pour in a refreshing tide, which gives a physical demonstration of that great word from the Book: "Everything shall live whither the river cometh." The site of the house of Naaman, the leper, is now occupied by an Orthodox Greek Church, but there is still a little part of the original structure standing and the roof of it is below the level of the present city. Another item of interest was the Mohammedan call to prayer. Tragic as is the delusion which the bloody Mahomet threw over these Eastern lands, we could not but be impressed by the weird wailing of the Muezzin calling a great city to its knees. How strangely does it contrast with Western indifference to a great and living faith!

Leaving Damascus, we traveled through Haran, the plain into which Abraham came when he left Ur of the Chaldees, and where Laban dwelt. From these desolate wastes in my fan unwritten chapter of that long and wonderful period seemed to speak to us. From this plain we traveled down the gorge of the Yarmouth ("Little Jordan") river. The trip down this gorge is beautiful and picturesque. Coming out of this gorge, we beheld the Sea of Galilee at the southern end. To say that it was a thrilling moment but poorly expresses the emotions which stirred in my bosom when I realized that there before me was a body of water about which clustered many of the events of the most momentous life ever lived. Its size was disappointing. Although it is nine miles wide and thirteen miles long, one can see it all from any point, and it looks to be less than a third of its actual size. On the shores of the lake we visited Tiberias, Magdala, Bethsaida, and Capernaum. The ruins of the synagogue recently excavated seem to indicate the spot of the ancient Capernaum.

After a night at Tiberias, we passed by the Mount of Beatitudes, the plain of Lubeth where Saladin fought the last battle with the Crusaders, and we stopped a while in Cana, where Jesus performed his first miracle. We were entertained in a Christian home where they sang a native hymn, and sang "Galilee" in English. Leaving here, we were soon in Nazareth, where we spent the night.

AN ALTERNATIVE FOR A LOST OR DECAYING RELIGIOUS FAITH.

A Thousand Dollar Prize Offer.

The Foreign Mission Board, Southern Baptist Convention, Richmond, Va., U. S. A., offers a prize of one thousand dollars for the best manuscript on evangelical Christianity, "An Alternative for a Lost or Decaying Religious Faith."

It is well known to students of missions and religions that multitudes of intelligent men and women who once held the faith of Roman Catholicism, Greek Orthodoxy, Mohammedanism, Buddhism, etc., no longer believe in these forms of religion, or have become aware that their faith is gradually decaying. Many of these have confounded the whole religious question with that form of religion in which they were brought up and which is the dominant expression of religion in the society about them. They have intellectually outgrown the faith of their childhood, but have not found an alternative to take its place. They are also conscious of unsatisfied religious natures and of unattained moral ideals. They realize, too, the need of "a power not our own which makes for righteousness." Most of them have a feeling that religious truth in a form satisfying to their intelligence and a religious faith which is capable of satisfying their hearts and meeting their needs, must exist somewhere. Moreover, these intelligent observers see more or less plainly that there is a need for a vital religious faith to re-enforce personal and public morals in the society with which they are familiar even in the religious circles of their acquaintance. Reflection leads these thoughtful men and women to the sound conclusion that this help must be obtained through religion or it will be missed altogether. They know that, whereas the formal religions which they have outgrown are inadequate, inefficient, and unadaptable, no religion is an irrational alternative. Most of them are intelligent enough to see that while religion as they have known it can not satisfy the soul or transform society, the foundations of society, business, commerce, national and international politics would utterly crumble without that morality of which religion is the chief support. Morality charged with the religious dynamic alone will invigorate and transform debilitated and jaded humanity and make that humanity the conservator of the rich interest of society and the world. If a religious faith is not found which can meet the world's moral need, then moral doom is certain for men, society and nations.

Do you believe that there is a religious faith which can meet these needs and bring satisfaction, peace and strength to these souls now adrift on a sea of doubt and skepticism? Do you believe that evangelical Christianity will prove itself to all who will try it? Can you write a book which can convincingly and appealingly present this faith as an alternative to these imperiled voyagers? If you can write such a book, there are wonderful possibilities in the writing and the use of it. We have been told in Italy that there are 8,000 priests and monks in that land who, coming out of the experiences of the great war, abandoned the Roman Catholic faith, and declared that they would never again put on the gown, a symbol of loyalty to the pope. A religious census of the Imperial University at Tokyo, taken a few years ago, revealed that in the student body of that single Japanese institution there were three thousand who had lost faith in Buddhism and Shintoism, and who enrolled themselves as agnostics. What a need and opportunity these students offer to men and women who have the right message and the mental and spiritual attitude which qualifies them to present that message to these "citizens of the republic of letters" who are to be influential members and strong factors in the life of the nation!

The Foreign Mission Board offers a thousand dollars for a manuscript of from forty thousand to sixty thousand words which shall be considered by a competent committee as the best of those submitted and the most suitable to convince and persuade men and women of a lost faith in all lands to accept evangelical Christianity and to test it as a remedy for their needs and the needs which they have discovered in their fellowmen. The prize is not a big one, but it is attached to an opportunity for a large Christian service which ought to elicit the finest Christian talent. Moreover, it is proposed that no one except the author of the accepted manuscript shall receive financial benefit from this book. The Foreign Mission Board will seek and make arrangements by which any missionary or religious agency in America or in any land may use or publish the book in any language and in any quantity on the one condition that no individual profit shall accrue from such use of it. The prize money is provided in free will offerings by individual evangelical Christians who have found in their religious faith that help which they covet for all their fellow-men. These Christian men and women make it possible for this Board to offer this prize without drawing on its missionary treasury.

Suggestions for Competitors.

1. The book is for men and women in all lands and of all previous religious faiths; the writer will need to have a good understanding of the religions of all the world, present day world conditions and movements of religious thought and especially will the successful writer need to be possessed by a very genuine and universal human sympathy.

2. A deep and confident evangelical Christian experience, a vigorous and seasoned conviction of the truth, a sound and balanced evangelical faith, and unhesitating confidence in the power of that faith in the lives of those who accept it are [illegible]; but the work must be positive rather than pugnacious; evangelistic in spirit and purpose rather than controversial. The test of originality is genuine evangelical Christian conversion rather than polemical conquest.

3. Manuscripts should contain not less than forty thousand nor more than sixty thousand words.

4. Three copies of the manuscript must be submitted for the convenience of the committee which is to examine them.

5. All manuscripts must be in the hands of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, Richmond, Va., U. S. A., not later than May 1, 1925.

6. The prize manuscript will be chosen by the judges on the basis of its adaptation to the purposes set forth in this offer, all aspects being considered, as reading, grasp of subject, use of material, quality and expression of thought, sound views of Christian truth, spiritual insight, convincing and persuading power, etc.

7. The judges who will pass upon these manuscripts shall be selected and approved by the Foreign Mission Board and shall be five in number. The decision will be determined by the majority opinion of this committee on the manuscripts and will be final. The submission of a manuscript commits its author to these terms. The names of the committee will be announced at the proper time.

8. The award will be made as soon as possible after the date named when all manuscripts must be in hand.

9. The winning manuscript becomes the property of the Foreign Mission Board with complete and exclusive rights thereto, including copyright privileges, of translation and circulation in any manner in any land by any arrangement said Board may choose.

10. The Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention may buy any manuscript not winning the prize if it shall so desire at a price to be agreed upon by the Board and the author. The Board is under no obligation to purchase any manuscript nor the author under binding obligation to sell to the Board.

11. The offer is open to any man or woman who wishes to compete for the prize.

12. Authors should give titles to their manuscript, but the Foreign Mission Board reserves the right to assign to the manuscript which is chosen that title which approves itself to the judgment of the Board.

13. Manuscripts must be submitted anonymously, a letter to the Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board accompanying the manuscript. The Secretary will then place on the manuscript and the accompanying letter identifying numbers or marks, and these letters will be filed in a box until the decision of the judges is rendered.

REVIVAL AT WHITE'S CHAPEL.

Dear Brother Carley: The revival meeting at White's Chapel, held from the 6th through the 16th of July, was a most glorious and gracious meeting; one which, like last year, will be remembered long and which will cast its influence for good in the lives of the people reached and touched by its wonderful spirit and power. God's holy and brotherly spirit reigned and ruled in all the activities of the meeting, and, along with the Christian and co-operative spirit of the congregation, everything helped and contributed in a large measure to make the meeting successful. The prayers of the Christian people were of much avail before God and their supplications were answered.

One splendid feature of the meeting was the lively and effective singing conducted by Rev. Adrien M. Serex, our young Swiss brother, who is an excellent soloist and evangelistic singer, as well as a good preacher. His winsome ways and whole-hearted singing soon won for him the willingness and desire of every one in the congregation to help with the singing. Practically all the hymns he selected were those good, time-proven, worshipful and soul-inspiring hymns which the founders and builders of the Christian church have contributed and which have won their rightful place in the hearts of Christian people everywhere. An excellent selection of these hymns is found in the Cokesbury Hymnal, the book used for the revival, fifty copies of which were purchased by the congregation at the close of the meeting. Brother Serex knows how to sing these good old hymns to make them attractive and to revive in them the vitality and vigor as well as the sweetness of the Christian life. God's blessings be upon this valiant young man who is well-beloved in our midst and whose labors among our people in South Louisiana have won for him a warm and glad welcome in all places where he labored!

The other magnificent feature of the meeting was the able, common-sense Gospel preaching of our well-beloved missionary evangelist, Rev. Martin Hebert, whose messages were made attractive and interesting by occasional and well-balanced wit and humor. His propositions to the large congregation which attended regularly every night were well heeded and at all times received a gracious response. A large number of people promised to give their lives to Christ and twenty-one applied for church membership, six by letter and fifteen by profession of faith. Out of this number, six were adults who had never joined or affiliated with any Christian church. The whole church was revived and aroused by the strong and effective messages of our brother and God's servant, whose labor of love for the church at White's Chapel will redound to the quickening and toning-up of the church to the glory of God's kingdom on earth.

REV. W. M. McINTOSH IN RIENZI, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: The people of Rienzi have been blessed by the coming of Rev. W. M. McIntosh to our little town. He began a big tent meeting here on July 6, and continued it until July 18. Sometimes one feels that it is asking too much of an evangelist of his spiritual gifts and power to conduct a revival in small places when, at the same time, there are large fields of labor calling for his service for the Master in the Kingdom of God. Sometimes, though, the most difficult tasks that lie out before the church, and the greatest needs of people in their spiritual lives, are to be found and met in small localities.

Every member of the North Mississippi Conference, and quite a number of people, are too familiar with this spiritual man and great preacher to make it necessary even to mention his splendid methods as a revivalist. However, it is interesting, indeed, to observe how he so quickly grasps a situation, analyzes the needs of the people, surveys the field of labor, and fortifies himself against Satanic powers and influence about those whom he seeks to help and influence for God and right. The writer once asked him what was the secret of his great success as an evangelist, and his answer was: "Faith in God and faith in man."

The day-time services were spiritual, indeed. At these services the minds of the people were instructed, and their hearts were addressed in the name of the Giver of life. At night the messages seemed as if God had first spoken to him, and then directed him to speak to His people. With a righteous indignation he fought sin with its blasting force over the lives of people for whom Christ died.

The results of this meeting did not prove we had a great ingathering for Christian service in the church and the kingdom; however, a number was added to the membership of every church in Rienzi. Among those who surrendered their lives to Christ were two men both of whom were advanced in years. Bible study circles and prayer meetings have been organized; attendance on church services has been increased; a holy enthusiasm for right living and for Christian service has been aroused in the hearts and minds of our people, much of the interest in all of which has grown out of this meeting. One may think these evangelistic meetings do not always pay, and they may not; he may think the end realized does not always justify the means used, and in a measure this may be true; but often individuals are touched with the Spirit in the Sunday school, in the Epworth League, in the home, or under pastoral work and care, and then the flowing of so high a spiritual tide sweeps them out of sin into the Kingdom of God.

Twenty of our people stood up and testified for Christ after Brother McIntosh had left us, saying they had been spiritually renewed and were ready for greater service, and stood for better living. May heaven bounteously lengthen out the life of this good man and great preacher. May his highest aims in life, his greatest hopes, and his noblest aspirations ever be realized in God.

THE NEGLECT OF RELIGION.

Democracy is a spiritual achievement. With the passing of faith, with the neglect of worship, with the disregard of Christ and the forgetfulness of God, there goes the decay of the spirit of man. When religion, the true religion of Jesus Christ, loses its hold upon the masses of any community, the nation is in grave danger. The loss that the individual suffers from the neglect of religion is great, but in this connection the thing we have to say is that the loss of the nation is irreparable. The security of free institutions depends absolutely upon the victory of Christian faith. There are many sincere lovers of our country who fail to see that in abandoning the church and neglecting to lend their personal weight to the defense and promotion of Christian faith, they are losing patriotism's best opportunity and leaving the defenses of the nation unguarded at a point of greatest danger.—California Christian Advocate.

If we noticed little pleasures
As we noticed little pains;
If we quite forgot our losses
And remembered all our gains;
If we looked for people's virtues,
And their faults refused to see—
What a comforting, delightful,
Cheerful place this world would be!

LEAGUE CONFERENCE PLANNED FOR SEASHORE DISTRICT.

Since my appointment to the position of District Secretary of Epworth Leagues in the Seashore District, I have tried to determine what can be done to improve the work of the League. It seemed to me that if we could meet somewhere from time to time and meet each other and talk about our work, we could get much good therefrom.

With this end in view, I am making plans for a League conference to be held at the Seashore Camp Ground at Biloxi the last part of September.

Just as soon as I hear from the Leagues in the district, I will announce the date.

In order that this conference may be a real success, I respectfully request each preacher to put the conference idea before his Leagues and urge them to send as many delegates as they can.

Not only do we want the Leagues to send delegates, but we will be very happy to have as many preachers as can get to the conference. I feel that the League is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, factors in the church to-day, that can be used to mould the character and lead the young life of our church to the cross of Jesus Christ.

We hear much about the League of Nations, everywhere we go. We hear of different schemes to prevent war and bring about world peace; but from what I have seen, both in the army and out, I have come to the conclusion that the Epworth League will do more than the League of Nations or any other league if we will put Jesus Christ in it and really do something to bring the nations of the world to know him who died on the cross.

I ask the prayers of the brethren for the success of the League conference.

REV. W. B. HOLLINGSWORTH,
District Secretary.

LAYING OF CORNER STONE, EPWORTH LEAGUE BUILDING. MOUNT SEQUOYAH, AUG. 14.

The corner stone of the Epworth League building at Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., will be laid the afternoon of Aug. 14, with appropriate services. Dr. F. S. Parker, editor of the Epworth Era and General Secretary of the Epworth League Board, will deliver the address, and Dr. A. C. Miller, editor of the Arkansas Methodist and President of the Western Assembly, will lay the corner stone. The building will be officially opened Aug. 11, which is the date of the opening of the second Western Epworth League Assembly.

A daily paper, the Epworth Sequawker, will be published during the Assembly, Aug. 11-22. The Rev. Byron Harwell, of Conway, Ark., will be the editor-in-chief. This promises to be one of the most attractive features at the Assembly this year.

Professor C. C. Washburn, who will occupy the Chair of Religious Music and Worship at Scarritt College, Nashville, Tenn., will direct the music and conduct a class in "Studies in the Methodist Hymnal."

Other instructors and speakers are as follows: Dr. F. S. Parker, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. W. Harrison Baker, Decatur, ~~Tex.~~; Rev. H. U. Campbell, Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. Carl C. The following courses will be offered:

Leadership Courses.

1. Epworth League Administration. For pastors, chapter presidents, vice presidents, secretaries and treasurers.
2. Departmental Methods. For chapter superintendents of departments.
3. Conference, District and Union Activities. For Conference, district and union officers.
4. Junior leadership.
5. Intermediate leadership.

Studies in Methodism.

1. Our Doctrinal Background.
2. Our Providential History.
3. Our Modern Organization.
4. Studies in the Hymnal.

Departmental Theory.

1. The Life of Paul.
2. The Social Mission of the Church.
3. Recreation and the Church.
4. The Fundamentals of Missions.

The afternoons will be free for directed recreation. There will be a song service and moving picture show each evening at 7:30 followed by an Inspirational address.

Dr. Carl C. Gregory, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Dallas, Tex., will deliver the address Friday evening, Aug. 15, and preach Sunday morning, Aug. 17.

YOUR DAUGHTER'S HEALTH

Mothers of Ailing Daughters, Attention

How Two Mothers Helped Their Daughters by Giving them Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for the girl's future is largely in her hands.

When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite and is irregular, her mother should have a care for her physical condition and give her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has proved a reliable aid to nature for just such conditions in so many cases.

First Bottle Helped Her

Richmond, Indiana.—"I am sending this letter to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did my daughter. She was troubled with nervousness so that she was restless at night, and then she could not sleep and she was afraid of everything. She could not work as she was not strong enough, and she had to quit school at 14 because she was ill so much. The doctor said she had a nervous breakdown and her system was all run down. She had pains in her right side and through her back, and the medicine she took did her no good at all. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's advertisement in our paper, telling all that the Vegetable Compound had done for other women, so I said, 'We will try it out and see what it does.' She had not taken the first bottle before it began to help her, and we will always say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine she ever took."—Mrs. E. DARBY, 911 N. 16th Street, Richmond, Indiana.

An Ohio Mother Reports

Columbus, Ohio. — "When my daughter became 14 years of age she was ailing very much. The doctor gave her medicine, but she was very weak, and he always had to write excuses for her as she could not attend the 'gym' classes, and I often had to keep her home from school. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my nerves and rundown condition, so I gave her three doses daily, and also Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. Our friends are surprised to see how fine and tall she is getting and how well she is. I will gladly answer letters and give you a fine recommendation for other mothers." — Mrs. MARIE MIELKE, 814 Ebner Street, Columbus, Ohio.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent. of these replies answer "Yes." That means that 98 out of every 100 women who have taken this medicine have been helped by it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Mrs. M. E. Dakin, superintendent of the school at Shaw, with some of the teachers, organized a school near Shaw recently. This is the second school she has organized this year. The people from the hill counties who have moved to the delta are being cared for in a better way than they were in their former homes.

The Big Brothers class of Sardis visited Lake Carrier last Sunday and helped the people organize a Sunday school. Dr. Parrell was elected superintendent. The leaven of the gospel is constantly working, and will permeate the whole social order.

The Sunday schools that failed to observe Sunday School Day can observe Rally Day in Octoher, and thus "kill two birds with one stone." We cannot extend our work of religious instruction unless we get more aid from the schools that have life enough in them to lend a helping hand.

The Grenada College girls are doing a great work for the country churches this summer. The classes are larger, and a greater per cent of those who take the courses are standing the written tests. We expect to publish a complete report of their work as soon as we hear from the office at Nashville.

We are planning to increase greatly our Sunday school enrollment the next three months. There are more people on the outside than we have in our schools. We need them in the school that they may receive instruction, that they may be trained to sing and pray, and he trained to render service in establishing the Kingdom of God. It will require some honest work to get them, and still more work to teach them so they will remain with us.

Miss Virginia Thomas, Rev. C. A. Parks, and Rev. R. G. Lord came over with me to Lake Junaluska to spend two weeks in study that we may he better equipped for our work in our respective fields of labor. Of course, we found Brother and Sister Wyatt here, and Miss Loy Boone, of Pontotoc, Miss Susie Trigg, of Greenville, and other workers from North Mississippi. There is a marked difference between the schools that have trained teachers and those that do not. This difference will grow greater as time passes on. The kingdom is not established by men "who walk in their sleep."

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

Mrs. J. M. Henry, Assistant Conference Superintendent, will take part on the program in the Alabama Sunday School Conference, at Greenville, Sept. 2-4. She will represent the General Sunday School Board in the Young People's Department.

The Sunday School Board and the Mission Board have some joint courses that they are giving, and in the Houma Standard Training School, Aug. 25-30, Dr. W. W. Drake will teach this joint course, known as the "Missionary Message of the Bible."

Mrs. R. L. Harwell, of Conway, Ark., has taught the unit in Primary Work in three of our Standard Training Schools—Monroe, Baton Rouge, and Ruston.

The pastor of Amite, Rev. B. H. Andrews, writes concerning his Standard Training School, Sept. 1-6: "The Amite people are responding to the opportunity with a fine spirit."

Mrs. J. B. Magee, of Hammond, who has just recently been elected superintendent of Intermediate-Senior Department work of the Central Subdistrict, writes: "If you will send me the literature and instructions for doing this Intermediate-Senior work I shall do my best with it."

Prof. D. B. Raulins, of Centenary College, has taught in one of our Standard Training Schools and is booked to teach in three others. Prof. Raulins has recently taken a special course in Religious Education at the Southern Methodist University.

The total amount of Sunday School Day offering reported up to date is $773.18. The Monroe District leads with a total of $163.95. The other districts are: Alexandria, $144.55; New Orleans, $140.67; Ruston, $133; Shreveport, $81.80; Lake Charles, $48.93; Baton Rouge, $60.28.

The date of Children's Week for 1924 is Oct. 12-19, and our Elementary Superintendent, Mrs. R. C. Culpepper, has written each of our District Elementary Superintendents asking them to report the number of schools in each district which will observe this Week. Last year there was a large number of schools which reported, but we hope to have a still larger number this year. Our district superintendents are: Alexandria, Mrs. R. C. Culpepper; Baton Rouge, Mrs. B. D. Talley; Lake Charles, Mrs. Alonzo Early; Monroe, Mrs. W. F. Prickett; Ruston, Miss Tiny McClaskin; New Orleans, Mrs. R. H. Harper; Shreveport, Mrs. N. L. Hudson; West Sub-Baton Rouge District, Miss Alpha Puckett.

The fifth Sunday in August we want to make a red-letter day in the Louisiana Conference hy using this day as Circuit and District Rally Day for Sunday school work all over the State. The Ruston District will have another Adult Bible Class Rally on this fifth Sunday at Minden. Let all pastors and district officers who are interested in making the fifth Sunday in August a red-letter day write us for information.

REV. C. D. ATKINSON.

A SUGGESTIVE INCIDENT.

Dr. George R. Stuart, in a recent sermon, tells an incident that illustrates the fact that every worker who really wants to help can do so. Here is the story:

"In a revival which I was conducting in a Virginia town some years ago, there was a characteristic worker—what we call a "revival" memher of the church—a "wishy-washy, in-and-out" sort of fellow—one who had slipped in and out so much he had made the hole slick and could not stay in. He was all right as long as he had a protracted meeting to hold him in harness, hut too weak to stand temptation of everyday life.

"A prominent hanker stepped into the meeting. He was a man of staunch integrity—honest, fair and square, but not a Christian. The "wishy-washy" member looked at him and thought what a power his great character would be if thrown fully on the side of Christianity. He stepped over to him and sat down by him and said, "Colonel, you know me.. You know how weak and unstahle I am. I never can he much to the church, but you are a man; you have character. If you were to become a Christian, you could be a power in this town. Colonel, I would give the world if I were man enough to lead you to the altar." The honest confession impressed the hanker. A broken life thrown at his feet impressed him. He burst into tears; put his arms around what he knew was a good-hearted but weak brother, and said, "I like your frankness; I shall be glad to be led hy you." He followed him to the altar and into the church."—Florida Christian Advocate.

DRUNK ON MONEY.

It is sometimes overlooked that when Jesus spoke of coming to this earth to seek and save the lost He had been talking of those who are lost in the wilderness of covetousness. We do not usually think of a nice, respectable man or woman being lost, hecause they are covetous and seeking so much the things of the world, but they are douhtless sometimes more hopelessly lost than the drunkard. It is easier to get sober when you are drunk on liquor than when you are drunk on money. —Richmond Christian Advocate.

REAL GREATNESS.

The greatness of a natlon is not measured hy the extent of its wealth, whether in manufacturing or agriculture, or in trade or commerce; nor in its works of henevolence, its hospitals, its asylums, its many admirable foundations for the alleviation of the miseries of human life, great, admirable, and heneficent as all these are; it is to he measured in its approach to justice, for justice precedes all of these things and is an attribute of Deity.—Elihu Root.

FROM TYRO, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Just want to tell the readers about our splendid revival at Tyro.

We had with us, for one week, our presiding elder, Rev. J. Tillery Lewis who brought us some of the best and most powerful sermons we have been privileged to listen to in many days. The hearts of the people were stirred and many determined to live lives more in accord with the Savior's teachings.

Though our membership is very small, we had nine additions on profession, with more to come in at our next preaching day.

We are planning for great revivals in our other four churches on Tyro circuit. Pray for us.

Epworth League

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Ralph Hays, Conference Editor.

Delegates to Junaluska.

Mr. S. Truman Lewis, vice president, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Mrs. W. E. Potts, Junior League Superintendent, Mississippi Conference Epworth League, have been selected as delegates to represent the Mississippi Conference Epworth League at Junaluska, August 14-26.

Miss Addie B. Greely, Life Service Superintendent, and several Epworth Leaguers from Galloway Memorial Church, are going to drive from Jackson to Junaluska. If there are others who would like to join the party, it would be well for them to communicate with Miss Greely, 228 N. Congress St., Jackson.. They will leave August 8, via Birmingham and Atlanta, and return via Nashville.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

New Orleans Public Service,

Bay Springs.

On a recent visit to Bay Springs, in the interest of the Centenary, it was my very great pleasure to speak to the Epworth League at 4 p.m., when there were more young people present than were on roll. They had one of the best programs at their devotional meeting I have ever enjoyed. There were ten young people on the program making talks, besides some special music. All of them made their talks in a very interesting and helpful way. I was told that the enthusiasm brought back by their representatives from the Assembly had put new life in the chapter.

What Rev. S. C. Moody Thinks of the Assembly.

In thinking of the most impressive point of the program of the League Assembly, I will say the morning watch service when the great host of young people said, "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go," impressed me most.

The League Assembly is a great opportunity for re-consecration and re-dedication of Christian lives, and for conversion of new souls.

I was very much impressed with the good spirit that prevailed throughout the week. It was interesting to note with what "pep," "vim," and determination those young people entered into every feature of the program.

Yours sincerely,
S. C. MOODY.

Dr. H. W. Featherstun's Impressions of the Assembly.

The Epworth League Assembly of June 9 to 15, held at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, was in every way the best we have known. It was the largest in attendance, having an enrollment of over three hundred. The final results were that every boy and girl, young man and woman, was enrolled for life service, willing and anxious to do anything to which God may lead anywhere. Again, it was marked by a willingness on the part of all to take any equipment needed for life's work in Christ's vineyard; the classes being attended and the studying being done in such an earnest, almost anxious way indicated this. The general lectures by Drs. Smith, Carley, and Rev. E. K. Means, and all, were of a high grade. The Assemblies prove better year by year. I very greatly enjoy them, and should I be on the list of instructors next year, I shall bring Mrs. Featherstun with me.

Your brother,
H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

FROM THE HOPEWELL CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

I am pastor of the Hopewell circuit, which includes Hopewell, Pine Grove, Pleasant Hill, and Dry Creek. God has blessed each church abundantly. They have revived and are doing good work for the Master. Some of God's children think at times that he has forgotten them, but they always come to the conclusion that they were the ones that did the forgetting.

The church at Hopewell has revived wonderfully in the last four months. The congregations have increased greatly. The Sunday school attendance has increased 75%. The Epworth League has been organized. I have given it a considerable amount of my time. We have one of the best Leagues that I have ever seen, to be a newly organized one. We have about 30 members now, and we are expecting to have 40 or more real soon. God has blessed the whole community. If your church is dead, get your young people to working! The community, in a way, is a very unusual one. They all look forward to education. They are all equipped educationally. They are also seeking God's education—that education that we must all have before we can reach the other land—and that is a new life, a spiritual life that will guide us safely into eternity. They are all eager to do his will, because they have come to realize what it is to be a "drifter" and out of Christ. Oh, how I pray that we may all seek to do his will, not for our glory, but for his!

We had a great revival at Hopewell. Brother Boddie, pastor of Glenmora, did the preaching. Everybody learned to love him. He preached the real gospel, which is "sharper than any two-edged sword." They realized it, and many came to Christ.

Brother Boddie also helped me at Pleasant Hill with a revival. We had a very good revival. God blessed us both.

Brother French, pastor of the Marksville circuit, helped me with the revival at Pine Grove, which ran from the 20th through the 27th of July. Brother French is a man that every one loves. The people at Pine Grove love him dearly. He is a father to them. He preached the gospel that God always blesses. A number were "born again"—some who had been drifting for a number of years.

I have one more revival to be held yet, which is at Dry Creek. I am planning to do the preaching. Dry Creek is a dead community. Methodism has died out. Only a few Methodists are left, but they are willing to do what they can. I shall preach to them Sunday, Aug. 3. The revival will follow some time in August.

I have been in charge of the circuit work about four months. I love it dearly. God has blessed me abundantly.

The churches are all doing fine. They are not meeting the financial demands as they should, but I know they will do better soon.

CLARENCE B. WHITE, Pastor.

THEY DID.

By Garfield Evans.

Youth is the age that imagines the unthinkable, attempts the impossible, revolutionizes the immovable, and gets by with all of it. We flatter and criticize their youthful aspirations interchangeably and wonder why they often do not accept our conclusions.

While they are young, we laugh at their developing emotions, and laughingly call it "puppy love," while we dignify the same emotion in age by calling it "affection." Doubting their ability to make many choices for themselves, we often say, "wait and get the facts." Yet we well know that if they actually get the facts, the way most of us have found them, that they would find little ground for encouragement.

We are skeptical of many of their ambitions, and our [illegible] arguments are based on the [illegible] that it was never done that way before. When Fulton built the [illegible], people stood on the shore and laughed at "Fulton's Folly," declaring that it was unthinkable that a vessel could ever travel except by the force of wind.

When Stevenson built his "Rocket," Parliament passed a law stating that the thing should not ever be allowed to run more than ten miles an hour. The next morning a member of Parliament said in derision, "I'll eat the thing for breakfast some morning, if it ever runs nine miles an hour."

Because we are accustomed to doing things in the usual way, we are not cordial to things being done any differently. We have had our fingers burnt, or gotten our feet wet, our faith has but little challenge, and the heroism of daring faith burns low in the hearts of many adults.

When we think that it "can't be done," we need to refresh our memories on what some unusual youths have accomplished.

Alexander the Great was conqueror of the known world when he was 28.

Hannibal of Carthage had conquered Rome by the time he was 26.

Joan of Arc led the military forces of France at 17; and was a world martyr at 19.

Luther had taken his stand in the Reformation and had nailed his theses to the university door before he was 31.

Calvin espoused the cause of the Reformation before he was 20, and his best known works were written before he was 23.

Patrick Henry delivered his immortal address when he was 26.

Hamilton at 31 gave to our country its national system of banking.

We have said, "Young men for war and old men for counsel," and as a result of such indulgence over 30,000,000 lives—the flower of the youth of the world—were sacrificed to the god of war, in the recent world conflict.

Youth is imperfect and crude. Often their ideals are not well stated, and in their enthusiasm they clash with more experienced and better directed policies. But age alone is not final proof of truth and righteousness.

What youth has done may be done again. Give it a chance.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.

I am a poor boy in misfortune, and I write this letter to you all to see if you can help me a little by buying a box of beautiful Sea Shells. They are strange and wonderful things, fine for presents, souvenirs, or keepsakes. Price, $1 a box. I am a crippled boy, permanently bed-ridden, caused by a fall. I can't walk or sit up. Been down in bed 25 years and I have to earn a living in my helpless condition, and if you can send me an order for a box of Sea Shells I sure will appreciate your kindness, and I believe you will be pleased with these pretty Sea Shells.

Yours in Misfortune,

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

"Our Girls."

A few weeks ago it was our delightful privilege to hear two of our very own girls in a meeting. Both natives of New Orleans, living in the same community, attending the same Sunday school and church (Carrollton), members of the same Epworth League, and now, after years of preparation and service, had absented themselves from our midst. Each came home for the summer vacation to talk in their home church—each with a definite message, full of enthusiasm, eager to get back to their respective fields of labor.

Miss Clara Chalmers, who has been at work in Cuba, told of the people who inhabit the island, courageous, strong, intellectual, eager and ready for the Gospel.

Miss Sophie Kuntz, graduated from Scarritt Bible and Training School, under appointment by the Council to work in Biloxi, Miss., told of her two years spent in the training school.

As we looked into the earnest, splendid faces of these young women and listened to their messages, our hearts were thrilled. A prayer of thanksgiving for them went up to our Father as we realized what they were capable of doing through their consecrated service.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM TAKES FORWARD STEP.

The findings of the Conference on Evangelism held at Northfield, Mass., June 24-26, have just been announced.

In this place, hallowed by memories of Dwigth L. Moody, the conference of denominational secretaries for evangelism, together with other evangelistic leaders, reached decisions which should have far-reaching influence upon the life of all the churches of the country.

One of the most significant results was the decision to enter unitedly next fall upon a program of increasing church attendance. The plan has two main objectives; first, to re-interest the absentee church member who does not take church attendance seriously as a duty; and, second, to secure the attendance of every possible person in the community who is not now a member of the church.

The first Sunday in October is suggested as a day for the simultaneous launching of this program throughout the country. This day was chosen because some of the denominations had already selected it as a time for their own special emphasis.

The conference also gave special attention to plans for developing a fall evangelistic program by the pastors and laymen of the churches. During recent years, the period in the spring just preceding Easter has come to be generally accepted as a time for concerted emphasis on evangelism. It was felt that a similar plan needed to be developed for the fall, culminating in a definite attempt to lead men and women into the church. This would be the climax of the proposed campaign on church attendance.

The findings of the conference, as unanimously adopted, are as follows:

Proposed Fall Program on Evangelism.

1. Churches and pastors should know their fields. To this end we urge that wherever possible there be a survey of the field this autumn sufficiently thorough to result in a list of the names of all in the community who ought to be reached by the church. Where there is more than one church in the community, the survey can be made co-operatively, each church receiving the names of those who express a preference for it or are its normal responsibility. If a survey is not undertaken, there should be at least an assembling of as many names as possible of people

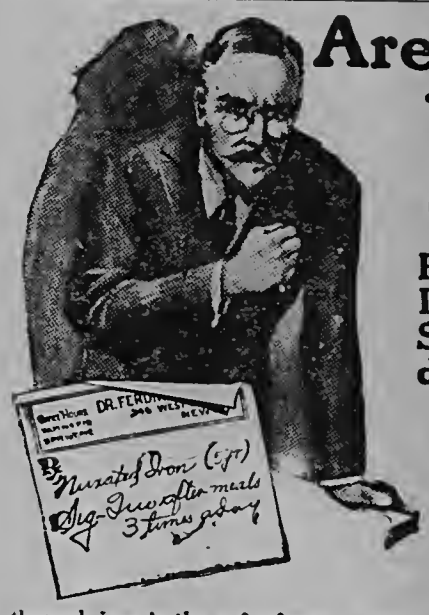
OUSTS RHEUMATISM.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system by the very simple treatment of taking Renwar Salts which neutralizes the uric acid in the blood, and Renwar attacks the very cause of this malady and expells the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way injure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial and you will never regret it. Mr. Benagh of the Nashville Railway and Light Company says, "Within two or three days after using Renwar my rheumatism disappeared." Price 50c. Ask your druggist for it, or write Warner Drug Company, Nashville, Tenn.—Adv.



Are You Losing Your Grip on Health?

Physician's Prescription to Increase the Health and Strength of Anaemic, Run-down Men and Women

As a result of the tremendous strain of modern living many people find that the nerve cells have become devitalized, the whole system weakened, and thousands of men and women are today losing their grip on health simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of sufficient iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life sustaining oxygen enters the body and enables the blood to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain. If people would only keep their blood filled with sufficient strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated Iron when they feel weak and run-down they might readily build up their red blood corpuscles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength of weak nervous run-down men and women in two weeks time in many instances. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. Nuxated Iron is on sale at all good druggists.

LOUISIANA WINS AT LAKE JUNALUSKA.

Louisiana and Georgia carried off the honors on State and Conference night here, under the auspices of the Sunday school leadership schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The program consisted of a series of short pageants, magnifying the message of the religious education movement. The time limit was fifteen minutes for each pageant, this time to include the setting of the stage, presentation of pageant, and clearing the stage. Points considered in the decision of the judges were: Originality, twenty-five per cent; religious educational message, thirty per cent; effectiveness in presentation, twenty-five per cent; artistic effect, twenty per cent.

J. Q. Schisler, of Nashville, presided over the events and announced the decision of the judges. According to announcement, Georgia, on the vote of the judges, won two first places and one second place, while Louisiana won one first place and two second places; but figured on the percentage basis, Louisiana was ahead by several points.

Groups participating and the titles of their pageants in the order of presentation were: Louisiana: "A Hundred Years of Religious Education in the Land of Evangeline;" Georgia: "Marriage of Methodist Episcopal Church and Miss Methodist South;" Alabama: "Why Alabama Conferences Come to Junaluska;" Tennessee: "Tennessee the Hub of Southern Methodism."

Following the presentation of the first two pageants, N. P. Patton, of Spartanburg, S. C., entertained the big crowd during the intermission with imitations of nature, and musical selections played on a hand-saw with a violin bow.

The Rev. Dr. R. H. Harper, of New Orleans, was author of the Louisiana pageant; Mrs. Harper, stage director, and H. P. Wall, reader. The moss-hung trees, Evangeline in her boat among the reeds in the moonlight lent atmsophere and effectiveness to the stage setting. Successive stages in the progress of religious education were depicted.

Those taking part and characters portrayed in the Louisiana pageant were: Mrs. T. P. Bell, "Evangeline"; Miss Mary Lou Barge, "Louisiana;" Miss Beth Marie Skoog, Trumpeter; Miss Mary Pace, Banner-bearer; Mrs Moody, Banner-bearer; E. G. Cann, "William Winans;" Miss Dart, "Mrs. Winans;" Dr. Thomas Carter, "Judah P. Benjamin;" ——— ———, "Jefferson Davis;" Rev. M. W. Wyatt, "Bishop H. N. McTyeire;" Miss Dews Walker, Flag-bearer; Miss Hattie Walker, "Girl with Bible;" Mrs. Shelly, "Teacher;" Misses Pace, "Orphanage Children;" Miss Thelma Cayard, "Mrs. Julia Truitt Bishop;" Miss Cora Perkins, "Standard Training Schools;" Mrs. Katherine Cole, soloist; Miss Bernice Rea, pianist. The scenes presented were: "Land of Evangeline;" "First Methodist School in Louisiana;" "Centenary College;" "New Orleans Christian Advocate;" "Mansfield College;" "Louisiana Methodist Orphanage;" "Vacation Bible Schools;" "Standard Training Schools;" "Louisiana at Junaluska—1924."—Secular Press Bureau.

in the community who are not members of any church, placing these names on a prospect list. Such names can be secured from the various members of the church, the Sunday school, public school lists, etc.

2. There should be in every church this autumn a special period of "friendly visitation" in the homes of the community, carried on by a group appointed for that purpose, designed to enlist fresh interest among those who are already church members, and to invite to the church those who are not.

3. We commend the growing practice of holding a church "Rally Day" in the fall, on which day special attention is given to securing the attendance of all in the community, and seeking to interest them in the life and work of the church. There is special advantage in a concerted observance of this day. In view of the fact that the first Sunday in October is already observed as "Rally Day" among many churches and Bible schools, we suggest the observance of this date as widely as practical, with Sunday, Sept. 21, or any time in the intervening two weeks used as a visitation period.

4. Every church should have a definite plan for extending to every unchurced person in the community a personal invitation to become a member of the church. This plan should not be a plan of the minister alone. His part is to inspire men and women to desire to do the work of personal evangelism and to organize his members in a systematic way for a definite personal evangelistic program. We commend the plan of setting aside a special period in which those outside the church will be visited by laymen and urged to become Christians.

There should be at least a brief period of training for those who are to carry on this program of personal evangelism in the local church. Such services by laymen will result not only in securing permanent accessions to the church, but also in enriching the religious experience of all who participate.

5. We believe that there should be a definite attempt on the part of all churches to secure an autumn ingathering, planning just as specifically for this as for the ingathering in the pre-Easter season.

The following resolution, adopted by the conference and conveyed to Dr. Charles L. Goodell, who served as the host of the conference, expressed the common judgment as to the value of the gathering:

That we express our deepest appreciation to the Federal Council for their gracious hospitality during the Retreat, and that we express our deep desire to have another Retreat next year if such can possibly be arranged.—Bulletin, Federal Council of the Churches.

COMMISSION ON THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

The Secretarial Council has decided that the Labor Sunday Message for Sept. 7, 1924, shall concentrate upon an effort to distribute the Social Ideals of the churches and to interpret these basic standards to the Christian people of the country. The Secretaries are convinced that these Ideals have not as yet got to the Christian leaders of industry nor generally to the membership of the churches, and that it is vital to do this effectively and as quickly as possible.

An inexpensive edition of the Social Ideals, at sixty cents per hundred, postage prepaid, has been printed for distribution to congregations. It is suggested that pastors mail them personally to employers, managers and labor officials, urging their careful reading.

The Labor Sunday Message itself is an interpretation of the Ideals, prepared in the first instance by Rev. Alva W. Taylor, and is designed primarily for the use of pastors in the preparation of their Labor Sunday sermons.

The Labor Review for 1924, a summary of the more important industrial events of the year, with special reference to labor, will appear Aug. 1, as a number of the Information Service. The Message and the Review may be had for fifteen cents, or five cents for the Message and ten cents for the Review, postage prepaid; the latter in quantities, five cents each.

Pastors are urged to arrange for Labor Sunday services in their churches, regardless of the unsuitable time of the year, and to send abstracts and quotations from their addresses to the local press. It is frequently an advantage to bring in a speaker for the occasion, and to invite the formal attendance of labor organizations. The importance of the day lies largely in the opportunity which it affords for the education of congregations and communities in the spiritual and social aspects of the labor movement.

For the Secretaries.

FROM GREENWOOD SPRINGS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: That the boys may know we are on the job, we give a brief report of our work.

We have just closed a very successful revival here of two weeks' duration, with Rev. Marvin E. Scott in the pulpit. Scott is "some" preacher—our people were always guessing as to what he would say next; but he moved the church to action. Eighteen lives were reconsecrated to God. Fifteen joined the church, ten on profession of faith and five by certificate. Brother Herbert Nix, our choir leader, gave great satisfaction. Our people gave as an expression of appreciation $60 to Brother Nix, and $111 to Brother Scott. We enjoyed the preaching of "Mr. Scott" so much. Boys, he will teach you how—try him.

COMING TOWARD THE GOAL.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conferences:

The long, hot days of the waning summer remind us that the harvest season is at hand and the Annual Conferences are soon to follow. The Conferences in Greenville and Gulfport pledged themselves to a program of real progress and the months that followed have been busy ones. As I have gone here and there throughout the church, traveling over 15,000 miles and speaking in behalf of the various interests that are before us, I have been impressed with the fidelity of our preachers and an unusual activity on the part of our people. The remaining weeks, however, are crucial in their importance. In this short period a ripe harvest may be lost for lack of careful husbandry, and heroic endeavor almost anywhere may yet transform defeat into a worthy achievement for God and his church.

1. Let me exhort our preachers and people everywhere to follow up the revival campaigns of summer with diligent efforts to lead every person, who has manifested any serious impression, into open allegiance to Christ and his church. Such persons must not be forsaken when the revival campaign is over. Their souls are at stake. If decision should be deferred, their impressions may be dissipated never to return. After all, few souls are led to Christ without the faithful dealing of some friend in personal appeal. Let all our churches organize to see that every impressed person is brought to an early decision. The gleanings after the summer reaping may be as valuable as the original harvest.

2. We have pledged our best for level columns of finance in every district on the regular claims. This is not a vain dream. It can be done. The progress of the kingdom in a hundred directions is hinged on the payment of these obligations. Where the pastor and two or three good men and women agree that it shall be done, God will thrust in his hand and enable them to bring it to pass. Fortunately bountiful harvests have rewarded the toils of the year, and our people have been blessed with a greater abundance than for several years. God ought to be acknowledged in the stewardship of this abundant harvest. The first fruits belong to God, and the church should not wait for what is left after other obligations have been met. Let the people be challenged now to put God first in the payment of these obligations and prove him and his promise to bless them with yet greater rewards. It must needs be remembered, too, that a campaign to finish the task in September will succeed, while waiting for October will likely spell defeat.

3. Special emphasis needs to be laid upon the collection of our Christian Education, Centenary, and Superannuate Endowment pledges in every church. Every dollar of these subscriptions is so sacred and means so much to the coming of God's kingdom that it ought to be paid in gold. Thousands of such pledges made in good faith remain unpaid. It would be unfair to say that every man who does not meet his financial obligations when they fall due is dishonest. Many of our people have been temporarily unable to meet their pledges, but nearly everybody will be able to catch up this fall. To repudiate or delay the payment of an obligation to God and his church, when payment is possible, touches the deeps of dishonesty. God in his providence has now given the opportunity, and a clarion call needs to be sounded in every church to make a clean sweep of all that is due. Those who are charged with caring for these sacred interests are going to make the call, and they have a right to the faithful co-operation of all the local forces in every church.

The unification issue is before our people and deserves at every hand the most careful and prayerful investigation. It is to be earnestly hoped that our people will keep themselves calm and dispassionate, so that the work of the church will not be hindered. It is over a year before our Conferences will vote, and this must not be a time of unseemly wrangle. Let us study the question and let us prayerfully come to our conclusions concerning the great issues that are at stake; but let us manifest a Christian deference for each other's opinions. Above all, let all God's servants gird themselves for the great work of the kingdom, and may all who have gone forth bearing the precious seed of the kingdom come again rejoicing at West Point and Canton, bearing their sheaves with them.

W. N. AINSWORTH.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN W. BOSWELL, D.D.

Dr. John W. Boswell, an honored and beloved member of the North Mississippi Conference, member of the editorial staff of the General Sunday School Board, passed to his reward from his home at Cedar Hill, Tennessee, on Monday afternoon, Aug. 4. Funeral services were held at McKendree Methodist Church, Nashville, on the following Wednesday morning, with interment in Springhill Cemetery, near Nashville.

Dr. Boswell was born on Nov. 30, 1839. In 1859 he was admitted on trial in the Memphis Conference, being just 20 years of age. From that time till the day of his death, when he was nearly 85 years old, his life was an example of diligence, faithfulness, frugality, loyalty to the highest ideals of life, devotion to the Master, that is an inspiration to the thousands who, first and last, came within the range of his influence. As a circuit preacher, presiding elder, and editor of church periodicals, Dr. Boswell had wide experience in the affairs of the church, and he rendered a service to its institutions the value of which cannot be computed.

For nine years Dr. Boswell was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and those who read the paper during his administration will remember the ability he displayed in its management and the devotion he showed to the doctrines and polity of the church. Upon his retirement from the editorship, his successor, Dr. R. A. Meek, in a well-deserved tribute to him, said, among other things: "Often weighed in the balances, he has never been found wanting. No trust has ever suffered in his hands. The possessor of many shining virtues, the one which rises above and crowns all the others is his unchallenged probity of character."

The late Dr. E. L. McGehee, speaking for many readers of the Advocate, wrote the following when he retired from the editorship: "None knew him who did not have confidence in his spiritual life. He never sought preferment, but with resignation cheerfully took up any work assigned. As editor of our Christian Advocate, he deserved the gratitude of the church for the sustained devotion with which he gave himself to this work of almost unparalleled importance. With faithfulness and without fear, he condemned the sinful practices of the day. A straight course for so many years, through changing fortune and amidst various habits of life, could only be possible through a personal allegiance to Christ."

In addition to his connection with the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Dr. Boswell was also at one time editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate and twice assistant editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate. Altogether, he was engaged in editorial work for more than thirty years. He labored to the end, his final illness lasting but a few hours. It was characteristic of him that he expressed a desire to go to his office for his usual tasks on the morning of the day he passed away. He died in harness.

Dr. Boswell was twice married, first to Miss Lenora McKay in 1864, who died on Feb. 24, 1920; his second marriage was to Mrs. Addie P. Matthews, who survives him, with one son and three daughters by his first marriage. The editor of the Advocate feels a personal sorrow in the going away of this good man, and he extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends. Doubtless a suitable memoir, prepared by competent hands, will be furnished for publication in due time.

Faith is the very heroism and enterprise of intellect. Faith is not a passivity, but a faculty. Faith is power, the material of effect. Faith is a kind of winged intellect. The great workmen of history have been men who believed like giants.—Charles H. Parkhurst.

THE PENDING PLAN OF UNIFICATION EMBODIES ALL THE ESSENTIAL SUGGESTIONS OF OUR GENERAL CONFERENCE SINCE NEGOTIATIONS BEGAN.

By President J. H. Reynolds, Hendrix College.

The history of the negotiations for unification sheds light upon the plan now before the two churches. The following illuminating and significant facts should be kept in mind:

The pending plan incorporates all major demands ever made by any General Conference or Commission of our church since negotiations began. The negotiations have extended over a period of almost fourteen years. For some years prior to 1910 there was a Joint Commission on Federation, composed of representatives from our church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Protestant Methodist Church. In December, 1910, this Commission met in Baltimore. At this meeting the M. E. Commission, through Bishop Cranston, proposed negotiations looking toward organic union of the three churches. While the Southern Commission did not feel authorized to negotiate for organic union, they felt free under their instructions to explore plans for closer relations between the churches, and accordingly entered upon negotiations. At the meeting the Joint Commission reached some basic conclusions fundamental to negotiations. Two of these agreements are as follows:

"We are mutually agreed that the churches represented by us are equally apostolic in faith and purpose and have a common origin, the Methodist Episcopal Church, organized in 1784; that they are joint heirs of the traditional and doctrinal standards of the fathers; and that they have proved their loyalty to the evangelical faith and evangelical spirit which characterized early Methodists.

"We are mutually agreed that our fathers settled the issues of the past conscientiously for themselves, respectively, and separated regretfully, believing that only such action could insure their continued success to the people they were called to serve."

Gentlemen's Agreement.—These agreements place the three churches on absolutely equal footing. They serve as an estoppel against any of the three churches again making animadversions respecting the unpleasant events of the past. In approving these agreements, the General Conferences of the two Episcopal Methodisms practically entered into a gentleman's agreement that they would bury the past differences, shake hands, and face the future upon the same honorable footing. Hence in this discussion it comes in poor grace for brethren now to call up unpleasant events. It can have no other effect than to stir up prejudices. It is a confession that their cause is weak.

Suggestions of Bishop Hoss.—The Joint Commission at the Baltimore meeting created a committee of nine, three from each Commission, and charged it with the duty of inquiring into the causes producing friction and waste and if practicable to report back to the Joint Commission a plan looking to unification through reorganization.

This committee met in January, 1911, at Cincinnati. The committee representing each church made tentative suggestions. Bishop Hoss, speaking for the Southern committee, consisting of himself, Dr. Frank M. Thomas, and Mr. W. G. M. Thomas, made proposals of which the following is a summary:

1. That the three churches be merged into one.

2. That the united church have common articles of faith, conditions of membership, hymnal and ritual.

3. That the church be organized under one General Conference and four quadrennial conferences, the General Conference to have exclusive jurisdiction over all connectional matters, while the quadrennial conferences were to have all powers not delegated to the General Conference, and were to elect bishops; the structure and power of the Conferences to be fixed under a written constitution.

4. That there be lodged outside of the General Conference and quadrennial conferences the power to arrest unconstitutional legislation.

Suggestions of the Southern Committee Incorporated.—After mature consideration the committee of nine agreed upon a report which they submitted to the Joint Commission on Federation at Chattanooga in May, 1911. After a consideration of this report lasting for three days, the Joint Commission adopted the report with some amendments to be submitted to the General Conferences of the three churches. A comparison of this report with the suggestions of the Southern sub-committee through Bishop Hoss outlined above shows that the Joint Commission incorporated all of the main suggestions of the Southern committee, as will be seen from the following brief summary of the report of the Joint Commission:

1. That the three churches be united into one church.

2. That the united church have common articles of faith, conditions of membership, hymnal and ritual.

3. That the governing authority of the reorganized church be vested in one General Conference and three or four quadrennial conferences, the General Conference to exercise power over connectional matters and the quadrennial conferences power over local affairs; the General Conference to consist of two houses, the upper house having equal representation from the quadrennial conferences, and the lower house proportional representation from the Annual Conferences. The quadrennial conferences were to name the bishops from their respective jurisdictions, who in turn were to be confirmed by the upper house of the General Conference. They suggested that the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Protestant Church, and such other colored Methodists as may enter into agreement with them, be constituted one of the quadrennial conferences.

4. That an authority outside the General and quadrennial Conferences be constituted to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation.

Oklahoma City General Conference Action.—The report of the work of the Joint Commission on Federation was made to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Oklahoma City in 1914. That body unanimously approved the work of their commissioners, accepted the principles laid down in the report as constituting a basis for a plan of union both feasible and desirable, and directed the appointment of a commission to represent our church in collaborating with a similar commission from the other churches in developing the details of a plan. This conference also suggested that the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church be formed into an independent organization holding fraternal relations.

Negotiations.—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1916 approved the report of the Joint Commission of Federation, accepted the report as containing the basic principles of a reunited Methodism and directed the appointment of a commission of twenty-five on unification.

Under the authority of the two General Conferences the two commissions conducted negotiations during 1917 and in the spring of 1918. It was found in the negotiations that the suggestion of the Southern General Conference that the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church be set apart in an independent organization was not feasible, as it could not be done without the consent of the colored members. The Southern Commission considered, however, that their General Conference had approved negotiations on the basis of the colored membership constituting a quadrennial conference and that its proposal that the colored members constitute an independent organization was a mere suggestion.

When the General Conference met at Atlanta in 1918 our Commission reported that their work was not complete. The General Conference, by almost unanimous vote, approved the work of the Commission, accepted again the report of the Joint Commission on Federation as containing the basic principles for reunited Methodism, and directed negotiations to be continued.

The two Commissions continued their work and developed a plan, which, while they did not recommend, they decided to transmit to their respective General Conferences. The Methodist Episcopal General Conference at Des Moines in 1920 decided that they did not have time to give adequate consideration to so elaborate a plan in the midst of other pressing business. Accordingly they advised the continuation of negotiations, giving their Commission the right to agree upon a plan on the principles hitherto accepted as a basis for negotiation or upon any other principle which might be mutually agreed upon. The General Conference at Hot Springs in 1922 approved the work of their Commission and directed the continuation of negotiations either upon the principles already agreed upon or other principles which they might adopt. The two Commissions, with enlarged powers, soon developed the present plan of union. They decided that in the former plan they had attempted too much and that they must propose to their respective churches a much simpler plan if they hoped to secure its ratification.

The Present Plan Compared With Bishop Hoss' Original Suggestions.—A brief analysis of the pending plan shows that it incorporated all the main suggestions of the Southern committee headed by Bishop Hoss at Baltimore in 1910 and of subsequent General Conferences. It will be remembered that the Southern committee in 1910 proposed that there should be a General Conference to have jurisdiction over all connectional matters, and four quadrennial conferences with power over local matters. The pending plan provides for a General Conference with powers over connectional affairs and two jurisdictional conferences with powers over local affairs, including all powers not specifically assigned to the General Conference. The only difference here is in the number of regional conferences, the Southern committee proposing four, while the present plan has only two. The principle, however, is the same.

It should be noted in passing that the Commission on Unification incorporated another suggestion of the Joint Commission on Federation, namely, that the General Conference should have two houses, the upper house resting on the principle of equal representation from the quadrennial conferences, like the United States Senate, and the lower house resting upon representation proportional to population, like the lower house in Congress. The present plan improves upon the bicameral General Conference by having the two bodies sit together, hear all discussions, but vote separately.

The pending plan incorporates the suggestions of the Southern committee that the two churches be united into one with common articles of faith, hymnal, and ritual. It also incorporates the suggestion rigidly insisted upon by the Southern Commission throughout, that neither the General Conference nor any quadrennial conference should be the final judge of the constitutionality of its own acts. For this purpose they created a judicial council, clothed with authority of passing upon the constitutionality of the acts of the General and Jurisdictional Conferences and of administrative boards.

Thus it will be seen that all the main suggestions made originally by Bishop Hoss and the Southern committee in 1910 reappear in the pending plan.

Minority Church Protected.—Another principle for which the Southern Church has contended throughout the negotiations is that the minority church must be given ample means of protecting itself against being swallowed up by the Methodist Episcopal Church. Let us see whether the Southern Commission has been true to this demand.

In respect to legislation, the plan before us secures for the Southern Church equal power with the Methodist Episcopal Church, though the latter has almost twice our membership. Before any measure can become a law it must have an affirmative vote of the members of the General Conference from each jurisdiction. This means that nothing can become a law without the approval of the Southern Jurisdiction. At no time during the progress of the negotiations did our General Conference make a demand for equal power in legislation. This magnanimous provision was generously proposed by the Commission of our sister church.

Our church is protected against all-powerful General Conference in two ways, first, by a constitutional provision limiting the power of the General Conference to connectional matters only, and, second, by creating a judicial council distinct from the General Conference with the sole power of passing on the constitutionality of legislation by the General or Jurisdictional Conferences. This court, in which the Southern Jurisdiction has half of its membership, adequately protects the minority church against usurpation of power by the General or Jurisdictional Conferences.

The minority church insisted all along on the right of each jurisdiction to elect its quota of bishops. This right is guaranteed in the pending plan, and is further protected by the provision that each bishop shall work within his own jurisdiction unless he is invited to the other jurisdiction by a majority of the bishops of that jurisdiction. This protects absolutely the minority church against objectionable bishops from the other jurisdiction.

Moreover, the plan amply protects the South's peculiar views on the Negro question. On this point the Northern Commission soon found that the Southern Commission would not yield, and the plan adopted gives absolute protection in this matter. The colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church have their own churches, conferences and bishops. They will not come in contact with the individual congregations or any of the quarterly, district, Annual or Jurisdictional Conferences of the Southern Jurisdiction. The colored Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church will have representatives among the delegates of the jurisdiction in the General Conferences, with whom they will sit and vote. But these colored members will have no voice whatever in shaping the decisions of the Southern Jurisdiction of the General Conference.

These legal guarantees are everything which the Southern Methodist Church could ask. They are more than any General Conference or Commissoin of our church has asked. However, the greatest guarantee of the rights of the minority church lies in the enlightened Christian conscience of the Methodist Episcopal Church. That Christian conscience would not permit any injustice done to the minority church, even though there might be individuals who would be willing to do injustice. When the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as a jurisdiction in the reunited church, was given equal power with itself, it settled forever the question of complete protection of the peculiar social views as well as the power of the minority church.

This brief review of the negotiations for union shows conclusively that our Commissioners have been faithful in carrying out all suggestions and instructions of our General Conference, that they have embodied them in the pending plan, that they have been jealous to safeguard every vital interest of our church. The review also shows that our church has played a leading part throughout the negotiations, and that by repeated General Conference actions our church is completely committed to unification on the principles embodied in the pending plan. It is therefore entirely too late to raise the question of the expediency of unification or to object to the essential principles of the present plan. Four successive General Conferences, beginning at Oklohoma City, have settled both questions.

When, in addition to the facts recited, it is further remembered that commissions composed of able men from both churches have worked on the proposed union for fourteen years, that they had the benefit of the collective wisdom of several General Conferences and the counsel of hundreds of the strongest people in both churches, and that the thought of Southern Commissions has gone into the details of the plan in such a large way, our Annual Conferences will scarcely be willing to assume the responsibility before God and history in rejecting the plan.

Conway, Ark.

WHO MISUNDERSTANDS AND WHO IS MISLED?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

The advocates of the proposed plan of unification urge the preachers and people of our church to accept a confessedly imperfect plan which they assure us will bring peace and prosperity to American Methodism when finally completed by the first General Conference held after its adoption in its present unfinished form.

When, in reply to their insistent exhortations, it is said that it is too loose and imperfect to risk holding a General Conference under its present provisions, they adjure us to put "away fears and distrust" and "to have faith."

They have declared that there is no risk in the plan at any point, and that every interest to our church is safeguarded by it.

When the question of the position, prerogatives and privileges of Negro bishops is raised, they deride all misgivings about the matter, and almot denounce any one who mentions the subject.

At the General Conference in Chattanooga, one of the leading advocates of the proposed plan, who was also a member of the Commission on Unification and claimed to have borne a considerable part in framing the plan, said: "You are in no more danger from the Negro bishops than you are from a lightning stroke coming from a radio through the air." The same speaker said the place of the Negro bishops in the United Church, if the plan were adopted, would amount to no more than the introduction of a Negro bishop to the Conference.

Another advocate of the proposed plan ignored the difference between an Episcopal bishop, who is limited to a diocese, and a Methodist bishop, who is a general superintendent of the whole church, and said: "Every man who has studied this question knows that the Northern Methodist Church did just exactly what the Episcopal Church did. Both of them had a large number of colored people in their churches, and they elected bishops to preside over the colored Conferences. That was the purpose for which they were elected; and to say there is any danger of the Southern division of this sisterhood of churches ever voting for the crossing of our lines is unjustly and unfairly stirring up our prejudices."

To the same purpose all the Southern advocates of the proposed plan speak when they discuss the matter of the Negro bishops in the United Church.

But what they say to allay the fears of the white Methodists of the South does not accord with what the Northern advocates of the proposed plan are saying to quiet the misgivings of the Negroes of their church.

Here are a few of the utterances of Northern leaders on the subject.

In the Central Christian Advocate of June 25, 1924, an official organ of the Northern Church published at Kansas City, Mo., and edited by Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, appeared the following frank and sincere statements:

"There seems to be an idea in some quarters that when the two churches are united by the proposed plan that our Negro bishops will be made to feel that they are to go and sit down in the background. We have seen statements that the Negro bishops will not preside over the General Conference. We presume that that is so. And there are a large number of white bishops who will not preside over the General Conference, since a very small number, possibly only two from each jurisdiction, will be the limit. It is unlikely that of the two designated one jurisdiction will name a colored bishop, because the selective process will name only those most highly endowed in parliamentary intricacies. But that a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal jurisdiction will be cast aside because of his color is rather an exaggeration. At the last General Conference Bishop Jones (colored) presided over a regular session of the General Conference, and Bishop Clair (colored) assisted in the consecration of the bishops-elect, and with dignity and acceptability from every standpoint.

"Moreover, this resolution was passed by the General Conference:

"'Whereas, the treatment of colored peoples in all parts of the world by Christian nations, for the most part white, constitutes a direct challenge to the teachings and ethics of Jesus; therefore,

"'Be it resolved, That we, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, refuse to recognize as valid in church or State, any discrimination on the basis of race or color; for "He hath made of one blood all nations;" "We also are his offspring."'"

In the course of his speech before the General Conference at Chattanooga, in opposition to the proposed plan, Rev. A. J. Lamar, D.D., our Senior Book Agent, made the following statement of what was said to him by Rev. David G. Downey, D.D., the Book Editor of the Northern Church:

"Shortly after the General Conference which elected these two Negro bishops I was in the City of New York on business to which you had assigned me, and I made, as I always make it, a point of meeting my friend, the book editor of that church, Dr. Downey. He said to me: 'Lamar, how is this election of Negro bishops going to affect your people as to unification?' 'Why,' I said, 'Downey, I do not think it will have the slightest effect. You know, and I know, and everybody knows, that these Negro bishops were elected for the Negro part of your church, and that they will not preside everywhere, but are to be confined to that field and we all understand it.' He said: 'Well, you are mistaken in that; they are legal bishops of the Methodist Church, and we voted them separately instead of electing them on the same ballot, as we were afraid that the General Conference would not elect a Negro if we did not do that.'"

Dr. Downey was chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy which brought forward in the Northern General Conference the report providing for the election of the Negro bishops, which report was as follows:

Report No. 2. Negro Episcopal Supervision.
"Your committee recommends.
(1) The election by this General Conference of two Negro General Superintendents.
(2) That the Negro General Superintendents be elected on a separate ballot."

Dr. Downey ought to know, and doubtless does know, the meaning and purpose of that report.

In the Journal of the Northern General Conference is the following record of how the report was adopted on May 11, 1920:

"On a question of privilege. D. G. Downey, chairman, presented Report No. 2 of the Committee on Episcopacy.
"After consideration, the previous question was ordered on motion of Frank Doran.
"The report was adopted. The Conference stood and sang the doxology and the hymn, 'Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory of the Coming of the Lord.'"

Under this report Robert E. Jones was elected May 19, and on motion of R. B. McCary, another Negro delegate, he was escorted to the platform by Bishops Thirkield and McDowell, presented to the Conference, and seated with the bishops. In like manner, when Matthew W. Clair, the second Negro bishop, was elected, on May 20, on motion of E. C. Lyon, of the Washington Conference (a colored Conference), he was escorted to the platform by Bishops McDowell and Bristol, presented to the Conference, and seated with the bishops.

The entire proceeding, including the spontaneous singing which followed the adoption of the report and the circumstances following the election of the Negro bishops, reveals the spirit and purpose of the Conference in the action thus taken.

If, however, anything further were needed to make this spirit and purpose clear, it is found in a passage from Episcopal Address, which was prepared by Bishop W. F. McDowell, and by him read to the General Conference, on Sunday afternoon, May 2, 1920.

Upon the general subject of church union and denominational mergers, and with evident reference to the plan of unification which that Conference subsequently declined to consider, the Episcopal Address read by Bishop McDowell contained the following paragraphs:

"The war has produced its full measure of talk about union, disunion, and reunion. Perhaps no single event has been more widely referred to or more illogically and superficially used than the placing of the allied armies under the command of Marshal Foch. This unity of command did not disband, or disorganize, the army of a single nation. Under a common head allied armies cooperated as one against a common foe. The real lesson of that act must not be lost in its inaccurate use as an illustration. Military, commercial and governmental analogies easily mislead and are easily overworked.

"And the problem of union is far deeper and more significant than simply fusing two or more denominations, and much deeper than a plan of organization. Because it does go so deep it cannot rest on a shallow or small motive, or be secured by resolution. The motive for union must be big enough to last on all lands, in all years. Getting together simply to save a few dollars, or to prevent some overlapping, is not an end worth while. The only real motive for union is the winning of the world to Christ. Such union cannot be secured by letting down essential standards, by reducing churches to their lowest terms, or by fatal compromises of truth and principle.

"Union is not desirable unless it is right. For the union of like-minded bodies, bodies that are one in heart and spirit, any person might heartily labor. On the other hand, the prevention of a formal union between bodies that are not one in heart and spirit would be a worthy endeavor. Because of its tremendous importance the union of any churches must be on the right basis. The goal is so desirable that we must not be turned aside into a false path or give up our effort to find a true one."

Applying the principles thus enunciated, the writer of the Address proceeded to say:

"We must ask of all movements for union or federation four questions and determine our attitude to them by the answer they make: 1. Does the movement make for a real brotherhood of Christian people? 2. Does the movement make for the real unity of all sections, races, nations, and classes within Christ's church? 3. Does the movement make for unity of life, unity of sacrificial, atoning purpose toward men, unity in the holiness and passion of the church's life, like the unity between Christ and the Father? 4. Does the movement make for evangelistic efficiency and the triumph of the cross among all peoples, all classes, all races, and on all continents? By its answer to these searching questions the movement must be tested both in its general and in its particular features.

"For the church of Christ is not a racial church. The church of Christ is not a national, sectional, or class church. Plans of union that sectionalize, that nationalize, that racialize the church are not plans for Christian union."

What did the Negro members of that General Conference understand this utterance in the Episcopal Address to mean? And what did the 350,000 Negro members of the Northern Church come to understand it to mean? How did they interpret the election of Negro bishops which followed a few days after Bishop McDowell read the Episcopal Address from which the extracts quoted are taken?

These questions are easily answered.

The Northern Church publishes in New Orleans an official organ called the Southwestern Christian Advocate, which is edited by a Negro, Rev. Lorenzo H. King. Quite recently this paper came out in favor of unification because he (the editor) "hoped the influence of the Northern Methodist Church upon the Southern Methodist Church would be such as to allow the Negro the same advantages in the South as he enjoys in the North."

Another Negro, Rev. J. U. King, was sent by the General Conference of the Northern Church as fraternal messenger to the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which was in session at Louisville, Ky., while the Northern General Conference was in session at Springfield, Mass., May, 1924. He delivered his fraternal address on May 9 (two days after the proposed plan of unification was adopted by the Northern General Conference at Springfield, Mass., with the unanimous support of the Negro delegates), and, in the course of his remarks, after referring to the utterance of Bishop McDowell in the Episcopal Address of 1920, he said:

"This classic chapter on universal brotherhood paved the way for the adoption of a special resolution which elevated two Negroes to the highest office in the gift of their brethren, unrestricted, unlimited, full-fledged bishops of the Methodist Church."

In the light of all these deliverances can any sane man mistake what the Northern General Conference at Springfield, and especially its ninety Negro delegates, understood and intended by adopting the proposed plan of unification with its provision that all the bishops now in office, and any who may be elected hereafter, including the Negro bishops, are to be "bishops of the whole Church?"

Would the plan have been adopted without this provision? Could it have secured the votes of the Negro delegates if it had not contained those words?

Again the plan speaks as follows:

"The bishops of the two churches as at present constituted shall be the bishops of the United Church without further action.

"Immediately after the union shall have been consummated the bishops shall meet and organize as one body and shall arrange for the superintendence of the work of the church."

Does the participation of Negro bishops in arranging "for the superintendence of the work of the church" amount to no more than the introduction of Bishop Isaac Lane to the General Conference at Chattanooga, the aged bishop of our Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, organized for our colored members by Bishops Paine and McTyeire at Jackson, Tenn., in 1870?

Do the utterances of Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, Dr. David G. Downey, Bishop W. F. McDowell, Rev. Lorenzo H. King, and Rev. J. U. King, of the Northern Church, agree with the speeches made at Chattanooga by the advocates of the proposed plan of unification?

Do these utterances of both white and colored leaders in the Northern Church harmonize with a statement published far and wide recently by a Southern leader who advocates the proposed plan? The Southern leader said:

"It is affirmed that the plan (of unification already adopted by the Northern Methodist Church) allows Negro bishops to preside in the College of Bishops and over the General Conference. The plan definitely provides exactly the contrary."

Does this statement of the Southern leader agree with the language of the proposed plan as nearly as do the utterances of the Northern leaders quoted?

If the speeches and writings of the Southern advocates of the proposed plan of unification differ so widely from the utterances of its Northern advocates, what would probably be the heat of the discussion of the subject in the first General Conference of the United Church, if the plan were adopted?

With such contradictory interpretations of a most essential feature of the plan, what agreement could be expected of the Southern delegates and the Northern delegates in the first General Conference? And if either side blocked action proposed by the other side, what sort of an explosion would follow?

Who misunderstands this plan? Do the Southern advocates misinterpret it? Or, do its Northern advocates misinterpret it?

Who is being misled? Are the white members of the Southern Church being misled? Or, are the Negro members of the Northern Chuch being misled?

Suppose a General Conference of the United Church were held in the South, and this question should be under discussion, with ninety Negro delegates on the Northern side of the house and three Negro bisbops on the platform, what would be the probable outcome? What would be the probable effect of tbe discussion on Metbodism in the South? What would be tho probable consequences and utterances among the Methodists of the North?

Manifestly, this ill-conceived plan of unification cannot make for peace and for the promotion of Christ's kingdom. It means, rather, more strife and more contention. It is a Trojan horse filled with men and arms of war.

Nothing is gained by shutting one's eyes to the real facts in the case. The situation by which our beloved church is now confronted is far too serious for frivolous discussion, or for ad captandum appeals to mere sentimentality. It calls for the exercise of clear reason and sound judgment.

If any man has formed and expressed opinions before knowing the facts, or without careful consideration of them, it is his duty to change his position in the light of fuller knowledge and more deliberate thought. His first care should be for the welfare of the church, and not for his own consistency.

IF I HAD ONLY A YEAR TO LIVE.

If I had only a year to live, I think I would live it about as I have my last year—that is, supposing that other conditions should remain tbe same. Few men of mature age or settled habits make any radical change at the prospect of death. Having striven from boyhood to live a worthy, moral and religious life, I would still press toward the goal, it may be with steadier if not more eager step.

I think I would increase my devotional life, and strive to be more kindly and patient to all those about me. Otherwise, in this regard, I can see no change that I would seek to make. If my going from earth would in any way involve my family in want, then I would give myself more diligently, if possible, to business, with the purpose of doing what I could in so short a time to aid them. But I would not do this merely to relieve them of any proper effort in providing for themselves after my decease. If extra effort in this regard seemed unnecessary, then I think I would go on in my regular way, doing from day to day whatever seemed right and reasonable with reference both to my family and to those without the family circle.

Since in all worthy life much time must be spent in getting ready to live, if but one year, remained, it would seem reasonable, in so far as this world is concerned, to live more than ordinarily for the present time. Hence, I would seek in worthy ways to get out of life from day to day all that it could rightly yield me. I would cultivate my home and my friends, take such wholesome recreations and read such worthy literature as would be most edifying and enjoyable, and would do my best to influence for good those about me. Withal, if an artist or literary man of any kind, if still well and strong, I would strive to issue the noblest production of all the years during my last. And whatever my work or calling, I should want the closing year of life to be of all the most useful.

VERITAS.

SOME RECENT LIGHT ON UNIFICATION.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

When a great issue is present before the church and men of strong conviction array themselves on either side of the question, and these men have the spirit of Christ, you may feel assured strong arguments will be brought forth. A real churchman, in the primary meaning of this term, has possibly at his command more material to use in discussion than a lawyer or statesman. It is a mere truism to say that with this equipment, to win and not to wound the opponent requires wisdom, patience, and consideration. Ignorance is ever the foe of truth; and if joined with rancor and prejudice, the cause of convincement is hopeless. So let us approach every discussion of this pending question, not with intolerance, not with abuse or denunciation, not with words that cut, hurt, and burn, but loving all and fearing none, state each his case as he sees the truth in the sight of God. Prompted by this spirit as I know my heart, and having a deep, loyal devotion to our church, I venture to adduce some facts for our consideration:

If the men who represented our church at the recent Chattanooga Conference are an indication of the thought and decision of Southern Methodists on this question, the church as a body favors unification, as outlined and presented to that body, by a large majority. Now these were men of mature judgment and long experience in church polity and doctrine. They are as well informed on current questions; are as well, if not better, educated as any body of men you might assemble anywhere in the world. Two hundred and ninety-eight cultured, Christian gentlemen, whose whole life interests are centered in their loved church, voted in affirmation of the proposed plan. That means much to me. No wonder a lifelong Methodist woman said, "I was opposed to uniting the churches, but since our leaders, by a majority vote, decided for it, I am satisfied."

The young people of the church are heartily in favor of the plan. This is shown by many resolutions passed by the Epworth League and Sunday school meetings throughout the South. I have not yet heard a discordant, opposing note from them. If I am wrong here, I will gladly accept correction.

The border States, where the two branches of Methodism commingle, and no doubt where fratricidal strife has been most prevalent, strange to say, are most eager and anxious to join forces for a united front against the enemies of God and man.

The missionary, the lone sentinel at the outer post, who through weary years of toil and waiting, dreaming, praying, struggling with poor equipment among strangers and aliens steeped in centuries of heathenism, hails this movement as an omen of a brighter and better day. What means this cry that comes from our mission fields of disappointed hopes and blighted prospects, of eager, anxious, praying missionaries and their converts—our half-finished churches and roofless school houses? Methodism united and aggressive, no doubt, can carry on missionary work far more successfully than when separated.

Again, a large number of secular newspapers, subsidized to the interest of Romanism, publish contributions opposed to the measure, for these well know the power and influence of a united church for vital spiritual religion. The Baptists, bless their earnest souls, a church that keeps us busy looking to our laurels, a great body of Christians who stand for truth as they see it unfalteringly, and are abreast with us for every righteous measure in this land, are looking askance at it, knowing full well it will mean renewed effort on their part.

I have marshaled these facts as a beginning for a series of articles I now intend writing on the subject. I do not see wherein I have misrepresented anything, for I sincerely believe the statements made, and am convinced they are true.

UNIFICATION—"WORLD OUTLET."

By Payton A. Sowell.

Our "present time"—if no other,—is swift to catch up a new phrase and as diligent to "wear it threadbare." Who can remember a sermon in the past ten years in which the preacher did not use the phrase "worth while?" I wish I knew who invented it! I have thought one of my Tennessee friends did—I hope not. In our time, more is said about turning our Methodism into a "world church" by our leaders than about the "Divine Atonement" for sinners.

For centuries the Protestant church viewed with horror the Roman Catholic Church in its ambition to be, and its actual attainment to the characteristics of a "world church."

The ambition of to-day goes beyond the sowing of the seeds of the kingdom in all lands. But it aspires to "do its do" in a "wide way" by great "arthly plans" to bring things to pass "by observation," to out-Herod Herod" in great scaffolding of methods, to the end sought.

I fear it has been a long day and night since many of our great "trumpeters" have read seriously the opinion of the Greatest Teacher (Luke xvii: 20-21): "The Kingdom of God cometh not by observation." "Neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! * * * the Kingdom of God is within you." And Matt. xiii:31: "The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field: indeed,it is the least of seeds." And Matt. xiii:33: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal." And John xviii:36: "Jesus answered, my kingdom is not of this world." Under this great utterance quoted last there lies the fundamental method and genius of the kingdom of heaven.

I would use the term "church," but the "forefront" leaders of to-day are tired of that—they are "Kingdom of Goders." I presume a "technical, at least, authority is still allowed Jesus in what he calls "My kingdom."

We have thought that Constantine set the Catholic church in the dangerous road when he gave it "a world church" ambition and goal. We seem to think Methodism can walk that highway safely. But we are of the same human nature as the Catholic church.

Many who have traveled abroad, specially since "Centenary days"—for these last prosperous days with the church treasury—have had more perfect opportunity to behold the great things of our sister Methodism as she rears her colleges and hospitals in all the far-away lands, and even in our own Southland, have realized that we, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are far too tame and obscure. And so the cry is:"A world church."

In the old days, Israel got tired looking at Samuel—"Old" Samuel, sitting in the tahernaclo—with the lips of God at his ear, and his own voice pleading for blessings and the reign of righteousness. The nation saw the "world glitter" of the kings about them—they craved to be a "world kingdom." They "unified"—and got Saul—and they had the tallest king of that day. But on Gilboah this giant "world tree" fell with a crash that shook to ruin their "good house" which was theirs in the simple days of Samuel.

As I sat at dusk last evening in meditation over this serious hour that waits to strike, involving the welfare of 2,500,000 men, women and little children who have treasured up the achievements, associations, fellowships, and the vision of simple country chapels, hid away under the shade of the beach, poplar and elms, as I shut my eyes, from out the silent past, there came in faint notes songs being sung hy voices that are strangely familiar—and a glow of comfort and a sense of peace filled my spirit.

But when I opened my eyes—lo, I see a General Conference in session in July. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, never beheld such a sight!! But—the "world" can and does have great conventions in June and July. We must break all precedents—no waiting until May, 1925. And in that great assembly nearly 300 voices—far above the voices of the 75—crying: "Let us have unification and become a world church!!"

As I sat in the dusk, two faces and circumstances, surprising, unexpectedly, peered at me from the past.

When I had ruddy cheeks, and was in the early time of my ministry, I served a country village church. In the village two business men lived—Mr. Bull and Mr. Naive. Mr. Bull was prosperous, Mr. Naive had empty shelves and few customers. I asked Mr. Bull if my good friend Naive had always been unprosperous. He replied: "No, there was a time when he led; his shelves were full, and his store crowded with customers." I asked, "How came the change?" He said: "In the day of prosperity he decided to move to a city—Nashville. His friends begged him, to no avail, to remain in Elkton—a village; but he said, 'Elkton is too small, I want an outlet for my capital.' In two years he came back, and I am sure he found the outlet."

I thought of my dear church. In the seventy-eight years she has done business for the "kingdom of heaven," we have gone into the Near and Far East; we have gone into Mexico and Brazil; we have carried the promise to almost every people—carried it in their own tongue; we have sung the songs of Wesley around the world; Marvin went to the East by way of the West. We have fed and nurtured our own land; millions taught by us have to glory gone, and 2,500,000 more are on the road. And yet they disturb us with the cry, "unification" with the Methodist Episcopal Church and be "a world church!"

May it not be our dear church, like my friend Naive, shall find an "outlet" for the treasures we have!

In this attempt to be "a world church" by "unification," may we not find an "outlet" for all our cherished and peculiar institutions; for our ideals that have grown with our growth; for our precious memories—memories of simplicity, of believing, tho prosperity that comes through processes that are natural; may we not lose our name or the privilege of choosing one; our constitution, and the pleasure and peace of contemplating the achievements made by our ancestors and handed down through the years to us, across the smoking battlefields, out of the pinch of the direst poverty, warm through deep experience, out of the pain of intense sacrifice of our fathers and mothers, who wrought for God in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, during these seventy-eight years!

These and many other treasures, deepenend and sweetened by the morning and evening prayers back in those years when the sun was rising and setting over the quiet and obscure homes far removed from the noise of the world—these treasures that are surely in danger of finding an "outlet"—were made to gild the memories of the 2,500,000, were enhanced by the simple, sincere gospel, in the pulpits of the village life, and the memory of the millions to "glory gone."

God has helped us prosper in the place Providence has set us for service. Let us fear to "seek an outlet."

We may have men among us who think they are too large to serve where Asbury, McKendree, Lee, the Pierces, Paine, Marvin, McTyeire and hundreds served—but they alone think so.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference are hereby called to meet me in Jackson at 8:30 a.m. on Friday, Sept. 26. This is for the purpose of making the usual fall survey of the work in preparation for the Annual Conference. I trust all will be present.

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

$550,000 PAID ON QUOTAS TO DATE—WHOOP IT UP, BOYS!

The man who wins doing anything is the one who works at the task. Success never comes by merely wishing for it. You get what you want by going after it with a never-say-die spirit. Never give up, but keep plugging at the thing you want to accomplish. All obstacles finally get out of the way of a determined man. "Even a rat can drown a nation if it has the persistence to gnaw a whole through the dyke." If you want to succeed in the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment, you will have to make a special effort.

WHEN THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY.

When a preacher writes me that the Superannuate Endowment quota cannot be raised by his charge, I know he has given up the effort in the pinch. He does not seek a way when familiar roads seem closed against him. He knows how to detour when driving his flivver on a summer vacation, but this does not enter his head when seeking money to pay his quota on Superannuate Endowment. The easiest way is to say "It cannot be done," and let it end with that. If this man would work as hard to find a way to do it as he does to find an excuse for not doing it, he would surely find that it can be done.

THE PREACHER SHOULD BE THE LAST TO QUIT.

When the aim is to raise money for the old-age benefit of preachers, it ill becomes preachers to lie down on the job. They should be at this thing early and late, seeking to inspire others with the confidence of victory. If a preacher excuses himself and his charge from this work by some flimsy reason, he will not deserve sympathy for deprivations he might suffer in his own superannuation. If I failed to do my dead level best for Superannuate Endowment, leaving others to carry on the movement to success, I could never receive help from the fund in my old age without feeling unworthy to have it. If I live long enough to receive a pension from my church as a superannuated preacher, I want to be able to say I helped to make the pension possible.

WHEN A FELLER NEEDS A FRIEND.

The preacher who reports at Conference "nothing paid on quota for Superannuate Endowment," will be as lonesome as a church mouse. Just think of him standing there, after his brother preachers have made glowing reports on this subject, saying: "Bishop, we didn't raise anything for Superannuate Endowment. There was too much rain." Ugh! I'll never be caught in a box like that as long as I have my wits about me. No, siree, when every other preacher is doing something special for the Forgotten Man, I want to do something for him, too.

CHECKS TO CLAIMANTS RETURNED UNCLAIMED.

On July 1 the Board of Finance mailed to the claimants the distribution checks due them for 1924. Thirty-four letters containing as many checks have been returned to the Board on account of incorrect addresses. If you can help to locate these claimants so that the checks may be sent to their correct addresses, the service will be appreciated by them and the Board. The Home Circle

GOOD-CHILDREN STREET.

There's a dear little home in Good-children Street—
My heart turneth fondly today
Where tinkle of tongues and patter of feet
Make sweetest of music at play;
Where the sunshine of love illumines each face
And warms every heart in that old-fashioned place.

For dear little children go romping about
With dollies and tin tops and drums,
And, my! how they frolic and scamper and shout
Till bedtime too speedily comes!
Oh, days they are golden and days they are fleet
With little folk living in Good-children Street.

See, here comes an army with guns painted red,
And swords, caps and plumes of all sorts;
The captain rides gaily and proudly ahead
On a stick-horse that prances and snorts!
Oh, legions of soldiers you're certain to meet—
Nice make-believe soldiers—in Good-children Street.

'Tis so the dear children go romping about
With dollies and banners and drums,
And I venture to say they are sadly put out
When an end to their jubilees comes;
Oh, days they are golden and days they are fleet
With little folk living in Good-children Street.

But when falleth night over river and town,
Those little folk vanish from sight,
And an angel all white from the sky cometh down
And guardeth the babes through the night,
And singeth her lullabys tender and sweet
To the dear little people in Good-children Street.

Though elsewhere the world be o'erburdened with care,
Though poverty fall to my lot,
Though toil and vexation be always my share,
What care I—they trouble me not!
This thought maketh life ever joyous and sweet:
There's a dear little home in Good-children Street.

JANE'S MENAGERIE.

"No, you can't have it!"

"I can, too."

"I say you shall not!" And there was a mighty emphasis on the last two words, as Jane wrested a book from the hands of her smaller sister, Louise. The book had been the object of the dispute. Louise sought refuge and help from her mother.

"Can you not allow your sister to use your things at all?" asked mother of Jane.

"No, the book is mine, and she can't use it; let her get one of her own," returned Jane stubbornly.

"Of course, it is yours to do with as you like, that is why I do not force you to give it up," answered mother, "but I am afraid you are getting together an awful menagerie you will some day not be able to handle."

"Why, mother!" exclaimed Jane, "a menagerie is a collection of animals. My book isn't an animal."

Jane left the room slowly, puzzled at what her mother had said. The whole incident might have passed out of Jane's mind but for something that occurred the following Sunday morning at Sunday school. She was listening very indifferently to her teacher's talk on the lesson of David's fight with Goliath, when suddenly she sat very erect.

"What did you say about a menagerie, Miss Crimm?" she asked.

"I said," answered Miss Crimm, patiently, "that we all have giants to fight, that they resemble a menagerie. There is the giant Bad Temper, who is like a roaring lion which nothing pleases; Selfishness is like the greedy pig, wanting everything for self and allowing no one the use of anything"—

There were other animals in the menagerie, but Jane did not hear the rest. She was thinking of what her own mother had said about a menagerie, and of the book she had refused Louise. The book wasn't the animal sure enough; the animal had been in the heart, and selfishness was its name.

"Did you ever see an old person whom you just couldn't love, of whom you were afraid?" Miss Crimm was saying when Jane began listening again.

"I have," promptly answered Jane. "The old man mother gets to trim her hedge and fix the flower beds. I am afraid to come around when he is on the place."

"Then you may know he failed to conquer these ugly beasts long ago when he was a boy, and now they are more than he can handle. I know the old fellow to whom you refer, and I am sure that is his trouble. He is so selfish, it would actually make him unhappy if you came behind him using his tracks to get by a muddy crossing. But do you know old Grandpa Gray?"

"Yes! Yes!" came from several members of the class. "He is not like that: we love him!"

"He does not have any ugly menagerie, does he?"

"I should say he doesn't," replied one girl. "We like to go there. He is so gentle and good, and always tells us stories."

"And the reason he is so kind I think you will find," said Miss Crimm, "is that he has loved Jesus so much all his life he has tried hard to keep these ugly beasts we have been talking about out of his heart."

On the way home afterwards Jane was busy making a comparison in her mind. "Who would want to be like poor old Mr. Scott, who has the terrible menagerie?" she asked herself. When she reached home, she said to her mother: "I know what you meant about the menagerie now, mother, and I am going to get rid of mine so when I get old I'll be as easy to love as Grandpa Gray."—Elizabeth Fulgham, in Texas Baptist.

STOP IT!

In greeting a minister of the gospel stop calling him "preacher." It would be just as appropriate to say to an attorney, "Good morning, lawyer," or to a man who tills the soil, "Good morning, farmer," or to a man who conducts a meat market, "Good morning, butcher," as to say to a minister of the gospel: "Good morning, preacher." Call him by his name just as you do other men.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Labor Sunday this year is August 31, the Sunday before the first Monday in September.

Trinity College, Durham, N. C., announces the addition of eight members to its faculty for next session.

Dr. Mark N. Terrell, general evangelist, recently held a meeting in Braggs, Okla., in which the membership of the church was more than doubled.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, our pastor at Boyce, La., informs us of the death of Mrs. J. S. Kingrey and Mr. Dan Robert, both members of our church at Boyce. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

Rev. R. L. Armstrong, assistant pastor of the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La., will fill, until Conference, the vacancy at New Iberia, La., caused by the appointment of Dr. Briscoe Carter as Centenary Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. Chas. O. Chalmers, Business Manager of the Advocate, attended the meeting of the Southern Methodist Press Association at Mount Sequoyah last week. He reports an interesting session of the Association.

We regret to learn that Rev. D. F. Anders, our pastor at Cotton Valley, La., has recently suffered from an attack of malarial fever. We are glad to know, however, that he is again able to be about his work.

The editor of the Advocate is dwelling in loneliness extreme, his wife being away on a visit to relatives in Cincinnati, Ohio, and his daughter likewise being on a visit to friends and relatives in Ellisville, Miss. Those who think "keeping batch" is a happy experience are doubtless basing their opinion upon theory and not practice.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from Miss Anna Pharr Turner to attend the graduating exercises of the summer Senior Class of the Shreveport High School, Thursday evening, Aug. 14, of which she is a member. Miss Turner is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Turner.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, our pastor at Starkville, Miss., has recently published a pamphlet, "Unification—An Analysis of the Vote of the General Conference, Chattanooga, Tenn.," in which he produces a strong argument in favor of the adoption by the Annual Conferences of the pending Plan of Unification.

The laymen and pastors of the New Orleans District assembled at the Epworth Methodist Church on Tuesday evening of this week at 6 o'clock to enjoy supper together and to listen to several addresses concerning the work of the laymen in the church. The principal address was delivered by Prof. J. F. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities.

We take these interesting items from the report of Rev. John C. Chambers, Mississippi Conference Sunday School Secretary, for the quarter ending July 31: Sunday schools visited, 36; workers' conferences held, 37; speeches, addresses, and sermons delivered, 254; traveled by railroad, 2884 miles, otherwise, 3344, a total of 6228. Evidently Brother Chambers is a busy man.

Burt D. Farnsworth, whose name is familiar both to the clergy and the laity through his pamphlet, "The Christian Appeal," has been added to the faculty of the International Y. M. C. A. College at Springfield, Mass., as supervisor of students who are training to become general secretairies or executives in social or religious work, especially in the service of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Some idea of the development of our work in the French section of Louisiana may be had from the fact that a Standard Training School is to be held at Houma, Aug. 24-29. Houma is a beautiful and interesting little city, the site of the MacDonnell Wesley House, with an up-to-date Methodist church, and altogether a delightful place to visit. We almost envy those whose privilege it will be to attend that Training School.

No presiding elder of the Mississippi or the North Mississippi Conference will overlook, of course, the important notice of Bishop Ainsworth, found on page 5 of this issue, to the effect that he wishes to meet the presiding elders of the two Conferences on Friday, Sept. 26—those of the Mississippi Conference at Jackson at 8:30 a.m., and those of the North Mississippi Conference at Durant at 3:30 p.m.

In reply to a letter written him by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Mr. John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate, wrote: "I have no hesitation in assuring you that it will be my studious effort to enforce not part of the law, but all of the law, including the Eighteenth Amendment and any statutes passed in furtherance of the same." This letter is a positive statement of Mr. Davis' position on the prohibition question.

The Joint Commission on Church and Sunday School Architecture of our church has just issued two pamphlets, "Architectural Requirements for Church and Sunday School Buildings," which should be read carefully by all committees charged with the responsibility of erecting new buildings. One of the pamphlets deals with "Type A" buildings, the other with "Type B" buildings. They may be had free of charge by addressing a request to the Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky., or to the General Sunday School Board, Nashville, Tenn.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., sailed on Aug. 6 to fill engagements in Norway, Sweeden, Finland, Latvia, and Denmark in the interest of the World League Against Alcoholism. Following these engagements, Bishop Cannon will attend the International Golden Rule Conference at Geneva, and from there he will go to Murren, Switzerland, to attend a conference on social and evangelical questions. After attending other meetings in Europe, he expects to reach home on Oct. 1. His address while abroad is 69 Fleet Street, London.

Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb, our pastor at West Point, Miss., was recently assisted in a great revival meeting by Rev. W. B. Hogg, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, El Paso, Tex. As a result of the meeting, 47 members were received into the church on Sunday morning on profession of faith, including an entire family of father, mother, and five children. Brother Lipscomb says: "Hogg is the most gifted and gracious evangelist I have ever labored with, and the revival at West Point is the best in my ministry. Worldliness was ousted. Congregations immense from all around. Official board unanimously invite him back next year." Brother Lipscomb's note was written from St. Vincent Hospital, Birmingham, Ala., where he was recuperating from an operation performed a few days before.

We learn from the El Paso (Tex.) Herald that Rev. W. B. Hogg, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church, that city, and Rev. S. J. T. Williams, assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church, have formed an evangelistic party to be known as the William B. Hogg Evangelistic Party. Brother Hogg's ability as a preacher and effective evangelist is too well known in this part of the church to need comment; Mr. Williams is spoken of by the press as a most efficient religious worker, with wide experience in various fields. In leaving the pastorate to enter the evangelistic field, Brother Hogg gives up a salary of $7,000 a year. The first meeting of the party will be at Las Cruces, N. Mexico, beginning the last Sunday in September, in which the Methodist, the Baptist, the Presbyterian, and the Christian churches will unite. In the editor's humble opinion, there is no more powerful preacher on the American continent than William B. Hogg.

IMPORTANT CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Dr. Briscoe Carter, Centenary Secretary-Treasurer of the Louisiana Conference, requests us to announce that his address has been changed from Bunkie, La., to 1738 Thornton Court, Alexandria, La. Let all local Centenary treasurers, as well as other correspondents, take due notice of this change of address and govern themselves accordingly.

THE CASE OF THE ABSENTEE CHURCH MEMBER.

By Dr. R. L. Russell.

(Recently the writer was asked to give an address on the above topic before a group representing the Evangelistic Committee of the thirty denominations co-operating in the Federal Council of Churches in America. This article is the substance of what was said and was requested for publication in the church press of all the denominations represented. With reluctance I consented to this request and send it forth with the hope that it may accomplish the purpose desired of these good brethren.)

There are many facts which should encourage the Protestant churches in America to believe that a bright day is just ahead of them, and yet recent surveys of one denomination reveal some disheartening facts.

Out of 7,000 pastors in this particular denomination and 19,000 churches, there were a few less than 300 pastors, representing possibly 1,000 churches, who did not report a single addition to the membership on profession of faith. Some of these were churches with a membership of from 500 to 600.

The survey of some 800 village and rural churches in this same denomination revealed the fact that nearly 65% of the membership of these churches was inactive, which accounts for the fact that many churches are reporting no increase in membership from year to year. It was further found that only about 20% of these churches were making any perceptible growth from year to year, while 10% of them were closed. The others were losing from year to year or standing still in their membership roll.

In one presidlng elder's district a survey showed that there were 63,000 white people above ten years of age living within that district. There were 263 churches for the white people, 102 of them being Methodist churches. Estimated figures for the district will show that about 58,000 of the 63,000 absent themselves from the preaching services every Sunday in the year. There should be a campaign in every local church to reinterest the absentee member.

What is true of this denomination may be said to be true of practically every Protestant denomination in the country. It is manifestly true that the cause of our lack of more rapid progress in making Christians of the American people is the inactivity of so many of our members.

There is no hurden greater to the average pastor than that burden which the absentee member leaves upon his heart. He is a weight to the progress of the church, a hindrance to its program, and should be dealt with in the early stages of his inactivity because of the above reasons and for his own sake. It is well to consider his case in this conference.

The gospel of conservation is a very necessary gospel in spiritual as well as physical things. We could well afford to preach and practice no other gospel for a considerable time, at least preach it until the inactive member becomes an active member, or until those who are asleep in the church are awake; or until the absentee is present. Then the unconverted man will more quickly believe and accept our gospel.

Let us make a few inquiries as to why the absentee member has become an absentee. Who hindered him? Why is he not in his place in the church meetings?

1. The manner of reception into church membership at the hands of many pastors. No preparation is made for this great step and the reception ceremony is often given in a very desultory and perfunctory way that makes no impression on the member coming into the church of the importance of the step he is taking. This reception into church membership should be so well prepared for, so impressive and thoroughgoing, that it would he a day never to be forgotten. The wise pastor will make wise plans for it.

2. Neglect. Too often the new church member is simply presented to the congregation, his name enrolled along with the other members, and then forgotten. The pastor assigns him no particular work; the members of the church do not find their way to his home and fellowship, and he finds himself in an allen atmosphere with no sympathy in the time of his heart hunger and temptation, so he seeks fellowship among those who show a friendly feeling toward him. It is to bo feared that the church of the present day may he driving many of its members into the camp of the enemy through sheer neglect. Can we escape if we neglect the neglectful?

3. The pull of the world slackens the grip of the church. "The call of the wild" drives out the call of the good, and at the very time the new convert and new member feels he needs the influence of his church brethren he does not have it. The world offers its hand of help and ho becomes an absent man from the houso of God and place of worship.

4. Another reason why many people absent themselves from the church is the unattractiveness of much of our worship. The hungry heart finds no satisfaction for its hunger; the mourning spirit finds no joy for its grief; and the tempest-tossed soul seldom finds a peace and calm in which it can launch its little bark with safety and security.

Perhaps we Protestant ministers preach to our people too much. Why not mako the Sunday evening meetings largely of a social nature—allowing the people themselves a large place on the program—the pastor closing the service with a fifteen minutes evangelistic appeal? The Wednesday evening "prayer meeting" should, in most cases, be merged into a "church night" program. It is larger and better than the old plan.

These are only some of the reasons why we have absentee church members. There may bo some legitimate reasons—sickness, old age, and other handicaps may prevent some pious persons from attending the services of worship. Poverty may be an excuse for others, and thus many really good souls are lost to the church and the Kingdom through no fault of their own.

The great unworked asset of Christendom is the local church. It should be the great bulwark of Christendom. It should be the beehive of activity and the center of attraction; the source of supplies. Upon its ramparts the soldiers of Christ should stand, and through its organizations we should launch a campaign of world-wide evangelism that shall in our day bring the knowledge of Christ to the whole world.

We spend much time and care and money on conferences when the prophets of God may get together and discuss great and important questions, and not enough time on the individual church member down in the local congregation. He needs to be set to work if he is going to be saved. The gospel of salvation means more than to save a man's soul; it means to save his life! When one joins the church he has made but the first step toward the heavenly world. The rest of the journey may be a long one and fraught with many dangers. Temptations will lie along the path like lions to devour him. But he has joined the church not to he served, but to serve. He has joined the church to save his soul by helping to save others. So, I raise the second important question—How can tho absentee church member be handled? He is our great burden. Without him we fight against great odds and handicaps. We may handle him in two ways:

I. Induce Him to Return to the Fold of the Good Shepherd.

He is the sheep who has heard the voice of the shepherd and known the safety and security of the Good Shepherd's fold, but he has absented himself so long from this security that he no longer feels the need of it. He might he induced to return by the proper care and oversight. Tho pastor should know him and his needs, and should in every way undertake to cultivate him in the interest of the Kingdom and for his own soul's sake.

1. Through experience we have found it a good idea to connect the absentee member with some other member who is keenly alive to the importance of the church and the spiritual welfare of the people, who will take personal concern of the absentee brother and induce him to take up again the program of the church.

2. It has been found well in modern pastorates to organize the parish of the preacher on the "unit plan." By the unit plan the parish is divided into certain sections with every member of the church in that section a member of this unit, and under the care of a unit committee. The absentee members should by no means be forgotten in this unit organization.

3. The church should take any amount of time or go to any extra effort to save itself from the burden which the absentee member places upon it. Too often we have considered him as worthless and useless, and have cut loose from him and given ourselves no concern on his behalf.

4. The church should be ever watchful lest any of the weaker Christians should stumble and fall by the wayside. Opportunities should be sought or made to make it easy for such to return to the line of service and take upon themselves again the vows of an aggressive Christian life.

II. Or we may handle the absentee church member by letting him drift, disregarding any claims he may have upon us, cutting him loose from our influence and organizations, thereby losing our opportunity of making a valuable member and a great influence in the Kingdom of God.

One of these ways is open to us. The wise pastor and active church member will choose the former way to make the absentee member the present and active member.

What Shall be Done With the Non-Resident Member?

Shall he be continued on our rolls? If so, what shall we mean to him or he mean to us?

The non-resident member ought to be advised to move his membership with him to his new home, and encouraged to identify himself with the people of God in his new location. In fact, this advice should be given before he changes his residence. If not possible then, he should be counseled to do so by a friendly communication from the pastor or some good member of the church, and the pastor of the new church should be advised as to the time of his removal and his present location, with the hope that the new pastor may do something to get him to identify himself with the church in the new location.

The church is of little value to the non-resident member, even when the church keeps in close contact with him, and if this contact is lost, it is practically of no value. To save the average non-resident member to the Kingdom of God, he should become a resident member of the church in whose parish he lives.

Dropping a member's name from the roll should be the last thing done for the individual by the local church. It is with great effort and time and a sacrifice of money that we win a man for the church and Kingdom, and wo should spend all the time, money and effort necessary to save him to the Kingdom; but when he has made up his mind definitely to absent himself from the church, and has proved hy his life that he no longer cares to connect himself with the church, then after we have spent all efforts possible to save him to the church and cannot do it, then, and only then should we drop his name from the roll of the church, and no one should be dropped from the roll of membership of the church except by that body of the church authorized to do this. Certainly no pastor should assume such authority.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

MRS. MAMIE A. SIMPSON.

Mrs. Mamie A. Simpson, wife of J. D. Simpson, fell on sleep at Shaw, Miss., June 8, 1924. Mrs. Simpson was the daughter of Leroy and Susan Kid. She was born at old Jonesborough, now Chalybeate, Tippah County, Miss., Aug. 11, 1873. In early girlhood she knew Christ as her personal Saviour, joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, lived a consistent Christian life therein until 1897, when she joined the Methodist Church with her preacher-husband, to whom she was married March 4, 1890. Changing her church relation did not change the fine Christian spirit of this splendid woman. In her heart reigned the law of kindness; in her home was found a catholic spirit born of her Lord and transmitted to her family; in her church relation was found a loyalty that knew no faltering, a devotion unchanged by time or place. The mother of twelve children, eleven of whom survive; the wife of an itinerant preacher, changing her home every four years, her courage and faith found fitting expression constantly in an orderliness seldom disturbed, in children whose training was such as to provoke constant expressions of wonderment among her friends, in an amount of definite church work that put to shame many of us who give our whole time thereto.

Her home was always inviting. To be a guest there was an honor not to be despised. Her gracious hospitality knew no nervousness, contained no apology. She presided over all the affairs thereof with an ease and confidence that pervaded like a breath of spring in a desert land. Her voice was seldom raised above the polite conversational. Her pleasant smile seemed a stranger to ills of all kinds. I doubt if any member of her family ever discovered all the bounds of her patience or the depths of her love. She so favored her Lord that the kinship was noted by the most indifferent observer. Her character was contagious. Its ruggedness contained the essence of simplicity, the beauty of holiness heralded like the dawn, the grip of a baby's hand. I have not known a finer womanhood, a more beautiful life, a more striking simplicity, a wiser mother or a more faithful wife. Not only her children, but her friends "rise up and call her blessed." She died as she had lived. Her Lord will not forsake those she loved and served. Peace abides.

FROM OIL CITY, LA.

The "drouth" has about got the Oil City pasture's "goat." About all a fellow can do now is get up from one hot place and go to another—like the unclean spirit that "went about in dry places seeking rest and finding none." Good thing that fellow didn't have a Conference course to get up.

Well, a fellow is usually expected to have a little something "extra" when he writes to the Advocate, but I don't know if my material will be classed that way or not. We "little fellows," who hardly ever get into the papers except to make a "report," are not bothered with such troubles as men are whose manuscripts the cruel editors tamper with; and yet we do have our worries, especially when we begin to wonder whether the great reading public has time, or cares, to read about our little items of news. Yes, they do care; and that's why we are encouraged.

Our third quarterly conference was held Sunday night by Dr. R. H. Wynn, who also preached a very fine sermon on "John the Baptist." All of our people enjoy Dr. Wynn's sermons. His coming is always "a thing of joy."

Rev. H. T. Young, of De Ridder, held our annual revival in the month of June. His preaching was of the kind that abides. His son Harold played the trombone, to the delight of all. Brother Young and his boy were entertained in the home of the pastor, and you may believe it or not, we had some jolly times. The Lord was with us. Brother Young is a "terror" to the "jazz" crowd, and the "pro-dipping vat" crowd. Our church members were wonderfully uplifted. We are still reaping the benefits.

The writer has just returned from conducting a union revival in Texas for the Presbyterians and Methodists. We had a great time. The meeting was held in the Presbyterian church. They had no "altar," and our first act after arriving was to call for a "mourner's bench" to be erected. Grown young men asked what it was for. They soon found out by practical demonstration. The old-time shouting in this meeting was great. The last night was wonderful. Unconverted young men went to each other and came in pairs to the altar, and were saved. One very prominent Baptist layman went out and got his children and brought them to the altar and saw them gloriously saved.

Well, back to Oil City. It will be of interest to some of the former pastors of this "den" to know that slot machines were removed from the stores last year, that the "redlight district," consisting of about seven houses, has been closed, and the moral tone of our town is much improved, although there is much to be done yet.

The pastor goes to Trees City once a month this year, and the work there is moving on nicely. We hope to have our revival there in September.

We are looking toward Annual Conference, and hope to have a good report. Our people have paid something near $1,000 on the church debt at this place, and the balance is easily provided for through our church extension loan fund. The writer has many friends in Louisiana, where the Lord blessed us in revival work, and he would be glad to hear from them any time.

Fraternally,

UNIFICATION? LET THE MEMBERSHIP DECIDE.

Dear Dr. Carley: It occurs to me that the proper way, and the most satisfactory way, to decide the unification proposition won't be to have the intelligent membership of every church in each Annual Conference take a vote on the question. Brother W. S. Holmes, in his letter to the Advocate of July 4, says, "Give them the privilege of making their own decisions, they are likely to do so," etc. Now what this paragraph states is just what I wish to say. If we think only a moment, we know full well that our membership rarely, if ever, have the privilege of voting any important question by vote. We who usually "run" the church, are a self elected few—often a very few in each church, and our quarterly conferences are usually attended by only a few; they usually elect themselves as delegates to the district conference; of these only a few attend the district conference and this few elect a part of themselves as delegates to the Annual Conference; and of this few, say from three to seven from each district, are about all that attend the Annual Conference. These are called a representation; this means one vote to represent, say 10,000 members of our church. Maybe they represent us, and maybe they don't—who knows?

I am confident the great majority of our church membership will agree with me when I ask for the privilege of a membership vote.

Let us decide it.

Sincerely,
H. C. LIPSCOMB.

FROM COTTON VALLEY, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Just a few lines to let you know our work is progressing nicely. We have received fifty members, and have three other meetings yet on the circuit.

Rev. Dan E. Kelly, of Mississippi, held our meeting at Cotton Valley, and it is of this meeting I want to say a few words.

Brother Kelly preaches the Gospel of Christ, and believes it is the power of God unto salvation. He believes this so strongly that he has no set forms or plans for his campaign, but relies wholly upon the Holy Spirit to lead him. For this reason the work he does is a lasting one, living on and on forever. We were unable to have a prayer meeting in either the Methodist or the Baptist church before the meeting. We now have a good union prayer meeting, with an attendance of about one hundred and twenty-five. On one Wednesday night the prayer meeting is held in the Methodist church, the following week at the Baptist church.

We were in the midst of an oil boom here at Cotton Valley, and the people were so dazzled over the prospects you could hardly get them out to church. The attendance has been much better, and the whole town shows the effect of the influence of the revival.

D. F. ANDERS, P. E.

FROM FULTON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Just a word of praise for the Grenada College girls who are teaching the training classes this summer. We had Miss Hazel Holley with us here last week, teaching "The Pupil." There were fourteen enrolled in the class, but not all were permitted to attend every day, so only ten received credit. Miss Holley is an excellent teacher. It is an inspiration to sit in her class. Her work in our midst was worth much to our Sunday school. We think the Sunday School Board is doing a good work in sending these consecrated young ladies to teach these classes.

Things are moving along well with us on the whole Fulton circuit. We are in the midst of our revivals. Last Friday night we closed out at Van Buren, where the pastor did the preaching. The Lord was with us and we had ten professions and besides received two members by letter. More than seventy-five people reconsecrated their lives. The Sunday school at that church, as recently reorganized and rejuvenated by Brother Gladney, is now meeting every Sunday with an attendance of more than fifty. We plan to report "level columns" this fall.

Yours cordially,

A. Y. BROWN.

GREAT MEETING AT GOLDEN, MISS.

There has just closed at Golden, Miss., one of the greatest revivals that have ever been held there. We began July 20 and continued for eleven days. We had with us in this meeting Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Columbus, Miss., general evangelist, to do the preaching. Brother McIntosh preached with great power, and many were converted and lined up for God. We had about 90 conversions, with 47 additions to the Methodist church and 14 to the Baptist church, making in all 61 who joined the two churches. I feel sure that there will be several others who will join yet. This revival stirred the entire town, and men and women came to the altar and were converted in the old-time way. Brother McIntosh is safe and sane and will be a blessing to any church and town that has him.

Sister McIntosh was with us and held quite a number of services for the children and young people. She rendered very fine service and did very effective work in the altar and going after the unsaved and inviting them to Christ. Brother and Sister McIntosh are very fine workers whom the Lord wonderfully blesses, and I commend them unreservedly.

The song service was under the direction of Mr. E. S. Homan, of Millport, Ala. Brother Homan did us very effective work, and his singing added very much to the success of the meeting. E. S. Homan is a consecrated Christian gentleman, and will do good work for any one.

Our people are happier, our town is better, and the atmosphere is different since this great revival. Many who had never been known to show any interest in souls were touched, and are different from what they were. This meeting was a great blessing to our town, and we pray that God may send the same corps of workers back to us again.

We will begin our meeting here at Belmont, Miss., Friday night, Aug. 8. We are to have with us here Rev. A. J. Notestine, of Birmingham, Ala., general evangelist, who will do the preaching and direct the singing. We have never met Brother Notestine, but he comes highly recommended, and the fact that he is sent out by the church is sufficient for us. We are praying that God will give us another great victory here.

C. WESLEY BALEY, Pastor.

A LAYMAN ON UNIFICATION.

In the discussion of unification, it seems to me that the church is being taken "off its feet" by Christian "sentiment" on the one hand and worldly ambition on the other, and these two factors may overcome the sound judgment of what seems to be the minority. The history of all churches is positive evidence that separation is better than internal differences. The monopoly of Christianity was tried by the Roman church and proved a failure. The Reformation in Europe, the migration to America of the Pilgrims, Huguenots, etc., was all that saved Christianity from "too much unification."

The Wesleys' withdrawal from the Established Church of England, the division in the Presbyterian Church, the division in the Baptist Church (Missionary and Primitive), and last but not least, the separation of the Methodists in America, all prove by their phenomenal growth that the universal church of Jesus Christ is too broad for any man-made creed; and whenever a church grows to the extent that its doctrines become irksome to a large body of its adherents, separation is progress, and advances the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. No one who has read the past history of the church will question this. Then why turn back to consolidation, unification and the medieval ages? Let us go forward, not backward.

A second reason: Whenever the two Methodist churches have "brushed elbows," there have been ill-feelings engendered. Bishop Candler's home town of Atlanta is a fair sample. If we cannot live neighbors without friction, how can we hope to dwell in the same house in peace? The cause of the original separation still exists. The Negro looms up "in the woodpile" as big as ever.

Both churches are now doing the greatest work they have ever done. Let us not retard the work by any reactionary steps.

W. HEMINGWAY, SR., Layman.

FROM KILMICHAEL, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed a revival meeting at Kilmichael, Miss., which was an abundant success. Our congregations grew from the first service until the last. The last few services, there were more than a hundred who could not be seated in our church building. There were 27 additions to our church, and a number of our people professed new interest in the church and a determination to work more diligently. We have every reason to expect that we will be able to make an excellent report at Conference. Our people have expressed great admiration for Rev. J. M. Alford, Texas Avenue Church, Shreveport, La., who did the preaching.

R. T. HOLLINGSWORTH, P. C.

FROM MANTACHIE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed one of the greatest revival meetings ever held in our church at Mantachie.

The services were begun on the night of July 21, and closed with the night service of the 30th, running nine days.

The preaching was done by our pastor at Ripley, Brother J. A. George. He brought to us eighteen of the greatest, most uplifting, inspiring spiritual and gospel sermons ever delivered in our community. The cause of Christ was presented and held up to the people as never before. Stubborn sinners broke down and came to the altar and accepted Christ as their personal Savior. The Christians were strengthened and built up in the faith.

Brother G[illegible] is a power in the [illegible], wholly consecrated to God and lost to the things of the world. He does not [illegible] his Christ and the doctrines of Methodism. Our church has been greatly benefited by his preaching. Large audiences greeted him at every service. His messages were far beyond the ordinary.

As to the results, there were more than forty conversions, and 3 accessions to our church upon profession of faith, and 7 by certificate, 70 in all, and more to follow; 25 infants were baptized, and more than 50 persons reconsecrated their lives to God.

Our helper, Brother George, knows how to help the pastor, and does not fail to present all the different causes of our church. We commend him to all.

Under the efficient leadership of our presiding elder, Brother J. B. Randolph, the Corinth District is coming to the front.

Yours truly in Christ,

G. B. LANE, P. C.

WEAK, RUN DOWN AFTER SICKNESS

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Mrs. Dube Well and Strong

E. Hartford, Conn.—"After a severe sickness I was so weak that I could not do my housework, so my mother told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The first bottle helped me so much that I took six more bottles and felt fine. I have just given birth to a nice baby girl and am feeling strong and well. So different from the way I felt before. I am taking the Vegetable Compound right along while nursing. The baby seems to be in good health, and my friends say they see a big change for the better in me."—Mrs. EUGENE DUBE, 50 Woodbridge Street, East Hartford, Connecticut.

The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine to bring back health and strength. Many mothers have found this true, as did Mrs. Dube. Ask some of your neighbors and friends, for there are women everywhere who know by experience the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

Prof. A. C. Maddox, of the State Normal, Natchitoches, La., writes: "I shall be glad to be a member of the faculty of the Standard Training School at Amite, La., Sept. 1-5, and I shall render there the very best service of which I am capable." Prof. Maddox is a native of Arkansas, and a graduate of Hendrix College.

The other members of the faculty in the Amite Standard Training School are: Prof. D. B. Raullns, of Centenary College; Prof. Summers, of Millsaps College, and Dr. A. S. Lutz, of Shreveport.

The third session of the Baton Rouge Standard Tralning School closed Aug. 3, issuing about fifty credits. This third session was pronounced the best of the three, and a resolution was passed to hold the session of 1925 in October instead of August. Much credit for the success of the Baton Rouge School was due to the faithful work of the Educational Director, Rev. Larry Armstrong. The faculty was as follows: Bible, Dr. C. W. Crisler; Program of Christian Religion, Dean R. E. Smith; Principles of Teaching, Mrs. J. M. Henry; Primary, Mrs. R. L. Harwell.

We have held three District Standard Training Schools this year, and the presiding elder of each district has been present and has taken a course in the school. The example of these three elders, Brothers Williams, Brown, and Dodson, will be followed no doubt by the other four elders in the Louisiana Conference. It is very encouraging to have such hearty co-operation of the leaders of the seven districts in religious education. This record cannot be surpassed in any Conference in Methodism.

There will be two or three Teacher Training courses offered at the Bluff Creek camp meeting. The course on "The Principles of Teaching" will be taught by Rev. H. B. Hines, of Plaquemine, and the course on "The Sunday School" will be taught by the Conference Superintendent. Mr. J. H. Rhodes, of Zachary, has called a meeting of his sub-district at Bluff Creek Camp Grounds this Sunday, Aug. 10. This is his third group rally he has had this year.

Mr. O. H. Cline, District Superintendent of Teacher Training for the Baton Rouge District, gave an interesting report of Teacher Training in his district at the closing meeting of the Standard Training School at Baton Rouge.

NOTES FROM LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

I have heard lecturers, musicians, and enteretainers who have traveled extensively, say that Lake Junaluska is the beauty spot of the world. This is my eighth visit, and I can say that it is always new, ever wonderful. The climate, the beauty of the scenery, the fellowship with earnest, consecrated students and leaders from all sections of the church have made a large contribution to those of us who have come here from year to year. Long may Junaluska live to bless the church of our entire country.

The following people from North Mississippi will have to their credit from two to six courses when the third term closes the latter part of this month: Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Lula; Mrs. J. D. Magruder and Mrs. Allen, of Tunica; Rev. J. A. Randolph, Mrs. V. R. McDonald, and R. H. B. Gladney, of Sardis; Miss Susie Trigg, of Greenville; Misses Loy Boone and Vera Salmon, of Pontotoc; Miss Virginia Thomas, of Tupelo; Mrs. Wax, of Amory; Rev. R. G. Lord, of Coahoma, and Rev. C. A. FROM ASHLAND, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: As a young minister I want to report to you the result of the preaching of another young minister.

We have just closed a revival at Liberty, and the Lord has wonderfully blessed us. Rev. A. Y. Brown, of Fulton, Miss., did the preaching for us. He did not do any sensational preaching, but he preached the plain, simple, unvarnished God's truth, and God blessed his preaching. We had five professions, took in four members, and baptized two babies. We had about two hundred reconsecrations, and the whole community was spiritually uplifted.

Brother Brown has won a warm place in our hearts, and our lives have been made far richer and sweeter by having known him. May he continue to spread the Good News, and may God's richest blessings rest upon him.

WM. L. ROBINSON, P. C.

FROM BARHAM, LA.

Barham has not had a Methodist church a whole year yet, but has had the greatest revival in its history.

The week before the evangelist came was spent in prayer. The community was divided into sections, with captains and leaders, and group prayer meetings were held in the homes. Much interest was manifested in these group prayer meetings, the attendance increasing every night. During the week of prayer one baby was baptized.

A large tent was pitched in a central location, and for two weeks the glorious mercy of God was shown to sinners. Hardened hearts were melted, souls were made anew through the atoning blood of Christ. Faithful, earnest messages, dipped from the heart, magnified the Christian, reconsecrated the back-slidden, and moved the sinner to genuine repentance.

Rev. Dan Kelly came to us from Mississippi on June 17, and remained through July 2, and his coming was not in vain.

Brother Otis Spinks led the singing in a most satisfactory manner, and his splendid singing did much toward making the meeting a success.

When the time came to close the meeting, the interest was at such a high point and the people were so anxious for the services to continue that Brother Kelly was compelled to request them not to ask him to continue, as it was necessary that he go on to his next appointment.

It was the common saying among all the people that it was the greatest meeting Barham had ever witnessed. Crowds came from nearby towns, and every night the tent was overflowing. One hundred and sixteen joined the church—seventy-five to the Methodist and the remainder to the Baptist and the Presbyterian churches.

The services have closed, and those who worked among us have gone, but the spirit of the meeting continues in our midst. Large crowds attend the services and much interest is still manifested, and it is our earnest prayer that this may continue so.

We arrived in Barham a short time after Conference. It being a mill town and not having had a Methodist church before, we had no house or parsonage waiting for us. We were compelled to wait two months before a house was ready and properly furnished, having moved temporarily into a house about two miles from Barham. As quickly as possible a Methodist church was organized with a membership of twenty. Four years previous a Baptist church had been maintained.

We now have a membership of about ninety, with all departments working nicely.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

New Orleans Public Service,
INCORPORATED

OUR ITALIAN WORK.

By Rev. Leon Pieone, LL.B.

Our Italian work, as it stands, gives us a glimpse of the future, and our church must work out a plan to reach the many thousands of these people which are living within the bounds of our church.

On the 29th of June, we started a meeting of the Italian preachers of our church in Ensley, Ala., which was followed by a revival. It was a great blessing to that community. Nine were admitted in the church and that work is in a splendid condition, due to the fact that we have there for a preacher a man of God, who stops at nothing in order to advauce the work of the church. Just five months ago, a man was run down by a train, his leg was cut off, and the loss of blood was imperiling his life. The doctor asked the family if some one would give some of his blood to save the man; many of the relatives said they would, but when the time came, and they saw the doctor with a knife, every one backed out; the man was dying fast, so our preacher went forward and told the doctor that he was willing to give his blood; over a quart of his blood was transferred into the veins of the dying man, the man got better, and he was released from the hospital just three weeks ago.

This act has brought several people to the church, some of them very prominent in Birmingham, and the future of our church there among the Italians is very bright. Brother Cravola is the pastor of this work.

In Tampa, Fla., I know that the work is in fine shape. Brother Monteleon is in charge of San Paolo church, which has the largest membership of the Italian churches in our connection. He told me that everything is fine in his work.

Brother Frisco is in charge of Russell Mission, and I know that this young mission is flourishing under his ministry.

I am just back from a revival in Bryan, Tex. In this section we have a large colony of Sicilians, who are Italian like the rest of us, and in ten days Brother Martinelli and myself were able to stir up this colony by personal work. We spoke from corner to corner, an average of eight to ten hours daily. The result was great. Several men and women came to the church to hear the Word of God for the first time. Here we have a new church building, which was dedicated on the 27th of July, and at this point our church has a hopeful future. Brother Martinelli is a sincere Christian, has a Christian wife and fine children.

In New Orleans, La., our church is doing work among the Italians. Much is being done, but the work at this place is very hard, due to the fact that the Roman Church has the Italians so organized that it will be a good while before any good work which will amount to anything can be done. I am in charge of this work, and only myself and the Lord know how much is done for the salvation of these people.

Our people are converted easily in places where there is no priest to mislead them. They are hungry for the truth, and they like our theology. We could do much more and much better if we could have more men in the field, and often we could easily secure good men if we could have the proper support. The Board of Home Missions in Nashville is doing its very best. I think that some one from somewhere should direct support towards this work. Dr. R. L. Russell is the proper man to write to for any information; his address is Box 510, Nashville, Tenn.

I am hoping that the readers of this article will do something for our Italian work. Remember that we are here to stay, and that we have no other hope of getting the Gospel except God's people help us.

FROM FOXWORTH, MISS.

Kindly allow me to make a brief report from the Foxworth charge with reference to revivals.

On Sunday, July 6, we began our revival at Foxworth, with Rev. H. A. Wood, of Flora, Miss., doing the preaching. To say he preached well is to state it mildly. The meeting ran six days. Results: Three additions to the church, and membership built up and greatly stimulated.

On July 13, our revival was put on at Sandy Hook. Rev. J. M. Alford, of Shreveport, La., was our very efficient helper. He is an excellent preacher. Five united with the church as a result of our Sandy Hook revival. The meeting ran eight days.

Then, on July 27, the Hopewell revival was started, with Rev. A. C. Johnson, of Carriere, Miss., doing the preaching. The meeting ran through the first Sunday in August—eight days in all. The meeting or revival at Hopewell resulted in the churches being wonderfully revived, and fifteen accessions to the church on profession of faith. On Saturday before the meeting closed on Sunday, the good people of Hopewell, in company with Rev. A. C. Johnson, brought on a storm at the parsonage. They gathered a big pounding and stormed the preacher and wife with sacks of sugar, chunks of meat, flour, preserves, canned goods, until the dining-room almost groaned under the burden. A few of the Foxworth people joined in the pounding.

Our revivals have been good this year. No man ever had better help than I have had in Rev. H. A. Wood, Rev. J. M. Alford, and Rev. A. C. Johnson. They all preached with power, and God blessed the preaching of his word. To God be all the glory, both now and forever. Amen.

Yours in his name,

J. W. PRICE, P. C.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE

Has a four-year affiliated High School for its preparatory department, and four-year Standard College Courses. We have a limited number of Scholarships to be given to deserving students of limited means. These Scholarships are for either high school or college work. We have a few Scholarships for local students.

STUDENTS ARE EXPECTED TO ARRIVE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10th.

Here are some kind words about the work which Whitworth College is doing:

G. W. Huddleston, President State Board of Examiners, Jackson, Miss.: "I am very much pleased to say that the work in examination for Professional License by students of Whitworth shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your girls have submitted excellent papers—and several, very excellent. I am gratified, really proud, that our church schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it."

Miss Bertha Baur, Director of Music, Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio: "After the many excellent talents which have come to us from Whitworth College during the past ten years, I feel impelled to write to you of their superior studentship and splendid preparation not only technically but musically, which has been on a par with the best schools of this country. I congratulate you upon your splendid music department and its high standard; in each case students from Whitworth College have been able to take their places in the front rank. It is always my pleasure to indorse Whitworth College."

A VOICE FROM THE MOUNTAINS TO MY DEAR AUXILIARY OF EPWORTH.

Although I am absent in person, my thoughts wander to my Christian friends and I silently express a wish that I could give wings to the delightful cool breezes that we are enjoying and which bring us to the "land of Nod" twice daily. It certainly is exhilarating to live in a climate like this, and the scenic view of the great Appalachian chain moves us to recognize the marvelous and mysterious creation of the Almighty hand.

Is it not true that of all the sights that nature offers to the eye and mind of man, the mountains stir our deepest feelings? Their magnitude gives the impression of a power over man.

We have here, in this Sapphire country, many summer camps for boys, principally Camps Sapphire and Carolina. Boys from all the States are here, having a wonderful experience. The camps are managed by a board of directors, well disciplined, with plenty of amusement and recreation, which prevents homesickness. Two lovely Christian ladies, whose husbands are Presbyterian ministers, visit the camps daily, from our boarding house, and in a motherly way, read, talk and otherwise entertain boys. There is no sickness and every one is happy and contented.

A Trip to the Falls.

If you were to see your associate climbing the side of a mountain to get a better view of the source of a fall of water, you would readily conclude that she is approaching perfect health. We rode four miles to Glen Cannon Falls, a broad expanse of water emanating from a lofty rocky wall, and we wondered how can these things be, yet realizing that nature in all her beauty speaks to us in her own language.

How can I describe our trip to Caesar's Head and to Connestee Falls?

Eight in the party left the house at 2 p. m., traveled eighteen miles in an auto, to witness these beautiful works of nature. We first stopped at Connestee Falls and were enraptured at the grand sight from the top of the mountain. We then descended to the foot of the falls—116 feet—and our enthusiasm knew no bounds. Walls and floor of immense rock and the crystal water rushing down, filled us with pleasure and inspiration.

We left the falls and proceeded on our way to Caesar's Head. We crossed the border line between North and South Carolina. For you know this wonderful creation is in South Carolina.

Around and around shady curves we went, ascending slowly and steadily until we reached the summit, 3,000 feet above sea level. As we stood on the top, we were awestruck with the unexpected scene that attracted our attention, for we were looking down on the tops of what, before, we considered lofty mountains.

Suddenly, a sharp clap of thunder terrified us, and we witnessed a great storm sweeping across the country below us, and as we had the sun-shine, we seated ourselves on Caesar's bald face and watched the storm sweep across the country. A most wonderful experience!

We then thought we would reconnoiter a little, and to the right we found a deep cleft in the rocks, 50 feet or more. Curiosity, of course, led us around to the bottom, and we approached the opening to this uncanny looking place, and our guide told us that this place is called the "Devil's dining-room." "Enuf sed"—I did not care for any of his food, so I said, "Get thee behind me, Satan," and wended my way back to the summit.

How can any one doubt the existence of a Supreme Being, when the "firmament showeth his handiwork?"

If any one wishes a never-failing source of inspiration, pleasure and health-giving recreation, I would advise a summer at Brevard—the Sapphire country.

WOMEN, HAVE YOU REGISTERED?

These manifold activities toward conserving good and eradicating evil have led the mass of women to realize the power vested in that little weapon called the ballot and have caused many men and women to see how necessary to the success of their hopes and labors is the right of expression through the ballot box for or against candidates who represent certain issues or are pledged to certain reforms. Just men declare that lack of a vote contributed largely to the unjust laws governing women and children, and they point out as a concrete case that the Federal Bureau for the Conservation of Child Life, with a woman as chief, is only eight years old, while the National Bureau of Animal Husbandry has long been in existence and carried large appropriations.

An interesting circumstance reported by the Woman Citizen developed during the congressional investigation of the packing industries. One packer suggested that the housewives should buy corned beef; it did not matter whether they or their families liked corned beef or found it nourishing and digestible for the children, but it any way. What business have women to prefer for their families the rich and juicy rib roast or the succulent lamb chop? say the packing interests.

But the National Farmers' Council has another program to offer the country. One plank in the platform of the organization called for the passage of the Kenyon bill to regulate the packing industries; another called for the ratification of the suffrage amendment so that women of the nation might have a voice right away in legislation which regulates food.

Housewives are, or should be, intelligent buyers of food, and any home-maker would like to help decide whether the big interests are to hand them out a menu card or whether they may make their own. Suffrage and housekeeping are terribly mixed.

Woman sees in the vote a chance to make the old world new. She is an idealist in politics. She doesn't want suffrage for party aggrandizement, but for social service. Observe that casting a vote for better conditions is a form of social service, though social service is not necessarily voting.

The greatest questions before our nation to-day are moral and spiritual issues. Righteousness is the only thing that exalts a nation. Women have now the opportunity to prove their patriotism. They may dislike politics, know little about big finance, and be "simply appalled" by social conditions, but they can clearly understand that righteousness exalts and sin debases any people. The ballot is a potent expression of public sentiment. Women have it now to use; it has passed beyond the question of her right and is now her responsibility. Her part in making the nation Christian is intensified by her vital relation in the home.

This is a great day! How shall we make the nation Christian? There is but one answer—by putting the precepts of the Bible, especially the teachings of Jesus Christ, into practice in our homes. Our Christian administration of law will solve these problems. Each citizen who does fully his Christian part is a true patriot and lover of mankind.

This is truly the woman's century. Europe was for four years placarded with the sign, "Women Wanted." It came to be written on our own skyline, and women heard the call everywhere. It was her pre-war experience which gave her the ability to function so efficiently during the war. Her knitting, her surgical dressings, her millions of garments, her catering on such a colossal scale to weary and hungry soldier boy defenders, the amount of work and wise organization she achieved are still a marvel.

She has more leisure now to look at her own plans and purposes as the conserver of the ideals of the race. Being more concerned with the simple interests of humanity trade, I doubt not but that as we understand more about the causes of war and as we adopt new national ideals we shall come to rejoice that we have something more potent than our silent influence to help in making the world secure from future bloody conflicts.

Women wanted! The world cry is no less insistent because the roar of our guns is stilled and the din of our battles is hushed. Women, real women, godly women, are wanted. Look out as you respond to the call, O woman, and as you see a world of wretchedness and sin and want, where joy and beauty and holiness should dwell, be glad that you have come to the kingdom at such a time as this equipped to do battle for the great constructive forces that exalt a people and honor our God.—Exchange.

FROM JOHNS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a revival at Clear Creek church, on the Shiloh charge, with N. S. Loftus, of the Columbia district, did the preaching. He is one of the preachers whom the people pick quickly. Here are a few expressions from our people here: "He is the best preacher we have heard here. His messages are great;" "He is the most fearless preacher of righteousness we have ever heard. He does not mince the truth in the least;" "In the years when I was turning into manhood's estate, between the ages of 12 and 18, I had important period in my life my ideals are accordingly formed."—Associate Presbyterian.

To these expressions I would add another word of appreciation: Loftus has the Holy Spirit upon him, and every message he delivers is to be words from the heart, and his ideals are accordingly inspired by God. He is a consecrated man. We have engaged him for another year at this place. We have every evidence of our confidence in the ability of this preacher to voice the mind of God to us. His work will abide.

Our annual camp meeting at this church will begin on the first Sunday in August. Brother J. O. Bowman will do the preaching. We extend a cordial invitation to the public and especially to the preachers of the district and throughout the Conference to attend the services. Provision will be made to accommodate all who will come during the meeting, which will close with the evening service Sunday, Aug. 24.

Colleges and women are the principal leaders of the coming generation. AVAILABLE RESOURCES.

A business experience in the city of ——— a bank to suspend and a mercantile establishment, not because the business was bad, but because the resources of the firm are not immediately available to meet the current demands. The firm was solvent, and had assets to meet all its liabilities, but they could not be immediately realized upon. Not for the emergency there were believers who knew the secret of the knowledge of his resources, but for them the resources were not available. Many of God's children have not learned to walk by faith, and therefore have no confidence in God. They are like those of whom Paul speaks as "babes in Christ." They are not able to receive the strong meat of the gospel: their spiritual sense by reason of use, not having been exercised to discern good and evil. The resources of heaven are available for all men at all times who are in accord with God and walk in his truth. The divine exhortation is, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." The divine promise is, "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth." The experience verifying the promise is, "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles."—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

As silent as the sun-gleam in the forest,
As quiet as the shadow on the hill,
Is the shining of the Spirit in our dimness,
Is the falling of its calm upon our will.

"If ever anything has been made certain, through human experience, through the labor of men's thought, and through revelations from on high, it is certain that a spiritual and holy life, of conscious communion with our heavenly Father, is, beyond all comparison, the happiest and most blessed life. Nothing which the senses can give of pleasure, none of the higher enjoyments of literature and art, neither the happiness of discoverlug truth nor the joys of friendship, not even the sacred glow of love, can equal the blessedness of that man who has a perfect trust in God, and who walks constantly conscious of his presence and his love."

WHAT KIND OF IRON HAVE YOU BEEN TAKING?

The Newer Compound of Iron Containing Organic Iron Like the Iron in Your Blood, or Ordinary Metallic or Mineral Iron—It's Important to Know the Difference—How to Tell.

A child must have lime to make bone, but it gets organic lime from milk and not mineral lime from lime rocks. So the millions of red blood corpuscles in your blood must have iron, but nature put food iron—not mineral iron—for your blood in the hulls of grains and the peels and skins of vegetables; modern methods of cookery throw them all away, hence the alarming increase in anaemia—iron starvation of the blood, with the devitalizing weakness, nervousness and other attendant ills it brings. You should either go back to nature or take the newer form of food iron to make up for the great loss and maintain your health and manhood. The iron that people usually take is mineral or metallic iron and is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. The newer form of iron is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in the hulls of grains and peels of vegetables. It is so prepared that it is ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by your blood, while some physicians claim mineral iron is not absorbed at all. This newer form of iron may be had from your druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron. It costs much more to make Nuxated Iron than it does to make mineral or metallic iron. But when your health is at stake get the best. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. For sale by all druggists.

FROM ARCADIA, LA.

Dear Advocate: Permit a brief report from Arcadia. Fifty members have been received this year. Everything moves harmoniously. The Sunday school is much better in attendance than a year ago—organization much better. We put graded literature in the school about fifteen months ago. We now have a departmental Sunday school with five superintendents working toward an A1 school.

We have three Leagues, against none eighteen months ago. They are doing good work.

Our church plant is sufficient for growth without being crowded. We owe only $15,000, which will be further reduced this fall. We have put in three new pianos, two of them fully paid for. Nice chairs and other furniture have been placed.

The pastor's salary is paid each month in advance. He was given a trip to General Conference and one to Junaluska, with all expenses paid.

Congregations are very good for the season of the year. Would like to have you, Dr. Carley, come up and preach for us.

MEMORIES OF LOUISIANA

By H. W. Knickerbocker, Pastor, St. John's Church, Houston, Texas.

I am in a reminiscential mood today. Memories of the long ago are trooping over me. I was converted in the basement of Carondelet Street Church with mother kneeling beside me, when I gave up sin and took Christ into my emptied heart. That fact of experience I have never doubted. It has been the pillar of my faith through all the intervening years. Above all the clanging discord I have heard the music of faith struck from the harp of life by the fingers of this experience. And to-day, I never close a sermon without making a definite and insistent appeal to men to give up sin and accept Christ.

Yes, I am thinking to-day of Nick Joyner and Henry Carre, for they also started at old Carondelet. John F. Foster and H. W. May performed the ceremony in Homer that made Ida Boring my wife, and this gave me the sweetest, bravest, brightest little wife in all the world, and she still stands at my side—no, that's a mistake—I have to run to keep up with her.

So John Foster is at Lake Providence where I spent two years. I wonder if anybody there still remembers Clarence Barrett, our baby boy who died during our residence there. His little grave may be forgotten, but it is still a widow into heaven for us.

I started as junior preacher on the Haynesville circuit, with nine appointments, and I traveled it on a little grey pony with saddlebags under me. I received $248.20 for my year's work, and I saved $50 of it and invested in books at Conference. I closed my ministry in Louisiana at Louisiana Ave. Church in New Orleans. The files of the Advocate will show some of my articles, and also that I was its Epworth League editor, with a weekly column therein. I am now pastor of St. John's Church, Houston, Texas, and my face is still toward Christ and the morning. God bless everybody in the Old Louisiana Conference.

A NOTE FROM REV. J. M. ALFORD.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am just back home from assisting in three revival meetings: W. W. Perry at Many, La., J. W. Price at Sandy Hook, Miss., and R. T. Hollingsworth at Kilmichael, Miss. These were three splendid revival meetings, the last one being the best so far as visible results are concerned. Twenty-six were received into the Methodist Church at Kilmichael the last night of the meeting, and several united at the other two meetings. All three of these pastors I have helped are in favor with their people and are bringing things to pass. It was a real pleasure to be with these brethren. I will be with Brother Bolte, the pastor at Simmsboro, La., in a meeting next week.

And so the prayer-ground is the common ground of racial enrichment.—J. H. Jowett.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE LOYALTIES OF LIFE.

We may criticise men for their weaknesses, but we should remember them for their virtues. The good men do should not be interred with their bones. Real character is determined, not by the incidentals of life, but by the loyalties of life. There are four great loyalties.

The first great loyalty is that to family and loved ones. It is not a loyalty that has to be proclaimed from the housetops; it is a poor man indeed who has to keep on telling the world that he loves his father and mother, his wife and children. Too loud protestation too often means the absence of the thing professed. Loyalty most truly expresses itself in act and not in word. The man who is not loyal to family and loved ones is a traitor of the deepest dye.

The second great loyalty is that to friends. "Friend" is one of the strongest words ever framed by human lips. The word itself is not to be used lightly—and the fact it represents is one of the most sacred in life. Friendship has its roots deep down in the recesses of the soul. It is not a thing of quick growth; when mature, it is as magnificent as an oak a thousand years old. The man who is not loyal to his friends is incapable of realizing what life can really be.

The third great loyalty is that to work. Men live by work, as much as they dislike to think so. The true man lives to work—he does not work to live. The pathetic figures are not the overworked, but the underworked; and the most pathetic of all is the one that does not work at all. The true measure of success is not less work, but more work. Work may not always be pleasant, but it is always profitable. Work is wealth. The man who is not loyal to his work is a poor man indeed.

The fourth great loyalty is that to God. It is the supreme loyalty. God himself is the supreme fact in the universe, and loyalty to him is the supreme achievement of life. All other loyalties may be present, but if this is lacking, there is a great void in the heart. This loyalty, like that to family and loved ones, is not attested so much by words as it is by acts. There even be some who say "Lord, Lord," whom the Lord does not know. Abraham was loyal to God—and he came to be called the friend of God. What a reward for loyalty!

NEGLECTED OPPORTUNITIES.

We recently heard Mr. W. H. Sullivan, of Bogalusa, La., who has had a large part in the development of the great lumber and paper manufacturing industries of that place, say to a high school graduating class that Louisiana furnishes magnificent opportunities to a young man to achieve success in business if he will but turn his attention to certain lines of activity that have not as yet aroused the interest that their importance deserves. In illustration of his statement, he cited the fact that it was necessary for the owners to send abroad for competent chemists to work out processes for making paper pulp of the native woods of Washington Parish, though they much preferred to use home talent. This was only one instance he gave to prove that great opportunities lie at their very doors if the young men of to-day wish to take advantage of them.

As we listened to Mr. Sullivan's address concerning industrial opportunities especially, we were impressed with the thought also that failure in any realm of life can nearly always be attributed to the neglect of opportunities that are easily in reach of those who have eyes to see and a mind to work. Apart from moral delinquencies expressed in the word sin, the greatest curses of the age are ignorance and laziness. Too many people are not only ignorant of the possibilities that lie all about them, but they are also so lazy, physically and intellectually, that they are content to remain in a state of ignorance that foredooms them, if not to failure, at least to mediocrity. When people begin to learn and then to work, a new era of progress and achievement will have been ushered in.

DIRECT TESTIMONY.

In the August number of the American Magazine there is a very interesting article dealing with the experiences of the Pennsylvania State constabulary. The writer, detailing a conversation with one of its officers, gives the following as his testimony concerning the effectiveness of the Eighteenth Amendment: "During the past two years we have been held pretty close to the enforcement of the prohibition laws. Now, according to the things you generally read in print, you may be convinced that all America is wading deep in illicit booze; but any man who says there is as much liquor in Pennsylvania as before prohibition is plain crazy. The change in the mining country is just one instance. Before prohibition you could go into any mining town after a holiday or on Saturday night and find men lying on the streets, in the gutters, down and out. Along public highways they would collapse, just where they had dropped, until they slept it off. In some towns almost every other door was a saloon. The wives of drinking men were a forlorn lot, living in ramshackle homes, no rugs, no curtains, no shoes for them or the children. Today, with the saloon gone, you have to be introduced before you can get a drink, and that reduces consumption. In many of the homes that used to be bare, there are curtains, and the women and children wear shoes. The price of bootleg whisky in Pennsylvania has doubled in two years."

Yet people will keep on saying that prohibition does not prohibit!

"OFF IN A CORNER."

Sometimes a man feels that he has been set off in a corner, away from the current of events, unable himself to have much part in the ongoing of the world and scarcely able to keep in touch with the life about him. His feeling is one of loneliness, disappointment, and despair. It is hard for him not to feel that way—but he ought not. There are no out-of-the-way places in the work of the Kingdom of God. Every spot where a human soul dwells is, in a sense, the center of the universe. God is there and humanity is there, and all the forces that contend for mastery in the crowded areas of population are contending in that one spot. God sees in the corners as well as in the open spaces, and the man who thinks he has been lost sight of has forgot for the moment that the All-seeing Eye is upon him. When smitten with blindness, Milton faced despair; but he found this consolation: "They also serve who only stand and wait."

MOTION PICTURES AND PROHIBITION.

According to local newspapers, a motion picture film was recently completed in the city and started on its rounds, with the title, "Prohibition." A comment on the picture is to the effect that it "has gained much favorable comment at private showings, and it is said to present a powerful argument against so-called dry laws." We are not surprised that the enemies of prohibition have enlisted the aid of the screen in their opposition to the Eighteenth Amendment, but we cannot help wondering what kind of picture they can produce that will be an argument in favor of liquor. If the scandals in connection with many of the producers of films are only half true, many of them growing out of drunken orgies, it would seem that the last people in the world to undertake to depict the evils of prohibition would be these same motion picture producers. We can conceive of nothing less than a brazen assurance that would induce them to praise a thing that has brought shame and disgrace to so many of them, and that has brought the whole industry largely into disrepute. We are reminded by this effort of the screen to overthrow prohibition of the picture of the sow that was washed and then turned again to her wallowing in the mire.

"Be polite, even if others do not show the courtesy you might expect. Our actions soon reveal character."

BEGINNINGS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIAN WORK IN MISSISSIPPI.

By Henry G. Hawkins.

Christian chaplains (Roman Catholic priests) accompanied the dashing young Spaniard, Hernando De Soto, in his luckless wanderings through Mississippi in 1539. The next priest who set foot on Mississippi soil was Marquette, who, in 1673, along with Joliet, a trader, did some work, chiefly of exploration. The inspiration of their trip was partly missionary; but they probably held little communication with the Indians. They reached the conclusion that the Mississippi River emptied into the Gulf of Mexico. Marquette's health suffered from the exposures of the journey; and Joliet lost his map and record of their journey while crossing the rapids above Montreal. But Marquette's narrative of the trip was published in 1681. In 1682 Father Membre accompanied the expedition of La Salle as far south as the mouth of the Mississippi River. On the trip down, every effort was made to obtain the friendship of the various Indian tribes; and Father Membre, in his interesting narrative of the voyage, refers especially to the kindly welcome they found at a village of the "Natchie" Indians, nine miles inland.

Before 1698 the Seminary of Foreign Missions at Paris, France, had established a branch seminary in Quebec; and in the year 1698 the Bishop of Quebec sent out from this branch seminary three Catholic priests, to be the first missionaries resident in the newly discovered Southern field. One of these started a mission among a tribe of the Illinois, north of the Ohio River; the second settled among the Tensas, and later among the "Natchie" Indians; and the third, Father Anthony Davion, came still farther south, and pursued missionary labors in what is now Wilkinson County, among the Tunica tribe, planting the cross on a high rock, which was called by the French, "Roche a Davion" until 1764, when it was named "Loftus Heights" by the British, and subsequently "Fort Aadms." Davion visited Biloxi. He finally suffered the martyrdom of death by burning at Fort Adams.

Roman Catholic missionary labors were pursued for nearly a century, but, despite great individual efforts and heroism amid savage conditions, it is doubtful if many converts were made among the settlers in Mississippi, or any lasting impressions made upon the Indian tribes. When the province became a part of the United States, and the Mississippi Territory was set apart in 1798, it was without a Catholic priest. They had all returned to Spain and France.

Before the departure of the Catholic priests, the Protestants had done much missionary work, but in violation of the laws of the province. Spain, which was the most intensely Catholic country in Europe, in her government of the provinces of West Florida, which included much of Mississippi, made some effort at tolerance, in order to encourage immigration; but the Catholic Church received official sanction and encouragement. A large majority of the settlers were Protestants, and were allowed full right of private worship. Claiborne in his history says: "It was a community of Protestants under strictly Catholic tyranny in an age of intolerance. But here there was little persecution, no proscription, no civil disfunctions made, and never any interference, except in one or two instances when the preservation of public order was imperative." The successive commandants at Natchez were accomplished gentlemen, "trained to arms, fond of etiquette and pomp, but hospitable, generous and forbearing."

Congregationalist.

In 1773 Richard and Samuel Swayze, of New Jersey, bought at 20 cents per acre 19,000 acres of land, and located the tract on the Homochitto River in what later became Adams County. Samuel Swayze was a Congregationalist minister, and most of the people who came with him were of that faith. "The faithful shepherd, as soon as he had provided a shelter for his wife and children, and planted corn for their bread, gathered up his fold and organized his society, undoubtedly the first Protestant pastor and congregation in the Natchez district. Under many drawbacks, growing out of Indian depredations and discouragements after the country passed into Spanish hands, this pious teacher and his kindred met together on the Sabbath, often in the swamps and canebrakes, for divine service."

Baptist.

The second Protestant preacher in the new territory was Richard Curtis, a Baptist, who settled on Cole's Creek, near Natchez, in 1780. He is represented as a plain, honest, unsophisticated man, but zealous and uncompromising. The Spanish government threatened to send him to the Mexican mines; and, to escape that, he fled to his old home in North Carolina. William Berry was the second Baptist preacher to appear in the territory. As early as 1800 Baptist congregations were formed at or near Woodville and on Second Creek. These two, with Salem and New Providence, of Amite County, and one other, making five churches in all, met at Bethel, four and one-half miles southwest of Woodville, in August, 1806, and formed an Association, which has grown into the present Baptist State Convention of Mississippi. By 1812 there were seventeen churches and 765 members. The commodious brick structure used by the Baptist congregation of Woodville at the present time, still in good condition, is thought by some to be the oldest church building in Mississippi. Unfortunately, records on the subject are not obtainable.

Episcopal.

The Episcopalians were next to enter the territory. In 1792, while the country was under Spanish control, Rev. Adam Cloud, a Virginian, settled on St. Catherine's Creek in Adams County. Public religious worship was forbidden by the authorities; but, besides baptizing the children and burying the dead, Mr. Cloud occasionally preached, and in other ways ministered to the spiritual needs of the people. For this he was arrested and put in irons, and sent to New Orleans to be tried on a charge of heresy, or leave the territory. He chose the latter, and went to South Carolina and Georgia, where he remained twenty years. He returned in 1816; and in the year 1820 organized Christ Church at Church Hill, the first Episcopalian parish of the State. This brave pioneer was followed by Rev. James A. Fox and Rev. James Pilmore. The first Episcopalian services in Woodville were held by Rev. James A. Fox on Oct. 4, 1823; and on May 17, 1826, the four parishes of Church Hill, Port Gibson, Woodville and Natchez met in Natchez and organized the Diocese of Mississippi, Natchez being the largest parish, with 35 communicants. The Woodville congregation, under the leadership of the present rector, Rev. David E. Holt, on Oct. 4 to 7, 1923, held an interesting and inspiring centennial celebration, which received additional inspiration from the attendance of Bishops T. D. Bratton and W. M. Green, and several former rectors.

Methodist.

The work of the Methodists in the Natchez country began with the appointment by Bishop Asbury at the session of the South Carolina Conference, which met in Charleston, Jan. 1, 1799, of Tobias Gibson as presiding elder in charge of the Natchez circuit or mission. Asbury knew that the Spanish government had just been superseded by the American, and that the time was ripe for the Methodists to enter the American settlements of the Natchez country. His choice of Gibson was a wise one, except that his health failed and he died April 5, 1804. The family record of the Grindstone Bend Plantation, twelve miles from Natchez, states that on Oct. 10, 1799, Gibson performed the marriage ceremony of Jonathan Jones to Phoebe Grimes. It is supposed that Gibson preached in Wilkinson County in 1799 or 1800, because the record is that he visited all the settlements and held services during those years. It is known that the eccentric Methodist evangelist, Lorenzo Dow, in 1803, preached at Fort Adams, Pinckneyville, and at a point in Wilkinson County near Laurel Hill, La., and at Midway, near Centreville. In this same year Dow, at Kingston, Adams County, gave his watch for the lot on which the first Methodist church building of Mississippi was erected.

In October, 1804, Learner Blackman, of Kentucky, was appointed by William McKendree, president of the Western Conference, to take supervision of the work in the Mississippi territory. He arrived at Randall Gibson's near Port Gibson, Nov. 6, accompanied by Lorenzo Dow. At the session of the Western Conference held in Scott County, Ky., Oct. 2, 1805, the work, which had been hitherto only one circuit, the Natchez, was divided into three distinct circuits, Natchez, Claiborne, and Wilkinson, comprising the Mississippi District of the Western Conference. Learner Blackman was presiding elder, and Caleb W. Cloud was preacher-in-charge of the most southern circuit, Wilkinson, which "must embrace all of Wilkinson County, extending eastward to the waters of the Amite and Bogue Chitto rivers, and as far south into West Florida as the Protestant settlements could guarantee the safety of the preacher."

The Mississippi Conference was organized in 1813, and is the mother of several Conferences.

The first bishop to preside over the Mississippi Conference was Roberts. The family of W. A. Dickson, at Centreville, Miss., have in their possession the parchment signed by R. R. Roberts at Pine Ridge, M. T., Oct. 13, 1816, certifying the ordination of William Winans as elder.

June 26-30, the Methodists of Woodville, Miss., celebrated the one hundredth year since their church was erected.

Presbyterian.

Many of the emigrants to the Natchez district were Scotch-Irish, very tenacious Presbyterians.

In May, 1800, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America authorized Rev. James Hall to preach the gospel in the Natchez country.

The Synod of Carolinas (North and South) included in its bounds the territory of Alabama and Mississippi, and in October, 1800, appointed James Hall and James H. Bowman, of South Carolina, and William Montgomery, of Georgia, to evangelize in the Natchez country, provided for their support and sent them westward. They came through the wilderness on horseback. They spent from October to April (1801) in the country. They found some places for service near Black River, Bayou Pierre near the site of Port Gibson, Cole's Creek at Uniontown, Washington, Natchez, Pinckneyville and others, nine in all. From the nine, five churches were subsequently organized.

Rev. Joseph Bullen had been sent in 1799 by the New York Missionary Society to work among the Indians of North Mississippi, near Pontotoc. He was a Presbyterian, and, after four years of work among the Indians, he settled near Natchez and engaged in farming, teaching school and preaching. He was an organizer; and in 1804 he established Bethel church in Jefferson County, which was the first Presbyterian church in Mississippi, constituted in regular form. It afterwards was united with the Rodney church.

In 1804 James Smylie came from North Carolina. He was the first Presbyterian minister to settle permanently in the Mississippi teritory.

The oldest congregation in Mississippi that is still alive is at Pine Ridge, five miles from Natchez.

By 1812 there were eight churches, and in 1815 these churches, which had become a part of the Synod of Kentucky, were constituted an independent Presbytery, to be known as the Mississippi Presbytery. The first meeting of this Presbytery (with three preachers and four elders present) was held March 6, 1816, at Salem church, Pine Ridge, Adams County. In 1830 Oakland College was established by the Mississippi Presbytery, its successor being Chamberlain-Hunt Academy, at Port Gibson.

Christian.

It seems that the Christians, or Disciples, did not organize in the State until 1838, the first congregation being formed at Battle, eight miles from Jackson, followed in the same year by organizations at Utica, Columbus, and several in Wilkinson County. General William Clark, who preached at Battle once a month for many years, along with Joe E. Mathes, organized in 1841 a congregation in Jackson, which before the Civil War was one of the wealthiest in the State. Mr. Phares, in 1843, opened in Wilkinson County a college for both young men and young ladies, which flourished until the outbreak of the Civil War, sending out many useful men and women.

POPULARITY—IS IT A PROOF OF HUMAN VALUES?

By H. W. Knickerobcker, Pastor St. John's Methodist Church, Houston, Tex.

Have the real benefactors of humanity been popular? Popularity carries the crowd with you, and you with the crowd. The real leaders of humanity have sometimes been unknown, and some times hated by the people. To cap the wave of a popular movement and be carried to political or financial success, may carve your name on marble monuments, but to rebuke the crowd in favor of truth and right is to leave an epitaph which future history will register in the book of life. Woodrow Wilson, fighting for the "League of Nations," went down in popular defeat, but he will some day be found in the galaxy of stars.

"Peopled and warm is the valley,
Cold and bleak is the height,
But the nearer the stormy summit,
The nearer the stars of life."

Isaaiah said of Christ, "He was despised and rejected of men." But this statement gives only the closing and culminating aspect of his life. Christ was popular for a while. The crowds gathered around him for bread and for cures, and were lured by the dreams of a worldly kingdom to follow him in his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. They saw the Roman Eagles struck down by his power, and Jerusalem lifted to supremacy over the world. But when he told them, "My kingdom is not of this world," and told them of the cross in the distance, they "all forsook him and fled." Yet this unpopular Christ who stood alone at last is certainly the most valuable human asset in the world. His sceptre was a broken reed, his crown a twisted thorn branch, his throne a felon's cross—and these were not emblems of popularity. I wonder sometimes if the popular preachers of to-day are following Christ and living in his spirit. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," and the martyr's spirit is not dead. To stand alone with God and truth and right, is better than to have the plaudits of the multitude.

"Give the people what they want," is the slogan of the business world which has money as its aim. The merchant, newspaper, and picture show, to mention only a few of these agencies, depend upon popularity for their existence, but to give the people the truth and right, or what they ought to have, even though you go to the poorhouse, is the Christian ideal.

* * *

Popularity is not a proof of literary value. Compare the popular novel of to-day with Shakespeare and Milton—or with the philosophers from Plato to Spencer and Bergson—or with Hugo, Carlyle and Ruskin—or with Emerson, Thoreau, and Amiel—or with Wells, Chesterton, and Shaw—and the popular verdict would not indicate the true values. A published interview with Jack Dempsey would get more readers than an article by the professor of Greek at Harvard.

* * *

"Vox populi, vox dei," as a democratic political slogan sounds good, but the truth is that the voice of the majority of to-day is but the thunderous echo of the whisper of a small minority coming out of the past. And the small unpopular minority of to-day may trust the future for vindication.

* * *

Christ was unpopular. He was a disturber of the peace. His stinging denunciations were not conducive to complacency among the Jews. "Let well enough alone," which is the dictum of conservatism, finds no authority in him. He was radical. He smashed past and present apprehensions and voiced the call of the future and the ideal. Wherever this spirit of Christ is manifest in the world to-day, he is still unpopular.

* * *

Henry Clay said, "I had rather be right than President." "If the world despise, forsake thee, they have left my Savior, too." Be willing to be buried by the wave of popular disfavor, remembering that posterity will witness your glorious resurrection.

"Speak, History, who are life's victors?
Unfurl thy long annals and say:
Are they those whom the world calls the victors,
Who won the success of a day?
The marytrs who fell at Thermopolae's tryst?
Or the Persians and Xerxes?
His judges or Socrates, Pilate or Christ?"

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: Beginning at the Sea of Galilee, we traveled what is unquestionably a highroad in religious history. I have already spoken of the trip as far as Nazareth. In Nazareth we paid a visit to the places which tradition says were connected with the life of Jesus—the home where he was brought up, the carpenter shop where he worked, and the synagogue where he preached. These places are now church sites, and pew rent is rather exorbitant. The same thing is true of all the religious shrines in this part of the world. This "pay as you enter" system takes the edge off the devotion with which one naturally approaches such places; but there is still a beauty in Nazareth which one canot fail to find.

Leaving Nazareth nestling among the beautiful hills of what must be the hilliest land on earth, we passed under the frowning front of the "Mount of Precipitation"—that precipice over which they sought to cast Jesus upon the occasion of the rejection of his native city. The intensity of its frown has not been softened by the years which have passed since it offered itself for such base use.

We came into the plain of Esdraelon, the world's religious battle ground. The whole way teems with sacred recollections. On one side of "Little Hermon" were Nain and Endor, and on the other side was Shunem. Just beyond is Gilboa, where Saul, the unworthy, and Jonathan, the lamented, went to battle and to death. Lying at the foot of Gilboa is Jezreel, where was the vineyard of Naboth, and just beyond were the mountains of Gilead. Scarcely had we time to catch our breath until there was Dothan, where Joseph visited his brethren. Nain, where Jesus healed the ten lepers, the hill of Samaria, where were the palaces of Herod and Ahab; and, passing between Ebal and Gerizim, we came at noontime into the city of Shechem.

We needed to stop, not so much for lunch as to get time to think through that wonderful history which had been shouting at us from hill and plain as we journeyed from Nazareth. While we tarried in Shechem we went to the synagogue of the Samaritans, where we saw the roll of the "Samaritan Pentateuch" a writing said to be more than three thousand years old. We saw also the priesthood of the smallest religious sect on earth. The Samaritans number about 180 members now.

Lunch over, we started out again, and just outside Shechem we came upon the village of Sychar and the well of Jacob. At this well we sat in the dismal crypt of a church and in front of an altar dedicated more to mendicancy than to truth. But we thought of Him who sat upon the curb of that well, and preached to the thirsty soul of the woman who came out from the village for water. We thanked God that, although a church might hold the site, the water of life belongs to the whole world.

Passing on, we soon came to Lebonah, where the daughters of Shiloh went forth in festive dancing, and six hundred of them did not return, for the lovelorn remnant of Benjamin swept down from the hills and carried them off for wives. Well, if their faces were veiled, as so many of them are now, the most we can say for the Benjamintes is that it was a desperate gamble.

After Lebonah, we passed Ramah, the home of Samuel, and Mizpah, where Samuel rests, and just ahead we beheld old Jerusalem. But the day was far spent, and we turned into an inn just outside the "Joppa gate." Surely there is no greater stretch of road on earth than that which we have traversed to-day.

STRANGE THINGS HEARD.

Sunday, July 20, I was in and near Cincinnati, Ohio. Not being able to attend Sunday school, I did what I thought would be the next best thing, listened in by radio to the regular Sunday school service broadcasted at 9 o'clock from the Methodist Publishing House by the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The program opened with excellent music by members of several different Methodist choirs. Then followed a talk on vacations by some woman, whose name I forgot, who also made what was announced to be a prayer. Neither the talk nor the prayer bothered about Christ or religion.

Then, according to the announcer, a Dr. Craig made a talk on the Sunday school lesson. Among other things, he said: "I am not of the number who believe that Jesus Christ did not need to repent." He undertook to prove that, to identify himself with the sinner at all, Jesus had to share his repentance. For Jesus it was a sort of social, or family matter—he called it a "syndicate" affair, as I remember.

The speaker seemed not to know that both elements of repentance (1. Remorse for sin; 2. Resolute turning from sin) are superlatively individual and personal experiences. Another may compassionate the sinner in the throes of repentance, but only the sinner himself can repent. One had as well undertake to trust Christ unto salvation for another as to try to repent for him.

Touching infant baptism, the speaker said, with considerable emphasis: "To say in the marriage ceremony, 'This is an honorable estate, instituted of God,' and then to say in the baptismal service, 'For as much as all men are born in sin,' is little short of blasphemy."

So Sunday morning, July 20, 1924, I heard, according to the radio announcer, the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church officially broadcast to the world over the radio, (1) That Jesus Christ was baptized because, after some fashion, he needed to repent, and (2) That the children of regularly married people have no need for regeration.

H. M. ELLIS.

Brookhaven, Miss.

Entrance into the Siberia-Manchuria Mission would have been impossible except for the Centenary.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT NOTES.

Centenary College has had a successful summer term, and a great opening is expected in September. Dr. Sexton is a very busy man, under a heavy strain of responsibility, and should have the enthusiastic support of the Conference and prayers for physical strength and divine guidance in his great task. A recent valuable addition to the college family is Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, of New Orleans. The new Academy buildings are now under headway. Rev. D. B. Raulins has returned from his year's leave of absence in Southern Methodist University, and will resume his work in the college.

President Bratton is much encouraged with the prospects for a splendid opening of the fall session at Mansfield College. Notwithstanding the very poor crop prospects in North Louisiana, he expects the dormitory to be filled. Some important changes in the faculty are being made, and physical improvements are being put on the property.

A great district laymen's meeting was held on the Centenary College campus on the evening of Aug. 4, with an estimated attendance of one hundred and fifty men. General Secretary Morelock made a strong address. Bishop Sam R. Hay was also present and made a practical talk that greatly pleased and gripped the hearers. Mr. H. H. Bain, of Shreveport, has been appointed district lay leader by the presiding elder, in the place of Mr. J. F. Russ, who has resigned, and he has entered upon his duties with vigor. The district lay leader, both of his associates and the presiding elder attended the laymen's meeting in Alexandria. Mr. W. J. Sharp, church lay leader in Mansfield and also associate district lay leader, in co-operation with his pastor, has organized some very helpful lay activities and has made several trips with the presiding elder in the interest of rural churches. Dr. H. B. Wren, of Vivian, is also magnifying his office in the northern end of the district. He secured the attendance of a splendid delegation at the district meeting.

The third quarterly conference for Mooringsport was in the nature of a "home coming" at old Mount Zion Church, and was a very successful event.

* * *

Brother O. L. Tucker, with his own hands, has made extensive improvements on the parsonage property at Logansport. The work of this charge prospers.

* * *

On the Plain Dealing charge, Brother Cassels, of Gloster, Miss., assisted the pastor, Brother Bonnette, in a splendid meeting at Plain Dealing, which resulted in sixty-six accessions, and also a good meeting at Benton, which resulted in twenty-three accessions. The new church at Benton was dedicated by Bishop Hay on June 29. The church at Alden Bridge has been reorganized.

The Pleasant Hill charge, of which Rev. J. L. Kay is pastor, has had seven appointments during the present year. The recent application of Rev. W. E. Anding, of the Congregational Methodist Church, for membership in our local ranks, together with the coming of two congregations from this body, will make possible the organization of a new country circuit, leaving a four-appointment charge for the Pleasant Hill circuit, all convenient to the recently completed Jefferson Highway.

* * *

On the Greenwood charge, a good meeting was held at Bethany in May, resulting in seventeen accessions. The pastor, Brother Dulaney, was recently assisted in a splendid meeting in Greenwood by Brother Holmes, of Shreveport.

At the time of this writing a good meeting is in progress at Ida, in which the pastor, Brother Akin, is being assisted by Rev. T. W. St. John. There have already been thirty-two additions.

A good meeting was recently held in Hosston, on the same charge, resulting in five accessions. In this meeting the pastor was assisted by Rev. Guy M. Hicks. Brother George D. Anders, for the third year in succession, assisted in a meeting at Munnerlyn's Chapel, where there were five additions to the church.

A revival meeting will begin in Cedar Grove on Sept. 14, in which the pastor will be assisted by Rev. L. I. McCain.

* * *

A good revival meeting has just closed in Grand Cane, the final result of which has not been received at this writing. A meeting will begin at Stonewall on Aug. 17, in which the pastor, Brother Reames, will be assisted by Rev. A. L. Harper.

* * *

Rev. T. J. Holladay, pastor of Pelican charge, has this year passed through deep sorrow, and appreciates the sympathy of the brethren. Very good meetings have been held on this charge at Benson and Mitchell. There is a remarkable Epworth League at Pelican, with five Life Service volunteers.

* * *

A revival meeting will be held in October in Vivian, in which Brother Ware will be assisted by Rev. Dan Kelly, the well known evangelist.

The new Claiborne Church in Shreveport, W. F. Henderson, Jr., pastor, will observe its first anniversary on Sept. 7.

There have been approximately 900 accessions in the Shreveport churches during the present year. Dr. Goodrich preaches to overflowing congregations. John C. Allen, Jr., a young man from First Church, was recently licensed to preach. The Noel Memorial Church is carrying out a great program of Religious Education through its well organized Sunday school and its five Epworth Leagues. Rev. Ellis Smith has succeeded in securing help from the General Board of Church Extension, which makes possible the gradual liquidation of the church debt, and gives Mangum Memorial Church a great opportunity for expansion. The Texas Avenue congregation has at last agreed upon a splendid site for a new church, and hopes to proceed to build in the near future.

* * *

The board of stewards of Mansfield Church recently gave a luncheon in honor of a visit from Bishop Hay.

R. H. WYNN, P. E.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT NOTES.

August is the off month among our New Orleans churches. Many of our people are taking their vacations, and some of the pastors also, so that our work in the city is at its lowest ebb. The work of the church, however, is carried on without any suspension.

* * *

Dr. Duren, after a two months' trip abroad, is being welcomed home. Reports indicate that during his absence congregations have kept up well and the work has gone on successfully under the charge of Rev. B. C. Taylor, who has spent part of his vacation from Southern Methodist University in supplying the church at Rayne Memorial.

Rev. Martin Hebert, assisted by Rev. A. M. Serex, held a successful meeting with the pastor, Rev. E. V. Duplantis, at Berwick recently, in which the presiding elder had the privilege of holding one service. A number of accessions to the church were reported, definite reports of which will doubtless be made by those in charge.

The Morgan City congregation was in the midst of a drive for $10,000 at the time of the recent quarterly conference for the erection of a Sunday school building, which is necessary for the further progress of the church. While full returns were not in, the pastor, Rev. R. M. Brown, and his workers were hopeful of complete success.

The Houma church, after a long struggle, has put in new pews in their beautiful church, and feel that they have begun a new era in their history. The Standard Training School to be held at the Wesley House in Houma is looked forward to as a great event in the whole work in that section. It will be held Aug. 25-30, and it is hoped that a good enrollment will be secured from all the churches in that section.

Rev. F. B. Hill has returned from his vacation in Great Britain, and feels that the trip has been a great blessing. He is taking hold of the work with renewed hope and activity.

An old-time quarterly conference, with dinner on the ground, was held recently at the Fitzgerald church for the Covington circuit. A good crowd was present, representing practically every church in the charge, and the financial reports, while not full, were encouraging. Covington is a sort of suburb of New Orleans, and offers a challenge and an opportunity to our church in this district.

Rev. H. N. Harrison has started a promising work at Lacombe, some nine miles from Slidell, and hopes to build a chapel there for our people. It was the presiding elder's privilege to hold an afternoon service there in company with the pastor and Brother Bonnecarrere, a local preacher of the charge, who takes special interest in that field, assisting with the prayer meetings, etc., there.

Just as these notes are being written, we are favored with a visit from Mr. G. L. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities of our church. We were fortunate in securing him for a fine address at the First Church on Sunday, Aug. 10, at the 11 o'clock hour. The ladies of the Epworth Church provided a generous feast for the laymen's meeting on Aug. 12, at 6 p. m. Following the dinner a very effective meeting was held, in which Prof. Morelock, in address and conference, laid the work of the laymen of the church before a fine crowd of about 100 men. It is hoped that this meeting will inspire our laymen to perfect the organization in the various churches of the district.

W. WINANS DRAKE, P. E.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF DR. JNO. W. BOSWELL.

Dear Dr. Carley: I was very much grieved when I saw in the last Advocate the account of Dr. Jno. W. Boswell's death. I had the privilege of being intimately associated with Dr. Boswell during the four years I was on the Ponchatoula circuit. He, with his family, made his home in Hammond at that time, when he was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and Hammond being one of my appointments, I had the privilege of being in his home many times. We learned to love each other. Only a few months ago, when he saw the article I wrote in regard to the mortgage note of $1,000 being paid on my home, I received a most beautiful letter from him rejoicing with me in getting my home paid for. In that letter he stated: "Brother Sweeney, I learned to love you very dearly when you were our pastor at Hammond. How could I help but love you when my wife and daughter thought so much of you?"

May the good Lord comfort the loved ones who mourn his going away. I expect to meet him again on the other shore. F. N. SWEENEY.

CONFERENCE ON TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

"The Christian Home, a Vital Factor in Social Progress," was the fruitful theme for discussion at the recent conference held at Lake Junaluska, under the auspices of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The conference was attended by a group of earnest and devout men and women from all over the Southern Church, bent upon seeking and, if possible, finding ways and means of service to the world around them in the name of Jesus Christ their Lord.

Their studies gathered around the Christian home. They studied the foundations of the home and the causes that, alas! too frequently make for its disintegration. They studied the enemies of the home and how to combat them. They studied labor, leisure, toil and recreation, and the subtle relations of sex in relation to the purity and permanence of the home. They studied the relation of the white home to the colored home. They have come to see that the race question is a home question, a blood question.

The problem is not social or political, but racial and moral: how to maintain the integrity of the two races, living together, in the same land, and prevent the mingling of the streams of blood, either by lawful marriage or unlawful cohabitation. Our cities have never sensed the real problem that confronts the South. And we ourselves have but faintly understood it.

The list of conference speakers included: Rev. M. T. Haw, D.D., of Columbia, Mo., pastor of the University Church; Rev. J. T. Mastin, D.D., Richmond, Va., Secretary Board of Public Welfare of Virginia; Dr. Scott McBride, National Superintendent, Anti-Saloon League of America; Bishop James Cannon, Jr.; Rev. Virgil V. Johnson, of the Social Hygiene Association of America; Professor John Bradford, of the Playground Association; Will W. Alexander, of the Inter-racial Commission; Dr. Paul Bond, Secretary Inter-racial Commission of Kentucky; Dr. G. E. Haynes, Secretary Inter-racial Commission of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. Calvert, Secretary Federal Council; Dr. E. H. Cherrington, Secretary World League Against Alcoholism; Rev. W. A. Newell, D.D., presiding elder, Western North Carolina Conference; Mrs. W. A. Newell, chairman of conference in absence of Bishop Cannon, and J. H. Light, Secretary of Commission.

When the news came of the sad bereavement that befell the home of our President, the conference immediately ordered a message of love and sympathy sent to President and Mrs. Coolidge.

Declaration of Principles.

The following declaration of principles is ordered by the Commission and is recommended to all our Conference and church boards, and committees on temperance and social service as substantial bases for reports and recommendations and needed propaganda, and to our pastors as themes for appropriate and needed pulpit discourses:

Temperance.

That we carefully guard our people against the insidious assumption that with the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment our long conflict with the liquor traffic is ended.

If the liquor people had accepted the verdict of the American people, as expressed in that amendment; and the acts of Congress for its enforcement, we might be at ease and count our battle won. But the event proves that neither the Constitution nor the laws of Congress have any place in the consideration of those people.

Instead of accepting the amendment and the laws of Congress in good faith and in the spirit of loyalty to our institutions, they have pursued a policy of nullification of the Constitution and persistent disregard of law, unparalleled in our history since the original "Whiskey Rebellion" during the administration of our first President. The first picture in our National Rogues' Gallery is a composite picture of a crowd of whiskey distillers and vendors. The promptness and effectiveness with which George Washington mobilized the armed forces at his command and put down the "Rebellion" of 1794, is an excellent precedent for Calvin Coolidge in 1924.

But until some such measures are taken to suppress this still lawless institution, it is necessary for all law-abiding men and women, particularly those represented by the Anti-Saloon League and the Christian churches of America, to keep their lines intact and press the battle, until these inveterate enemies of public order and public morals surrender, or else are buried beneath the weight of the outraged and insulted moral consciousness of the American people.

Child Labor.

We approve the amendment to the Federal Constitution giving the representatives of the whole American people in Congress assembled, the authority to enact sane and reasonable legislation to protect the life and health of little children against commercialized labor in those States that have not enacted proper child labor laws for themselves.

The life and health of the future citizens of the land are matters of common concern. They are more valuable than money, and more important than any theories of States rights or exaggerated fears of Federal encroachment. When sovereign States fail or refuse to protect their own children those States have no appeal if the Federal authority step in and do it for them.

This approval goes upon the perfectly natural assumption that the National Congress, coming directly from the people, will pass no unreasonable or needlessly drastic child labor regulations.

Women In Public Toil.

When the mothers of our children, whether present or future, are compelled to take part in public toil, we insist that they be protected against unsanitary conditions, unusual hours, or invidious pay.

Men at Labor.

We protest that every man, particularly the head of a family, shall have a sufficient share in the products of his own labor to provide properly for his home and children. Underpaid labor is not only an injustice to the laborer himself, but is a menace to the home for which he is a provider.

We recognize that the finding and maintenance of that just balance is by no means simple or easy. But we are convinced that when men get together and are moved, not by the world spirit of selfishness and covetousness, but by the other-world spirit of unselfishness and fair dealing taught by Jesus Christ, the task will be by no means so difficult as it now appears.

While the preacher of the Gospel may not have either the training or data upon which to take a direct or personal hand in the adjustments between labor or capital, he certainly has the data at hand and the authority to preach it, upon which, at last, all such disputes must be settled. And he is recreant if he fails to preach with entire conviction his Gospel of mutual love, of mutual sacrifice and helpfulness. The Golden Rule is not pious cant. It is profound philosophy.

Uniform Marriage and Divorce.

We see more clearly from year to year, as the stimuli and the facilities for thoughtless marriage and easy divorce multiply, the necessity for guarding the sanctity of the American home. More uniform marriage laws and more consistent divorce regulations are needed, and the church, court, and ministry must mobilize their teaching and influence to that end.

Popular Amusements.

We recognize that social diversion or popular amusement is necessary to our people, both young and old. There is a great body of play that is morally innocuous and may be shared by our people in the "name of the Lord Jesus," a sufficient measure of it, if understood and engaged in, to occupy all the spare time and satisfy all normal demands for recreation.

We Must Learn to Discriminate.

Amusements are not wrong because they are popular. But they are very frequently popular because they are wrong.

Many of them depend for their vogue upon their appeal to, and their over stimulation of the natural appetites, such as thirst, sex, or acquisition. A friendly game of cards seldom holds men long without a money stake; and even a ladylike bout at bridge loses much of its zest when there is no prize offered.

So much the more is the moral element involved in those many forms of amusement where the appetite of sex is exploited or roused. The drama is not necessarily evil. But a cross-section of the American stage, from top to bottom, as it actually is, reveals a constant appeal to the instincts of sex—an unholy marriage between art and eroticism. So the modern dance. Not motion to music is harmful; but such physical contact of sex with sex, which is the heart of the dance, as stirs the sex emotions and breaks down the moral reserve is harmful.

In the same category, largely, is the motion picture. For the blatant exploitation of sex, under guise of recreation, the movies have probably never been excelled. Every pastor who values the morals of his young people, and every parent who values the morals of his children, ought to join in vigorous and intelligent protest. A study of the billboards and the salacious titles of the plays exhibited, will put every mother and father on guard and make every pastor an intelligent censor.

Inter-Racial Comity.

We rejoice at every indication of a better understanding between the white and colored races in our Southland. The formation of inter-racial committees in many communities, where men and women of both races can meet and confer about the interests of each, is contributing to that desirable end. The rapid decline of that hideous form of lawlessness and cowardice known as lynching is peculiarly gratifying to every lover of his kind and every true patriot the land over.

The War Nuisance.

We call upon those in authority over us to find a way or advise a method for the permanent abatement of that intolerable international nuisance, war. Men have been, through long ages, taught to magnify the pomp and glory of war. And war has thriven on that sort of fictitious glory.

To-day we find language too poor to express the growing contempt of all thinking men for that hoary fraud. We do not attempt to decide the moot question of adherence to the League of Nations. But we do affirm with all conviction that if our statesmen cannot reach a working agreement with other nations, either by blazing new trails through the wilderness, or following those already blazed, they ought, in all conscience, to get out of the way for those who can.

An International Court, to which all international disputes shall be submitted, if not for final decision, at least for final evaluation, is a prime necessity. The world at large has a stake in every war, and it has a right to know what any proposed war is about. Every taxpayer has a right to know upon what ground his resources are to be confiscated to pay the piper. Every mother has a right to know upon what pretext her son is to be led away to slaughter.

And all that, not on the ex parte say-so of the war-lords, or of the jingo press, but upon the seasoned judgment of a body of men trained to weigh and value conflicting claims.

Such a court will not need any armed or other power to enforce its decrees. It has only to find and show the justice or unrighteousness of any cause. An enlightened public, world sentiment will do the rest.

But the church of Jesus Christ has the largest stake in any war. War is a standing challenge to its foundation principles, and so long as the alleged preacher of the Gospel of Jesus Christ prances out and does a dance to the first piping of the war god, so long will the war god sneer at the preacher, and go on with his bloody business under the sign of the Cross.

To-day as never before the church has its eyes open to the utter wickedness and the utter futility of war. Henceforth an official endorsement, or use of its name, influence or facilities for the promotion of war, must be counted an act of disloyalty to Jesus Christ, his Head and his kingdom.

Preparedness for Peace.

We have long been familiar with the word "Preparedness." It has come to have a sinister

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

DON'T PUT OFF AND PILE UNDER THE THING THAT YOU SHOULD PUT ON AND PUT OVER.

To put off raising your Special Effort quota, dulls your tools for doing the job as it ought to be done. To pile this obligation under a heap of postponed duties, invites disaster for it. This movement is of such a nature that it dies an easy death unless it is promptly put on and put over.

The proof of real interest in the cause of the superannuates is the check sent to the Board of Finance for credit to the charge's quota. Hundreds of charges are proving their interest in this practical way. The following have paid one-fifth or more of their total assumed quotas:

THIS SYSTEM WILL DO THE BUSINESS.

Bland Street (Bluefield), Holston, Bluefield, Rev. J. A. Bays, pastor; total assumed quota, $11,100; amount remitted, $2,500.

Maryville, Holston, Cleveland, Rev. Freneh Wampler, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,333; amount remitted, $466.66.

Mount Sterling, Kentueky, Lexington, Rev. J. W. Crates, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,500; amount remitted, $1,325.

Lebanon, Louisville, Elizabethtown, Rev. J. B. Galloway, pastor; total assumed quota, $830; amount remitted, $206.50.

Cloverport, Louisville, Owensboro, Rev. B. F. Wilson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,267; amount remitted, $656.18.

La Grange, Kentucky, Shelbyville, Rev. J. D. Redd, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,500; amount remitted $500.

Pierce, Louisville, Columbia, Rev. Claude Squires, pastor; total assumed quota, $700; amount remitted, $140.

East Gadsden, North Alabama, Gadsden, Rev. J. P. Gilbreath, pastor; total assumed quota, $700; amount remitted, $140.

First Chureh (Dallas), North Texas, Dallas, Rev. Carl C. Gregory, pastor; total assumed quota, $10,000; amount remitted, $2,005.

Gordonsville, Tennessee, Lebanon, Rev. S. M. Keathley, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,255; amount remitted, $316.75.

Central Albemarle, Western North Carolina, Salisbury, Rev. C. M. Pickens, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,574; amount remitted, $717.70.

Princetown, Holston, Radford, Rev. E. H. Cassidy, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,200; amount remitted, $982.54.

Memorial (Durham), North Carolina, Durham, Rev. H. E. Myers, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,000; amount remitted, $1,150.35.

West End (Lynehburg), Virginia, Lynehburg, Rev. J. L. Finch, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,000; amount remitted, $600.

Martindale, West Texas, San Marcos, Rev. S. R. Horwood, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,099.50; amount remitted, $332.

Abingdon Station, Holston, Abingdon, Rev. J. R. Brown, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,575; amount remitted, $515.

Williamstown, Kentucky, Covington, Rev. F. K. Struve, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,625; amount remitted, $956.52.

Buntyn Station, Memphis, Memphis, Rev. F. H. Peeples, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,000; amount remitted, $1,719.

Ozark; North Arkansas, Fort Smith, Rev. J. B. Stevenson, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,000; amount remitted, $400.

Bandon, Northwest, Portland, Rev. J. B. Penhall, pastor; total assumed quota, $171; amount remitted, $34.50.

Central Huntington, Western Virginia, Huntington, Rev. I. N. Fannin, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,300; amount remitted, $400.00.

Taylor Street, (Newport), Kentucky, Covington, Rev. H. M. Massie, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,200; amount remitted, $240.

Winchester, Tennessee, Fayetteville, Rev. B. L. Lyle, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,500; amount remitted, $500.

Arcadia, St. Louis, Farmington, Rev. N. H. Henry, pastor; total assumed quota, $665; amount remitted, $141.

South Pittsburg, Holston, Chattanooga, Rev. R. L. Wright, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,325; amount remitted, $274.75.

Winfield, Little Rock, Little Rock, Rev. C. M. Reves, pastor; total assumed quota, $6,000; amount remitted, $1,200.

Union Avenue (Memphis), Memphis, Memphis, Rev. R. A. Clark, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,000; amount remitted, $250.

Oakland and Ocoee, Florida, Orlando, Rev. W. J. Churehwell, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,370; amount remitted, $749.25.

Court Street (Lynehburg), Virginia, Lynchburg, Rev. E. L. Bain, pastor; total assumed quota, $16,270; amount remitted, $4,800.

SEVERAL THINGS WORTH READING.

1. Several additional presiding elders now have the right to a place on the Honor List of those whose districts are 100% on the Pink Leaf Report, as follows:

226. North Arkansas, Paragould, Rev. James A. Anderson, P. E.

227. Louisiana, Alexandria, Rev. C. C. Weir, P. E.

228. North Texas, Dallas, Rev. H. D. Knickerbock, P. E.

229. Baltimore, Lewisburg, Rev. W. O. Talbert, P. E.

230. North Arkansas, Fayetteville, Rev. J. A. Womack, P. E.

231. North Georgia, Rome, Rev. W. T. Irvine, P. E.

2. All remittances on quotas must be made direct to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo. When making remittances, be sure to use the book of Treasurer's Remittance Forms which the Board sent to the charge in care of the pastor. If you have failed to receive this book, notify the Board and another will be sent to you.

3. If you want your charge credited in your Annual Conference Minutes for the amount raised on its quota the first year, the money should reach the Board of Finance before the meeting of your Annual Conference. But do not hold the money now in hand until then, send it forward at once and make final remittanee for the year just before Conference.

WHEN ONE PASTOR FAILS ALL THE PASTORS ARE HURT.

The preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are so related to the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment, that not a single preacher can fail to have his charge do its part of the work without hurting the entire 6,500 preachers of the church.

When the smallest charge fails to put on the program and raise its quota, the lack of its quota in the Endowment Fund will be a deficit in income going to the superannuated preachers of our church in all the generations. I do not see how a preacher can understand this fact clearly and not be desperately in earnest to have his charge do its part.

A number of letters have come to me stating that certain preachers do not appear to be interested in the Special Effort; that they are leaving the matter with indifferent committees, or else have not even appointed committees; and that they seem to think it is not specially important whether they succeed. Those of us who feel the urge of this cause should be diligent in making such preachers understand the drift of their negligence.

Let us keep our eyes and ears wide open at the meetings of the Annual Conferences, to discover if the Special Effort is dragging in any place. If we find that any charges are not doing their part, let those nearby these places who are deeply interested find a way and means to help them with the program. One wide-awake preacher could voluntarily get under the burden in two or three such places, and if a dozen or two live wires on the subject would show a similar passion, I am sure that every "wheel stuck in the mud" could soon be pried out and sent rolling merrily on the way to succes.

Let us not lose the vision that comes when the subject is fresh on the mind. Let us not defer doing our best when that best means a solution of the problem. Let not fleeting inspiration wiggle its tail through our fingers—squeeze it, and hold on tight! "Are you in earnest, seize this very minute; what you can do, or think you can, begin it." I believe Josh Billings was entirely right when he said: "The man who thinks he can't do it is always more than half right." Furthermore, it is not the fact that a man is a failure—it is how did he fight, and is he willing and ready to fight some more?

The Home Circle

NEVER MIND.

Whatever your work and whatever its worth,
No matter how strong or clever,
Some one will sneer if you pause to hear,
And scoff at your best endeavor.
For the target art has a broad expanse,
And wherever you chance to hit it,
Though close be your aim to the bull's-eye fame,
There are those who will never admit it.

Though the house applauds while the artist plays,
And a smiling world adores him,
Somebody is there with an ennuied air
To say that the acting bores him.
For the tower of art has a lofty spire,
With many a stair and landing,
And those who climb seem small ofttime
To the one at the bottom standing.

So work in your chosen niche,
With a steady purpose to nerve you;
Let nothing men say who pass your way
Relax your courage or swerve you.
The idle will flock by the Temple of Art
For just the pleasure of gazing;
But climb to the top and do not stop,
Though they may not all be praising.

LET THE STANDBYS DO IT.

By J. Mervin Hull.

"Marian, will you lead the young people's meeting next Sunday evening? Amy Jordan is sick and can't fill her appointment."

"Mercy, Blanche, don't ask me; let some of the standbys do it—you, or John Martin, or some of the older ones. Don't ask a beginner like me."

Blanche looked at the bright young face earnestly a moment before she spoke again.

"Yes, Marian, I am one of the 'older ones,' as far as membership in the society is concerned; I've been in the society twelve years. Sometimes I think that perhaps it would be better for the society if some of the 'standbys' should leave it, and—"

"For goodness sake, don't speak of such a thing! The society would all go to pieces."

"That's just the point, Marian; if that is true there is something wrong with the society, and it almost breaks my heart to think of such a thing, for the society has done everything for me—everything."

"Why, what do you mean, Blanche?"

"Let me tell you a bit about it, Marian. When I joined the society I was not more than a little girl, a year or two younger than you are. I was frightened at the sound of my own voice, if I thought anybody was listening. But that was the way with nearly all the members; there were only a few 'standbys' in those days. But we all realized that if anything was going to be done, we were the ones to do it. So I began to take part in the meetings by holding on to a little Testament with both hands and reading a verse. I didn't really read it, either; I couldn't see to do that; I held the book open and repeated the verse. Then I got the courage to say a few words for myself."

"What an idea, Blanche Rivers; why, I just love to hear you speak!"

"Well, that was the way I began, and every step that I took helped me to take the next one. I was even more frightened the first time I led a meeting, but everybody seemed to sympathize with me and help me, and before the hour was over I was the happiest one in the room. Then came committee work, and I soon learned to enjoy that very much, and to see how every committee in the society could be a great help to the members and to the church and to the whole world, if the opportunity was faithfully used."

"Well, I declare! I know I'm on some committee, but I've almost forgotten which."

"And then," Blanche went on, "almost before I knew it I was president of the society. I remember how it all came over me when we had an anniversary banquet, and it was my duty to preside and introduce the speaker who was going to address us. It didn't seem possible that little, timid Blanche Rivers could ever have gained the confidence to do such things, and I just bowed my head and thanked the Lord in my heart for what our society had helped me to do."

"Oh, well, Blanche, it is a gift; you have a natural talent for such things."

"Oh, no, no, no, Marian. That isn't true at all. I was one of those who didn't have much natural talent. It all came from entering the doors of service which the society opened; and you, and all the rest of the new members who have come in from the juniors need exactly the same discipline and training. Don't try to throw your responsibility off upon the older members; begin now, and grow in strength, in confidence, in helpfulness, in real joy of service every year of your life."

"Blanche, if I try to lead the meeting—I know I shall break down some way—will you stand by me, and help me? Why, I don't even know how to look up and prepare the topic, but I'll try."

"That's splendid, Marian; that's a step in the right direction. You may be sure I'll do all I can to help you, and so will the One we seek to follow and serve." There has to be a start; why not start now?—In Girls' World.

IT PAID.

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

"This is the best ice cream I've had in weeks," remarked Beatrice to Marguerite as they sat at a small table in the drug store.

Marguerite nodded.

"It certainly is, I was going to tell you the same thing."

At that moment a little old woman in a shabby suit and hat came in.

"I want to get this prescription filled," Beatrice heard her say to the clerk behind the counter.

Beatrice turned to Marguerite.

"That's Mrs. Higgins," she said in a low voice. "I feel so sorry for her, she lost her husband not long ago and he was sick so long. I wonder if that prescription is for her?"

And then she looked at Marguerite again.

"Suppose we invite her to have some ice cream with us," she whispered. "She looks so tired. I know she's old and her clothes are not stylish, but if we live we'll be old some day and perhaps we'd like to be invited to have a dish of ice cream, too."

"Perhaps we would," agreed Marguerite.

A moment later Mrs. Higgins felt a light touch on her arm.

She turned to look into the bright eyes of Beatrice, and then the invitation to join them in a dish of ice cream was issued.

A surprised look dawned on Mrs. Higgins' face.

"Why, thank you," she said, "I don't know when I've had a dish of ice cream, but "

She paused.

"Are you sure you'd like to have me?" she asked timidly.

"Very sure," smiled Beatrice, and then she took her by the arm and led her to the little table where Marguerite was waiting.

It was not long before another heaping dish of ice cream was brought to the small table and Mrs. Higgins took the first spoonful.

"I don't know why you invited me," she said as she smiled at them, "but oh, it's so nice you did. I'm very lonesome these days."

When later after the ice cream was eaten and they had walked to the door together Mrs. Higgins took a hand of each.

"Thank you so much, dears," she said. "Not many young girls would be so kind. It's made me so happy, not alone the ice cream, but that you thought of me. It may be hard for you to realize that I was a girl once, but I was, and there weren't any trials or troubles or deaths or loneliness. The world was a beautiful place and full of happiness. Oh, I was a young joyous thing those days."

Her voice broke.

"Girls like you bring back that happy time, and it does me good. Thank you again, not many would be so kind to an old shabby woman."

Beatrice and Marguerite looked after her as she walked feebly away.

There was a more thoughtful look on each young face.

"You see," said Beatrice reflectively, "it paid."

Marguerite nodded.

'It always does," she answered softly.—Kind Words.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The annual Seashore Camp Meeting, held on the Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., which came to a close last Sunday night, was, according to all accounts, one of the best meetings that have been held there in several years. Rev. L. L. Roberts, presiding elder of the Seashore District, who was directly in charge of the meeting, had widely advertised the gathering along the Coast as an "old-fashioned camp meeting," and the term seemed to appeal to the people, for the attendance was unusually good at all the services.

Four services a day were held. At 8 o'clock in the morning, Brother Roberts was in charge of the service; at 10:45 a.m. and 8 p.m., Rev. Jos. A. Smith, of Picayune, Miss., and Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Gulfport, Miss., did the preaching; at the vesper service, held on the beach at 7 p.m., Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, of Biloxi, officiated. Brother Lewis also directed the congregational singing in the tabernacle. Miss Fountain presided at the piano throughout the meeting, and Mrs. Jos. A. Smith sang a solo at each service.

It was our privilege to attend only a few services—a vesper service, two morning preaching services and one evening service; they were most inspiring and helpful, and, judging by the comments of those who were in attendance regularly, the same was true of every service. The preaching of Brother Ferguson and Brother Smith attracted and held the interest of the people from the beginning, and the remark was frequently heard that a better corps of workers had never been gathered for the camp meeting. We have not had a report of the definite results of the meeting, but we are sure that much good was accomplished.

The whole church ought to rejoice in the fact that a successful camp meeting was held this year on the historic Seashore Camp Ground; and every effort ought to be made to continue the work from year to year. Nowhere in the church—not even at Lake Junaluska or Mount Sequoyah—is there to be found a more desirable spot for the establishment, development, and maintenance of a great summer assembly that would promote all the interests of our ever-enlarging program. It ought to become a gathering place for those engaged in connectional activities as well as for those who are interested in local undertakings. It is by the seashore, while our other assembly grounds are in the mountains. A great many people want to go to the mountains in the summer, of course—but there are a great many others to whom the mountains do not appeal, who would much prefer to spend their vacation at the seaside. The Camp Ground is already the property of the church, it is already provided with the conveniences of water, gas, and electricity, it is served by a fine system of trolley and bus lines; it would require a good deal of money to make it what it ought to be, but nothing like the amount that is being expended upon the mountain resorts. The full realization of its possibilities is waiting only upon an earnest determination and vigorous effort to put into effect a comprehensive program of development.

THE MEETING OF THE SOUTHERN METHODIST PRESS ASSOCIATION.

The sixth annual meeting of the Southern Methodist Press Association, composed of the editors and publishers of the periodical literature of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held at Mount Sequoyah, Ark., August 6, 7 and 8. This association was formed several years ago for the purpose of bringing together those who are engaged in the important work of furnishing the church with its periodical literature, in order that there may be developed among them a spirit of co-operation in the service of the church.

The meeting was attended by the following: Dr. R. S. Satterfield, of the Christian Advocate, Nashville; Dr. C. O. Ransford, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate; Dr. P. E. Riley, of the Texas Christian Advocate; Dr. S. K. Cockrell, of the Baltimore Christian Advocate; Dr. A. C. Millar and Mr. J. C. Glenn, of the Arkansas Methodist; Rev. T. A. Sikes, of the North Carolina Christian Advocate; Mr. C. B. Haley, of the Methodist Quarterly Review; Rev. R. E. Noliner, of the Epworth Era; Mr. T. R. Wiggins, of the circulation department of the Publishing House at Nashville, and C. O. Chalmers, of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A very practical program had been arranged by Dr. R. S. Satterfield, the genial president of the Association, and the discussions covered three sessions during a period of two days. Important matters concerning the editorial and business management of our church periodicals came up for discussion, which afforded an interchange of ideas which were edifying and illuminating.

The brethren were delightfully entertained on the grounds of the Western Methodist Assembly on Mount Sequoyah by the Assembly Association, of which Dr. A. C. Millar is president. The grounds are under the able management of Prof. J. L. Bond, formerly Superintendent of Public Education for the State of Arkansas, who did everything possible to make the visit of the editors pleasant and profitable.

The Western Methodist Assembly is now in its second year. Mount Sequoyah is about a mile out from and overlooking the pretty town of Fayetteville, and is one of the beauty spots in the Ozark Mountains. All of the cottages and buildings are new, and the grounds are well laid out. There is a tabernacle and a large cafeteria. The Publishing House has erected a building where books are sold, and the Epworth League has under construction a commodious and well appointed two-story brick and stone building which, when completed, will be a thing of beauty.

On Wednesday evening, Aug. 6, the visitors were tendered a banquet by Rev. R. E. Noliner on behalf of the Epworth League General Board at Mrs. Leighton's Green Tree Inn, and on the following afternoon, through the courtesy of the Chamber of Commerce of Fayetteville, the editors were taken on a drive through the grounds of the State University and attended an old-fashioned barbecue at the Experimental Farm of that institution. Friday, the entire day was spent in an automobile ride through the mountains to Eureka Springs, the Chamber of Commerce having kindly arranged for the drive. The scenery on this trip was most beautiful, and many points of interest were visited, among them the Pea Ridge battle field of Civil War fame.

The officers of the Methodist Press Association are: Dr. R. S. Satterfield, president; Dr. A. W. Plyler, vice president, and Dr. J. M. Rowland, secretary-treasurer.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. Otto Porter recently assisted the pastor, Rev. C. W. Wesley, in a good meeting at Dover, Miss.

The new Methodist church at Bentonia, Miss., has just been completed. Rev. C. W. Wesley is the pastor.

The editor greatly regrets being out of the office when Rev. J. B. Cain, of Ellisville, Miss., called one day last week.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Gulfport, Miss., will assist the pastor in a meeting at Bentonia, Miss., beginning on Sunday, Aug. 24.

We learn from an exchange that Rev. J. M. Morse has been ill in a hospital in Jackson, Miss., for three weeks, but that he is improving.

Rev John W. Robertson will assist the pastor in a revival meeting at the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., in the near future.

Mrs. J. C. Sugg, of Amory, Miss., informs us that the Advocate has been in the Sugg family for over fifty years. Of course, it continues to go there.

Rev. H. C. Castles, pastor of the Seventh Avenue Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., writes: "Everything moves well on the charge—more than 30 accessions so far."

Rev. and Mrs. B. T. Crews, of Shreveport, La., are enjoying a visit to their daughter in Lexington, Ky. Brother Crews is a superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference.

Mrs. A. S. J. Neill, wife of our pastor at Mooringsport, La., has been confined to her bed with illness for two months. She will appreciate the sympathy and prayers of her friends.

Rev. F. R. Power, pastor of the Desiard charge, Louisiana Conference, recently suffered an attack of illness that involved a stay of several days in a sanitarium. We rejoice to learn that he is convalescing.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, writes: "Everything goes well on the district. The preachers are at work, and a general spirit of brotherhood prevails."

The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. H. Walter Featherstun will sympathize tenderly with them in the death of their daughter, Mrs. John Fleming, which sad event took place in a sanitarium in Greenville, Miss., on Aug. 4.

Dr. W. L. Duren, pastor of Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, this city, returned last Thursday from his trip to Europe and the Holy Land. He stood the trip well, and has entered actively upon the work of his pastorate.

Rev. J. A. Randolph, the active and efficient pastor at Sardis, Miss., is spending his vacation at Lake Junaluska. He writes to the Southern Reporter that he will return to Sardis in time to preach a Labor Day sermon, Aug. 31.

The American Bible Society has recently provided funds for securing and distributing Nestle's Greek New Testament among theological students in Germany, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, and Austria, who otherwise could not procure them.

Rev. B. C. Taylor, who filled the pulpit of Rayne Memorial during the absence of the pastor, will re-enter Southern Methodist University this fall to complete his work leading to the degrees of Bachelor of Divinity and Master of Arts.

We regret to learn that Rev. Roy Moore, of the Louisiana Conference, who has been taking summer work in Columbia University, has suffered a breakdown in health and will not be able to resume work for several months. We are sure his brethren will remember him in their prayers.

Rev. Del Longgrear, pastor of the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., was one of the preachers at the recent South Union camp meeting, held near Ackerman, Miss. This camp meeting has been holding annual sessions for fifty-two years, and there are a good many people who have attended every session.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, the faithful, loyal, and efficient Sunday School Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, was awarded the "Leadership Diploma" at the recent Sunday school assembly at Lake Junaluska. Brother Gladney will be one of the instructors in the Standard Training School to be held at the Seashore Camp Ground the first week in September.

Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, presiding elder of the Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference, has held two fine revivals this summer, one at Tyro and the other at Mineral Wells, on the Olive Branch circuit. There were nine additions to the membership of the church at Tyro, with more to follow, and fourteen additions at Mineral Wells, with more to follow. Brother Lewis, with his family, is enjoying a short vacation in Biloxi, Miss.

Rev. H. H. Smith, of Blackstone, Va., who had to retire from the pastorate last fall on account of impaired hearing, has given himself largely to writing tracts and pamphlets. Among the best known of these are: "Character Sketches of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson;" "The Methodist Steward;" "Fundamental Doctrines of Methodism." These are sold at a very small price, and those who read them cannot fail to be interested and instructed.

The attendance of preachers at the Seashore Camp Meeting was unusually good. Among those present we noted the following at various times: Dr. A. F. Watkins, Yazoo City; Rev. B. W. Lewis, Stillmore; Rev. T. H. King, Logtown; Rev. J. B. Stringer, Escatawpa; Dr. W. Winans Drake, New Orleans; Dr. I. W. Cooper, Brookhaven; Rev. J. T. Leggett, Hattiesburg; Rev. D. E. Vickers, Ocean Springs; Rev. Mr. Emerson, Birmingham. Others were probably there whose names escape us at the moment.

Mr. Robert M. Turpin, of Nashville, Tenn., paid the Advocate office a greatly appreciated call on Saturday of last week. Mr. Turpin is the son of the Brother Turpin whose name and face are familiar to all visitors to the Publishing House, and of Mrs. Maud M. Turpin, so well known as director of the Secular Press Bureau of the church. Mr. Turpin was recently graduated from the Law Department of Vanderbilt University, and he was en route to Austin, Texas, where he will enter upon the practice of his profession. We predict for him a successful career.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our pastor at Okolona, Miss., writes: "We have just closed a great revival campaign in our church. Sinners were brought to God and many people reclaimed, with hundreds pledging to life of consecrated service in the church. All denominations co-operated, business houses closed, and the attendance was the largest in the history of the little city. Fifty young people offered for life service, a son and daughter of the pastor leading the way. The preaching was done by Dr. L. J. Miller, of Nashville, one of our general evangelists. He is safe, spiritual, and powerful."

Mr. C. C. Hard, formerly physical director and acting General Secretary of the local Young Men's Christian Association, has entered the evangelistic work with the purpose of devoting himself especially to the directing of the music in evangelistic meetings and in holding children's services. Mr. Hard is at present organist and choir director of St. Mark's, this city. He has had wide experience in evangelistic work, having been associated with some of the most prominent evangelists of the present day. He is a music composer of note, practically all the music in the song book, "Songs That Are Singable," having been written by him. He has also written the words for many evangelistic hymns.

meaning. Almost invariably it means preparedness for war. Ostensibly for defense, it results, if not in open aggression, in a hasty or hysterical plunge into the needless quarrels of other nations.

The church must redeem that word. It must consecrate itself, through its courts, its ministry and its press to a nation-wide program of "preparedness for peace," just as the militarists of the land have consecrated themselves to a definite program of preparedness for war.

STATEMENT BY COLLEGE OF BISHOPS CONCERNING INCREASED SUNDAY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

We have learned with pleasure of the plans of the General Sunday School Board, the Annual Conferences co-operating, to launch a special effort for the permanent enrollment of not less than 250,000 additional Sunday school members during the months of September, October, November and December, 1924. In view of the great unreached number of people in our territory, and, furthermore, in view of the special effort which the Board is making to train a leadership capable of caring for additional members, and because of the enlarged opportunities for the evangelization of our people which will come with the reaching of a larger constituency, we believe this effort is altogether opportune and will be in the interest of the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We urge our people, particularly our presiding elders, pastors and superintendents, to enter enthusiastically into the plans being worked out by our Sunday school leaders.

Signed by John M. Moore, U. V. W. Darlington, W. B. Beauchamp, and adopted by the College of Bishops, May 20, 1924.

THE BOYS' SCHOOL OF OUR CONGO MISSION.

By Ansil Lynn.

The school of the above title was founded to meet the needs of boys who came to our mission at Wembo Nyama from outlying native villages and wanted to go to school. Later, the newer stations of Lubefu, Tunda, and Kabengele established similar schools, but those have not been as successful as the one at the oldest station.

It is the policy of the mission to provide sleeping houses for these boys, who range in age from eight to fifteen years. The houses are made of mud and poles with grass roofs. Rude sleeping tiers are provided for them, which do not look very inviting to an American, but they are much better than the average place the native has to sleep. At Wembo Nyama, food is provided for them, which usually consists of millet or rice. Men are employed to beat this millet into meal in a wooden mortar except when the director of this work has the boys do it. This is very hard physical labor and an unruly boy is often punished by assigning him so many days' beating millet. The bran is sifted out of this millet meal by a woman (few men know how to do it), who also cooks the food for the boys. A kind of greens is also provided to be eaten with their food. About every two weeks they are furnished meat in the form of a goat. At the older school each boy is given a plate and spoon. Such equipment is rare among the raw natives.

In addition to the white supervisor of this work, a native is placed over the boys. His duty is to look after them in the work they do on the compound. Several hours of manual labor are required of these boys, and, of course, this pays part of their upkeep. Perhaps the most expensive item of their upkeep is the cloth the mission furnishes them. Each boy is provided with a loin cloth, consisting of from one and three-quarters to two yards. Sometimes they are given shirtwaists also. Their supervisor is supposed to see that they do not sell their cloth to some one else, and when they leave the mission they are required to surrender the mission cloth. A further duty of this native leader is the settling of disputes arising among the boys. I think they get along just about as well as a similar number of American boys would, if not a little better.

At Wembo Nyama, school is conducted at present both in the morning and afternoon; I think only once a day on the other stations because of a shortage of workers. Some of these fellows show marked intelligence and become useful as teachers in the several grades. Often one sees a boy twelve or fourteen years old teaching grown men their letters or how to read. A number are sent out to the nearby villages in the afternoons to assist the native evangelists in their teaching. Some enter the training school for evangelists, and are later sent out to preach and teach in the surrounding communities. Others become carpenters and laborers on the mission compound. We hope through this Boys' School to train up some valuable native leaders, who can carry the Gospel and civilizing influence to their people in a winning way.

But for the Centenary many American students would have most inadequate religious advantages.

METHODIST HOME WANTED.

We desire to find a Christian home for a girl eighteen years of age, a ward of the Louisiana Child Finding and Home Society, Inc. TO WARREN EMORY HOLLOMAN.

A nobleman has gone, gone ere his prime;
His was a knightly heart, a spotless soul;
Living a life of honor was his goal;
Serving his fellow-men through all the grime
Of catastrophic war, giving his time
And brain and brawn; peace came, and then his sole
Objective was a life of love, the whole
Of self devoted to the task sublime.
If honor, courage, purity and truth
Are tests, he was a model for the youth
To imitate; attainment of the height
Was his; acclaimed a victor as he ran
His course sans peur et sans reproach; the night
Had no alarm for him; he was a man.

BROTHER W. P. HUTCHINSON was born, July 10, 1860, in St. Helena Parish, near Greensburg, La., where for some years he spent a happy life on the farm with his parents. On Dec. 22, 1886, he married Miss Margia Anna Womack. This union was blessed with nine children. For some years he farmed in the neighborhood of the old home place. Then he moved to Tangipahoa, La., in Tangipahoa Parish, where he went into the mercantile business. After a number of successful years in this business he retired in keeping hotel. Here is where he reared and educated his children. He was a good business man and lived an active and progressive life. He was a Mason, a member of the Spring Creek Lodge No. 84, F. and A. M., and a member of St. Helena Royal Arch Chapter. He loved Masonry, and was very much devoted to the lodges. For many years he was a member of the Methodist church; had served as Sunday school superintendent and on the board of stewards. Before his departure, he endured a long and painful illness. We visited him several times, and always found him perfectly resigned to the will of God. He bore his suffering with great fortitude and patience. He gave testimony that he was saved, ready, and willing to go at any time—just waiting upon the pleasure of his God. It was on the night of May 11 that God released him from his labors, and he fully entered into the joys of his Lord. He was 63 years and 10 months old. Rev. A. J. Coburn, of Kentwood, La., asissted by Rev. B. A. McCullough, of Tangipahoa, La., and Rev. B. H. Andrews, of Amite, La., on May 12, held his funeral in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Interment was in the Tangipahoa cemetery with Masonic rites. His passing was a great loss to his home, his community, and his church. He is survived by his wife, four daughters, and three sons, four brothers and three sisters, and a host of other relatives and friends. To all of these we pray the tender consolations of the Gospel of Christ.

B. D. WATSON.

Jackson, La.

At 5 o'clock Tuesday morning, July 15, MRS. OPHELIA MOORE passed through the pearly gates into the blessed eternity prepared for those who live as we know she did. She was 77 years, 4 months, and 28 days old, and was the wife of Rev. L. B. Moore. She leaves to mourn, her husband, seven children, twenty-nine grandchildren, nineteen great-grandchildren, three sisters, and one brother, besides other relatives and a host of friends. She joined the Methodist church when a child, and lived a quiet, consistent Christian life, wielding an influence over those in whose company she was thrown for the kingdom of God. She was a falthful wife, helping father in his work as an active local preacher of the Methodist church. Her home was the preacher's home, being always ready to help in any way to further the cause of Christ. She was a model mother, having reared eight children to be grown. These have families, with the exception of one girl, who preceded mother. Dear mother, so patient and good, we are reminded of you when we look at the old armchair which was as a companion for you for more than four years. We are sad, yet rejoice in the translation. Dear mother, who suffered so long, the body having failed, you asked prayerfully that you might go, that your suffering might be relieved; God has answered your prayer, and we can only say, "Thy will be done." Even though we knew at our asking it would bring you back, we would not, remembering your pain. Peacefully in the arms of Jesus we know you are resting. May the Christian virtues possessed by mother be found in every child, that some more perfect day we may be reunited.

MRS. G. E. MAYERHOFF.

PIONEERING WHERE NO MISSIONARY HAS EVER BEEN.

Such is the coveted opportunity of Rev. F. K. Gamble, presiding elder, Seoul District, Korea: "There are in the Seoul District six city churches and nine country circuits, making fifteen pastoral charges. Seoul is at one edge, and the remotest part of the district is 150 miles away. The railroad runs through one part of it, but most of the work must be reached by auto, bicycle, pony, or foot. It was my privilege during the quarter to visit at least six places where no foreign missionary had ever gone. I held services in the home of a former sorceress, who had become a Christian with her husband and children; met one boy who had led his father and mother to become Christians; held service in one church with about seventy-five people present, where less than two years ago there was not a single Christian; planned for four new church buildings; planned for building or repairing three parsonages, and visited four of our primary schools, each with an attendance of about thirty. Of course there are some conditions that cause anxiety, and many problems, and certainly there is more work than I can possibly do. But there is joy unspeakable in telling the story of God's love and Christ's power to save. I know the work is growing, and I know that the money, energy and prayer being put forth in behalf of Korea by the church in the homeland and by the missionaries on the field are bringing forth fruit unto life eternal. In all cases of new churches being built, the Korean Christians contribute at least one-third of the cost. This is one of our greatest needs, and I know of no better investment of mission funds. The people of the home church may be sure that their offerings are being applied to meet real needs, and that rich returns come from their investments."

In the realm of character—the one enduring reality of life—development is only secured, in part at least, by affliction. The unclouded glare of the sunshine soon scorches a landscape and destroys its verdant life. It needs the wind and the rain and the biting frost of winter as well as the warmth of summer to make a fruitful field. And so it is in the life of a man or a nation. Adversity and trouble quicken perception, challenge courage, and awaken energy, as ease can never do. It is by such instruments that God works toward the development of the true man within us all.—J. Stuart Holden.

A GRACIOUS REVIVAL.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a two weeks revival here Aug. 10, with twenty-one accessions on profession of faith and one by letter. Rev. Martin Hebert and Rev. Adrian Serex did the preaching. Rev. Adrian Serex led the singing. Adrian is not only a good singer, but a good preacher, and if you won't tell anybody I said so, I'll tell you I think he is a better preacher than he is a singer.

We had good crowds, and our people were well instructed in the fundamentals of the Christian religion. We are all the better for having had these two servants of the Most High God with us. May God's blessings attend them in their labors for the advancement of the kingdom in the world.

Fraternally yours,

THIS WOMAN'S MARVELLOUS RECOVERY

All Due to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Truman, Minn.—"I was badly run-down, had pains in my side and back; sometimes I could hardly move around in bed. My husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking it I was so much better I could do all my work again. I do my housework, have a garden, raise chickens, and in harvest time I worked in the field and helped pick corn. Sometimes I do chores and milk. I took the Vegetable Compound before and after my four-months-old baby was born, and it has always helped me wonderfully. I believe there is no better medicine made for women, and I hope every woman will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. AUGUST R. WIEDERHOFT, R. No. 2, Box 81, Truman, Minn.

Women suffering from troubles so common to their sex should give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

TEN "COMMANDMENTS" FOR MOTORISTS WORTH OBEYING.

The Florence Times says the following "Ten Motor Commandments" prepared by a New Hampshire Highway publication, "should be heeded by every driver, and if observed would serve greatly toward reducing the number of motor accidents." The "Commandments" are:

1. Drive on the right side of the road; it's just as good as the left.

2. Slow down when approaching a crossroad; it's nearly as dangerous as a railroad crossing.

3. Look out for children. You can never tell what they will do, and you are always in the wrong if you hit one.

4. Try to help instead of hindering the traffic officer; he's there for your good and he's got a tough job.

5. Be sure that your lights are not defective or glaring; it's no joke driving into a blinding glare, as you yourself know.

6. Read and obey the warning signs; they are not put up as ornaments.

7. If you've got to speed—do it where it won't kill anybody but yourself.

8. When making minor repairs get all wheels off the pavement and stop where your car can be seen from both directions; otherwise you may stop longer than you anticipate.

9. Speeding around corners is a straight route to the hospital. Don't race past a stopped car. Some day the jury will call it manslaughter.

10. Use discretion. The fact that you had the right of way won't bring anybody else back to life, least of all, yourself.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

In one of the southern coast towns a Christian business girl, having a hard time among her friends, suffered persecution for her testimony, went to an evangelist conducting a series of night meetings, and said, "I am afraid I will have to give it all up." He replied, "Tell me where do you put the lights." Not knowing just what to answer, she said, "We put them in a dark place."

In a moment she saw his meaning, and realized that God had directed her into those surroundings that she might shine for Christ in the midst of darkness. She determined to be more courageous than ever in her witness for him. The result was a few weeks later she came to him with a group of girls radiant with joy, saying, "The thirteenth from our business house has decided for Christ tonight." The most important thing in individual life is to keep in touch with God. Then everything else, however trying, will be as stepping-stones for higher attainments in the Christian life.—Methodist Protestant.

The Methodist Church, through its Centenary movement, is doing as much and perhaps more than all other forces combined to make Arizona and New Mexico Christian.

Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Modern Methods of Cooking and Living Have Made an Alarming Increase in Iron Deficiency in the Blood of American Men and Women.

Why Nuxated Iron So Quickly Helps Build Up Weak, Nervous, Run-Down Folks. Millions of People Take It to Increase Their Strength, Power, Energy and Endurance.

Is your blood starving for want of sufficient iron? If you were to go without eating until you became weak, thin and emaciated, you could not do a more serious harm to yourself than when you let your blood literally starve for want of iron—iron that gives it strength and power to change food into living tissue.

Modern methods of cooking and the rapid pace at which people of this country live has made such an alarming increase in iron deficiency in the blood of American men and women that there is a surprisingly large number of people who lack iron in the blood, and who never suspect the cause of their weak, nervous run-down state. Lack of sufficient iron in the blood has ruined many a man's nerves and utterly robbed him of that virile force and stamina which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life.

The best thing for those who feel the need of a strength and blood-builder is to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble, then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original package and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package.

NUXATED IRON often increases the bodily and mental vigor of weak, tired, wornout, nervous people in two weeks' time. It's like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. You can eat it if you wish. It will not blacken or injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach—it is entirely different from [illegible] iron which people [illegible] which is made merely by the action of [illegible] acids on small pieces of iron.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Some things we can have done before the session of our Annual Conference:

1. We can observe Rally Day and take an offering for our Sunday school work. This suggestion is for the schools that did not observe Sunday School Day.

2. We can get ready to observe Children's Week some time in October. Write to Miss Virginia Thomas, Tupelo, Miss., for literature. We must have fifty schools observe this week. Last year twenty-one schools observed the week with fine results.

3. We should enroll several thousand people in our Sunday schools. Write me for literature to help in this campaign. We are aiming to increase our enrollment to seventy-five thousand within the next five years.

4. Let those schools that are working under the Program of Work get ready to be checked up before Conference. We ought to have not less than one hundred schools working under the program suited to the school.

5. Let every school in the Conference plan to make Promotion Day of definite service to the school. Make your plans now so everything will be in readiness.

Rev. R. G. Lord, of Coahoma, Miss., has agreed to supervise the work of Missionary Education in our Sunday schools. He will need at least one district superintendent in each district of the Conference. This is an opportunity to render a far-reaching service in establishing the kingdom of our Lord in the earth. Who will be the first to volunteer for this service?

It may be of interest to many that our Conference issued more credits for adult work than any other Conference in our church during this year. Our aim is to have several courses in the Intermediate work during next year. It is not too early to say what courses you want offered in our Standard Training Schools.

We already have 250 working for a gold seal diploma. We should have several thousand taking courses with the view of earning this other award offered by the General Sunday School Board. Next to being wholly consecrated to God, nothing is of more importance than the thorough preparation of ourselves in the study of the Bible, the study of those we are to teach, and the mastery of the principles of teaching.

One thing I most heartily believe, and that is that our Lord is in his church and that he is leading all who are willing to follow him. There are currents and counter-currents whirling in the great stream of the world's life, but God, even our God, the Holy Spirit, is moving in the main current. There is only one place of safety, and that is with the Spirit, the One who is in authority over the church of the living God.

SOME SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

By C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

The 9 o'clock hour at the Bluff Creek Camp Grounds is turned over to the Sunday school work.

A model program of worship is presented daily from 9 to 9:20 o'clock, followed by class period and a Sunday school institute.

The institute period is in charge of the Conference superintendent, and Rev. P. B. McCullen is in charge of a class of young people studying the text. "Principles of Teaching."

Among the preachers attending the Camp Grounds are: Rev. H. N. Brown, presiding elder; Rev. B. D. Watson, Rev. William Schuhle, Rev. R. W. Tucker, Rev. W. R. Harvell, Rev. H. C. Murphy, Rev. T. D. Lipscomb.

The educational director of the Amite Standard Training School, Rev. H. B. Andrews, is very much pleased with the prospects of a great school the first week in September. All members of his faculty are college professors with one exception, Dr. A. S. Lutz, of Shreveport.

The subject of the consolidated Sunday school for the rural communities will be considered at one of our institute periods.

Miss Alma Puckett, of Baton Rouge, a district officer, is attending the last session of the Junaluska Leadership School.

The subject of Sunday School Evangelism was before the Bluff Creek camp meeting. Mrs. H. N. Brown, the wife of the presiding elder, led this discussion.

Rev. W. R. Harvell, pastor at Bunkie, La., is a teacher of a fine class of Senior boys, and says he uses the whole class period in teaching the Bible lesson.

STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL AT SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

Dear Brother Carley: I want to emphasize the announcement made in this week's Advocate concerning the Standard Training School to be held at the Seashore Camp Ground, Sept. 1-6. We are hoping all charges in the Seashore District will be represented in this School, and we invite others to come and get the benefit of the splendid courses to be given.

We have secured a fine faculty, which insures thoroughness of work to be done. Following is the list of classes and teachers:

"Pupil Study," J. C. Chambers.

"Principles of Teaching," Mrs. C. A. Bowen.

"Sunday School," R. H. B. Gladney.

Bible—"Life and Letters of Paul." B. F. Lewis.

We have arranged with Brother Van Hook to furnish board and lodging at Keller Lodge for $1.50 a day for outside students who take the course. This is indeed very reasonable. I trust all the pastors will urge their people to take advantage of this Standard School, as well as get an outing on the coast at extremely low cost.

Students desiring to take the course will please enroll with Miss Laura White, or with me.

Now for a little exhortation, if you please. Bishop Galloway once said: "Trained service is most efficient, and nowhere is skill more needed than in the service of our Lord. Those summoned to places of toil and trust in Christ's Kingdom should have mental and spiritual training as well as spiritual fervor and fire. A mere desire to serve is not sufficient qualification for service. Passion for the sea does not make a great sailor. Eagerness to defend the flag of one's country does not make a hero or a capable leader of armies. So a zeal for the Lord's house does not constitute one an efficient worker. This impulse, fired by divine love, must not be lacking. This desire should become a passion; this eagerness a sanctified impatience; this zeal all-consuming; but should be guided by a trained eye and practiced hand."

Let us, then, as pastors, superintendents, teachers and parents, give diligence to our work and make it meet the approval of God. Let us learn how rightly to divide the word of truth. Let us not be satisfied with anything short of the best there is in us; and that best trained to skillful service. Let us make the very best use of the opportunity that presents itself in the Training School to be held the first week in September. Let us evermore "put all our intellect into the preparation, all our hearts into the presentation, and all our lives into the illustration of the tremendous truths we present."

Yours for service,

O. S. LEWIS.

In a thickly settled community of one of our Southern cities we have built an institution which teaches the Negro to help himself. This institution was made possible by the Centenary.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.

I am a poor boy in misfortune, and I write this letter to you all to see if you can help me a little by buying a box of beautiful Sea Shells. They are strange and wonderful things, fine for presents, souvenirs, or keep-sakes. Price, $1 a box. I am a crippled boy, permanently bed-ridden, caused by a fall. I can't walk or sit up. Been down in bed 25 years and I have to earn a living in my helpless condition, and if you can send me an order for a box of Sea Shells I sure will appreciate your kindness, and I believe you will be pleased with these pretty Sea Shells.

Yours in Misfortune,

THE MEETING AT LONGVILLE, LA.

The old-time religion still has the old-time power. The Holy Ghost does sanctify to-day as in days gone by, and the experience of holiness as a second definite work of grace is still sought and received by believers in the regnerated state. This was fully demonstrated in our meeting at Longville, La.

Holiness, as stated above, needs to be preached more throughout this Methodist Conference, and we found this true at this place. We had a hard ten days' struggle, but God gave us the victory. The outward evidences of our work were small, but we have faith to believe that the meeting will bear fruit in days to come. One soul was sanctified wholly on Fright night before the closing Sunday. Several came up during the meeting to be sanctified, but did not pray through. Others came up for consecration, and many who did not come to the altar were stirred to the very depths of their souls. In the closing, five came forward and stood before the congregation in testimony that they believed in holiness as a second definite work of grace and that they would go on until they were wholly sanctified.

Rev. D. L. Griffin, of the Louisiana Nazarene Assembly, did the preaching. He is a man full of the Holy Ghost and preaches a full gospel and a salvation from all sin. I am glad to recommend him to our brethren.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

New Orleans Public Service,
INCORPORATED

FROM MAGEE AND SANATORIUM CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: We finished our round of revival meetings on this charge yesterday, with the third quarterly meeting at Rials Creek. The reports showed that there had been fifty accessions to the church this quarter, with a great improvement in the spiritual condition of each church. Finances well up, with every interest cared for.

We were very fortunate in the selection of helpers in our meetings. Brother J. V. Bennett assisted us at Cohay and Magee. All the people of all denominations were eager to hear and did hear his gospel sermons gladly. His preaching waked up and built up the church, and many sinners were converted and added to the church.

Brother A. W. O'Bryant was a fine fit at Sharon Grove, a small afternoon appointment, where we ran five days. We had nineteen accessions, and the spiritual life of the whole community was quickened.

Brother T. J. Halfacre rendered exceptionally fine help at Rials Creek. The people were loud in their praises, and say they had not had such a meeting in years. God was with us in every service. Everything seems to be harmonious and hopeful.

The Woman's Missionary Society has done heroic service this year in furnishing and painting the parsonage. We have here a band of willing workers.

At the Cohay logging camps we have a fine interdenominational Sunday school of near two hundred enrolled. One hundred and sixty enrolled in Men's Bible class, with an average attendance of seventy-two. That is the most successful Bible class I have ever seen.

Our work at the Sanitorium is one of the most important in our church, and fruitful of great good. There are between 250 and 300 patients. They appreciate our services so much and beg us to give them more. We need more time there. With the other work to be done on this large charge, it is impossible to give those sick, hungry souls the service they need.

This is one of the greatest institutions in the world, and Dr. Boswell and his staff of helpers are doing all that can be done with the very limited appropriation made by the Legislature. There is room now for more patients than they have, and there is a large waiting lsit. But the State failing to make sufficient appropriation makes it impossible for them to be treated. These poor, sick people should be cared for by our great State and church.

W. M. WILLIAMS.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE

Has a four-year affiliated High School for its preparatory department, and four year Standard College Courses. We have a limited number of Scholarships to be given to worthy students of limited means. These Scholarships are for either high school or college work. We have a few Scholarships for local students.

STUDENTS ARE EXPECTED TO ARRIVE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10th.

Here are some kind words about the work which Whitworth College is doing:

G. W. Hubbleston, President State Board of Examiners, Jackson, Miss.: "I am very much pleased to say that the work in examination for Professional License by graduates of Whitworth shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your girls have submitted excellent papers—and several, very excellent. I am grateful, personal, that our church schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it."

Miss Bertha Bauf, Director of Music, Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio: "After the many excellent talents which have come to us from Whitworth College during the past ten years, I feel impelled to write to you of their superior studentship and splendid preparation—not only technically but musically, which has been on a par with the best students of this country. I congratulate you upon your splendid music department and its high standard; in each case students from Whitworth College have been able to take their places in the front rank. It is always my pleasure to indorse Whitworth College."

A LETTER FROM MISS HOWELL TO THE CARROLLTON AVENUE AUXILIARY, NEW ORLEANS.

My Dear Friends: I have just had a long letter from Miss Kate Cooper of Wonsan, Korea, telling me about her Bible women's assignments for the year 1924. Miss Cooper has twenty-five Bible women working under her supervision. She literally lives with these Bible women. I am sure you have heard more than once that Miss Cooper is one of the greatest missionaries that we have on this Mission field. Certainly none can surpass her in consecration and devotion to her work. Missionaries tell me that her Bible women have caught her spirit and ideals for the work and that every one of them holds Miss Cooper's life and character up as her own ideal.

The Bible women under Miss Cooper are divided into three groups. She conducts every year her Alice Cobb Bible Institute for three weeks, at which time she gathers her Bible women together and teaches them. After a course of study covering five or six years, they graduate and receive their graduate status.

I do not know whether you have heard or not that the Korean women do not have names. They are not supposed to be worth a name. After the Christians came among them they have had the desire to have names, and especially Christian names, and so many of these Korean women have adopted Bible names. We pay the salary of the Bible women and are responsible for their moving expenses when their appointments are changed from one circuit to another. The Bible women bear all other expenses themselves or receive help from the churches or the circuits which they serve.

We are constantly raising the standard of our Bible women and more and more we are getting a better grade and higher type of women. They are younger than they used to be when they started Bible woman's work.

The Bible women you support, "Priscilla Bentley," is Ko Youngcha. Ko Youngcha is working on the West Wheyang Circuit. Miss Cooper, in speaking of her, writes as follows:

"Ko Youngcha is just ready for her fifth year's work in the Bible Institute next year. She has a husband, but he has taken another woman to care for, and Youngcha is devoting her life to the cause of her Master. Last fall she went out for a time to do work in the country, and among her many experiences was the one of falling from a narrow bridge into a swiftly flowing stream, but as the circuit leader was near, he rescued her. She is not working alone, but with another Bible woman who has had more years of service and more varied experiences than any of my women."

I know you will do everything within your power to uphold your Bible woman by prayer. These women have hard times. They were practically all of them married in childhood, some of them happily, and some of them unhappily, hut all of them are tested and tried and have turned out to be the pure gold that Miss Cooper finds them to he. Their sorrows are hers and their joys are hers. As I have said, she gives herself without stint to these women. A finer group of Christian workers one could scarcely find. I know you can depend upon Ko Youncha representing you in Korea. Thanking you for the support of this Bible woman for the year 1924, I am,

Yours sincerely,

MABEL K. HOWELL.

ARE YOU AN ANGEL?

A deaconess found her way to a lonely tenement house. It was in Boston. She entered a cheerless room. The mother was ill. The children were dirty and hungry, the fire was out. Poverty's grim hand was everywhere obtrusive.

The deaconess said, in relating the incident to a friend: "I couldn't get down on that dirty floor to pray. I couldn't open my Testament and read. I couldn't even tell that mother about Jesus!"

What did she do? She made a fire. She swept the floor. She bathed the children. Then she opened her basket and took out some fresh, clean clothes to replace the rags and some food for the hungry mouths. The sick woman, who had been looking on all this time in a sort of bewilderment, finally found words and asked in a plaintive voice, "Are you an angel? No one ever did this for me before!"

Then the deaconess told her she came in the name of Jesus. Then it was easy to read and pray. Then she dared speak of the love of Jesus. For she had demonstrated the new commandment of the Master:

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love oneanother." John 13:24.—Selected.

INSTITUTE AT VASSAR TO CONSIDER INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS.

The Institute for a Christian Basis of World Relations, which was held at Vassar College, June 14-20, registered 175 in attendance, representing 19 States and 11 foreign countries. Eighty per cent of the attendance was drawn from our missionary women of various denominations. A remarkable group of experts was present to answer questions and to give first hand information on the racial, economic and political barriers to Christian World Relations. A Committee on Findings was appointed, which included Mrs. John Ferguson, of the Council of Women for Home Missions, and Mrs. H. H. Silverhorn, President of the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, as the missionary representatives.

The Institute was ably conducted. The setting in which the Conference met was beautiful indeed in every way. Every facility of the college was open to the Institute which was entertained on the basis of guests. The library was open to visitors, and President McCracken and his faculty took an active part in the discussions and in dispensing the hospitality of Vassar College. Mrs. Luke G. Johnson and Mrs. J. H. McCoy were the only Southern Methodist women present.—Bulletin.

THE SINNERS' PARADE.

Two young men were seated together in the early morning train. "Monday," said one with a little laugh, "and I'm more tired than I was on Saturday night. I drove down to the shore yesterday in my new car. Never again for me!"

"Have trouble?" the other asked.

"No, but you know what the road is like on Sunday. I'd seen the cars going through our town, but I never realized that at the height of the home-coming traffic there was a line of cars almost end to end, mile after mile, from the city by the sea all the way across the State to the ferries—the 'sinners' parade,' some one in a car that stood near my own in a jam called it jeeringly."

"Do you know, that phrase stuck in my mind. But of course they were not all sinners; no doubt some were preachers, church workers and doctors on their various errands. Let's be charitable. But I can't get away from the thought of the noise, the dust, the un-Sabbathlike gayety and worldliness of the crowds, the many disabled cars and one accident when several persons were seriously hurt. And that phrase 'sinners' parade!' I was in it and with no good excuse, no worthy object. I'll never again be in it!"

The speaker's fine young face flushed. "Don't think I'm a coward," he continued, "that I'm afraid of getting hurt physically. I can take my chances with the rest. But I am afraid of hurts that go deeper. I'm afraid to parade with the sinners when I ought to be in church with the saints."—Youth's Companion.

Recovery From Influenza Hastened by

PE-RU-NA

Mr. C. A. Allen, R. R. No. 2, Bondurant, Iowa, gives testimony to the healing power of Pe-ru-na. Influenza left him much run down in health with catarrh of the nose, throat and bronichal tubes punctuated with attacks of asthma. He writes:

"While recovering from the Influenza I was so weak I could not gain any strength for two months. The latter part of the winter, I bought six bottles of Pe-ru-na and began taking it. My weight increased to 175 pounds, the most I ever weighed.

My usual winter weight is 155 If you can use this letter for any good, you are perfectly welcome."

Such evidence cannot fail to convince the rankest unbeliever of the merits of Pe-ru-na.

PRAY.

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray if thou canst with hope; but ever pray,
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.
Far is the time, remote from human sight,
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avails the blessed time to expedite.
Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven.
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;
Pray to be perfect, though material leaven
Forbid the spirit so on earth to be;
But if for any wish thou darest not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

—Hartley Coleridge.

A GRACIOUS AND GOOD LIFE.

There is nothing quite like it in all the range and compass of things human. We may not act as if we believed that always, and indeed sometimes we may even talk against goodness, or express our doubt as to whether there is such a thing left in the world, yet in our souls we know that there is, and in the secret places of our hearts we all pay it unhesitating and unqualified tribute. We say "a gracious and good life:" for there is a goodness that allies itself with graciousness, and it would seem sometimes as if there were a goodness that did not believe in any such alliance. But we cannot but have some grave doubts as to the depth and reality of any such goodness. At any rate this much can be said: a goodness that is not at the same time gracious is lacking its truest crown and glory. And undoubtedly one of the reasons why the goodness some of us profess does not make a stronger appeal and exert a greater influence than it does is due to the fact that it lacks that excellent quality of graciousness. It was said of Jesus at one time that the people wondered at the gracious words that fell from his lips, and it is just as true in our day as it was in his that graciousness in word or deed or life lays a strange and compelling hand upon the sons of men, and makes the goodness of which it is the fruit seem so attractive and worth while.—Christian Guardian.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

FINDINGS OF THE MISSIONARY GROUP INSTITUTE FOR A CHRISTIAN BASIS OF WORLD RELATIONS, VASSAR COLLEGE, JUNE 14-20, 1924.

The Missionary Group in attendance at the Institute for a Christian Basis of World Relations, in registering convictions evoked by the Institute, desires to affirm:

1. Faith that our Lord's Prayer will be fulfilled and God's kingdom be realized on this earth as his truth, his insight, his love flow increasingly through Christian folk, leading them to greater open-mindedness and deeper yearning for beauty and righteousness in human relations.

2. Belief in and desire for world co-operation and world disarmament in order that world peace may be attained.

3. Belief and desire that America should take her full share of responsibility in all efforts toward such achievement.

4. Belief in the essential oneness of humanity.

5. Belief that the Christian basis of justice, good will, and co-operation must be adopted by all people in matters of race relations, since the individual contribution and participation of each race is essential to the world's civilization and best development.

6. Belief and desire that the economic resources of the world should be considered in their bearing upon world co-operation and world peace.

7. Belief that the distribution and use of opium and other narcotics, except for medicinal and scientific purposes, is destructive of moral principles and progress, and conviction that Christian peoples should co-operate fully with all agencies charged with their suppression.

8. Belief that the potency of the moving picture in this and other lands imposes a responsibility upon all Christian leaders and people to utilize resources of influence and helpfulness to forward the attempt of educators to improve the character of films produced and exported.

9. Belief that all Christians must diligently seek to bring about allegiance to the laws of our country and use their utmost influence to promote respect for and obedience to the law.

10. Belief that all Christian people should help to create public opinion on these matters and should express themselves, not only through church life and church organizations, but also through civic and political responsibilities.

To this end be it resolved, That the Missionary Group in attendance at the Institute recommend that all missionary organizations bring to their constituencies and to the general public the convictions above expressed with a view to securing personal commitment to these principles and thus to achieve a more effective functioning of our national life in the larger problems of humanity.

HENRY T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY AUGUST 28, 1924. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

Editorial.

LET THE CHURCH VOTE ON UNIFICATION.

There has been considerable discussion of the pending plan of unification since the adjournment of the Chattanooga General Conference, most of it, so far as we have observed, in good spirit. In our opinion, this is as it should be. Apathy concerning this momentous issue would indicato a lack of interest throughout the church in its future that would be both strange and discouraging.

We know, of course, that the responsibility for the adoption or rejection of the plan of unification rests squarely upon the membership, both clerical and lay, of the Annual Conferences. According to the provisions of the law of the church, only the members of the Annual Conferences have the right to act officially upon a proposed measure of the kind now before us. We do not know of any member of any Annual Conference who wants to evade the responsibility thus imposed; probably the attendance at the 1925 sessions will be unusually good, especially on the part of the laymen, in order that this duty and obligation may be fully discharged.

But in a matter of such tremendous inuportance, we believe that every adult member of the church should have an opportunity to record his opinion, and we believe the opinion of the entire membership of the church should have at least as much weight in determining the issue as the vote of the comparatively few who mako up the membership of the Annual Conferences. The suggestion has been made, principally by anti-unificationists we believe, that some means be devised for giving the entire membership of the church, or the mature portion of it, the opportunity to vote on the question. We heartily favor the suggestion, for the following reasons:

1. It is democratic. It is true that a democracy can best operate through a representative form of government; but the membership of the Annual Conferences is not, except in a limited way, representative of the membership of the church. The lay members are indirectly chosen by the people themselves, but the clerical members, who are in the majority in every Annual Conference, are not elected by the people and are not officially their respresentatives. We do not question the sincerity of a single clerical member of any Conference—we believe every one of them will vote strictly in keeping with his duty as ho sees it; but it is conceivable that a preacher in voting his own honest convictions would be going contrary to the wishes of the great majority of the mature members of the charge he serves. His vote would count in determining the issue, while the wishes of his people would bo ineffectual. And the people would be without recourse, since the preacher is not elected a delegate by them and there is no system of recall by which he could be made to feel that he had not properly represented his parishioners. We do not for a moment mean to suggest that preachers should be made simply the political hirelings of their congregations, but we do mean to say that it is simply in keeping with the sound principles of democracy for the people themselves to have the opportunity to pass upon matters that are vital to their welfare and interests.

2. The membership of the church is well qualified to have and express an opinion upon the matter of unification. If the bulk of our membership were composed of ignorant, prejudiced, indifferent, un-Christian men and women, we might doubt the wisdom of a popular vote on any question; but the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is made up largely of as fine a class of people as can be found anywhere in the world. Among them are great lawyers, physicians, bankers, agriculturists, editors, teachers, business men and women—people who deal with large affairs and are accustomed to pass upon questions of grave importance. They have their share in the management of the industrial, commercial, social, and political affairs of their commonwealths and they have proved themselves to be worthy and well qualified in all these important relationships of life; we believe they are equally as well qualified to pass intelligently upon the pending plan of unification.

3. It is right. Assuming that the membership, in round numbers, of the church is 2,500,000 and of the Annual Conferences 10,000, it seems to us without question a simple matter of right to allow the membership of the church to record its opinion upon the practicability and wisdom of a plan that involves fundamental changes in the ecclesiastical organization to which they have giveu tneir allegiance in the past and to which they will be expected to give it in the future. The people who compose the present church have the right to say whether they are willing to accept these fundamental changes or not.

4. It is expedient. The adoption or the rejection of the pending plan of unification by the 10,000 members of the Annual Conference might or might not represent the will of the membership of the church as a whole. If the plan were rejected by the Annual Conferences when a majority of the people were in favor of it, there would almost certainly be developed a situation that would make exceedingly difficult the future work of the church; and the same thing would result if the plan should be adopted by the Annual Conferences when a majority of the membership at large were opposed to it.

While we believe there is no doubt that both the great branches of Methodism in the country desire unification, it can hardly be argued that just any plan to bring about the union will be acceptable. The two churches, having, as we believe, settled the question of the desirability of union, are now dealing with a particular plan. If this plan meets the approval of a majority of the members of the churches and is adopted, the union will be consummated; if it does not meet the approval of the members and is adopted, the union will not be consummated and distress will result. We need to know what the people think. If a majority of them favor this plan, when it has been adopted those who did not favor it, being in a minority, will doubtless yield to the judgment of the majority, and all will be well; if a majority do not want the plan, those who favor it, being in the minority, would doubtless yield as gracefully—and the search for a satisfactory plan would be continued.

As is well known hy the readers of the Advocate, we favor the adoption of the pending plan, believing that it provides a satisfactory basis upon which the two great churches may be brought together. All the more willingly, therefore, would we welcome an arrangement by which the membership of the church could register its will concerning the matter. We believe that a majority of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, would vote in favor of the plan, and if they would, it ought to be adopted. On the other hand, if a majority are opposed to it, it ought not to be adopted. If the cry, "Let the church vote!" is a challenge, we would accept it, being confident that the result would vindicate the position of those who have already given their approval to the pending plan.

THE REAL DANGER.

Opposition to the observance of "National Defense Day," Sept. 12, is by no means to be credited altogether to the "peace-at-any-price" party, as is shown by the names of those who have expressed themselves against it. Robert Lansing, former Secretary of War in the Wilson cabinet, was quoted recently in an interview as saying: "I have not much sympathy for the idea myself, as I do not see where it will get the country. It will take a large number of men from work for a time without accomplishing anything tangible. It will not even take an inventory of our forces, for they could be counted better without calling them all out. It is a move of the War Department, and appears to be principally to keep the public interested in things military." It is in this last sentence that the real danger of the movement appears—the development and cultivation of a militaristic spirit that will glory in war and make it increasingly difficult to bring abont and maintain world peace.

AN OPEN LETTER ON THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE PROBLEM.

By the Bishop of the Japan Methodist Church.

Bishop K. Usaki, the presiding officer of the Japan Methodist Church, has just published, in the Japanese Christian Advocate, an open letter concerning the American-Japanese problem. The position taken by the bishop, who represents the views of the leaders of the church, is conservative, courteous and Christian. There has been a very general agitation of the question, and the church in Japan, per force, has had to meet the issue that it raised. Some extremists have urged complete separation from the parent churches in America, the refusal of all financial assistance and the immediate severance of all relations with missionaries; but the Methodist leaders have resolutely refused to be "carried away with their dissimulation." A few of those who have advocated these extreme views are either not in relation with any American church, or are in "bad odor" in the Christian community. One or two of these extremists have shown so much warmth, in the advocacy of their views that even a Buddhist paper has accused them of lacking in the Christian spirit. In his letter, Bishop Usaki represents the sane, conservative attitude of those who take a middle course. Wounded sorely and grievously disappointed over the recent anti-Japanese legislation, still these leaders distinguish between the American Christian people and their Government, and do not hold the former responsible for what has been done from political motives. They can never forget the "grace" bestowed upon the churches of Japan by American Christians during all these years. They hold as very precious, the "work and labor of love which the missionaries have shown towards his name in that they have ministered and do minister" to the Japanese church and people, in their evangelistic, educational and publishing work. To sever immediately, in a fit of irritation, all connection with the Mission Boards, because of an offensive act on the part of the American Congress, would be the utmost folly, as well as un-Christian, and would inflict a blow upon the weak, struggling church in Japan that would most seriously cripple it, and would largely destroy much that has been done. The course that the leaders of the Japan Methodist Church have adopted, as given in Bishop Usaki's letter, is the safe and wise one, and the sober thought of the future will vindicate it. One thing, however, is sure, the agitation for indepedence will be beneficial to the church as a whole, in that it will hasten the day of self-support, a consummation devoutly to be wished, both by the Japanese Church and Mission Boards. A translation of Bishop Usaki's letter follows:

"Aoyama, Tokyo, June 18, 1924.

"Since the development of the American-Japanese problem, I have been much troubled over the changed situation, and knowing that the result will be very serious to the church, I have been giving the matter very careful and prayerful attention, hoping for a satisfactory solution. I am exceedingly sorry that the exclusion bill has become a law, having been signed by the American President on May 26, and now the feelings of the Japanese people are greatly excited and the anti-American atmosphere is becoming thicker and thicker every day. The Japanese nation unitedly condemn this discriminatory law as unkind and unjust, while many of the citizens of America take the same view. Without question, this racial discrimination is contrary to international ethics and does not harmonize with Christian principles. Hence the National Christian Council of Japan and other Christian organizations made united protest against the passage of the exclusion bill, while, on the other hand, almost all the Christian organizations of America took positive stand against it, urging Congress not to pass the objectionable measure. The action of the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, which is one of the co-operating bodies with the Japan Methodist Church, is an illustration of what was done by the Christian people of America in their efforts to oppose the legislation. This great church, while recognizing the right of the American people to regulate the matter of immigration, most vigorously condemned, in the exclusion bill, the articles against the Japanese as discriminatory and unjust, and even went so far as to send a committee to protest personally to the President, the Secretary of State, and to Congress against the measure.

"Unthinking people often misunderstand Christianity and confuse it with Americanism, and there is real danger that the anti-American movement will become an anti-Christian movement, and that the feelings aroused against America will be directed against American missionaries. And, in this emergency, there are some, even in the Christian churches, who are perplexed and uncertain as to what steps should be taken. Recognizing this, I have felt that it is my duty to make clear the attitude of the Japan Methodist Church on this question, with the hope that there will be real spiritual union, both within and without, and that all will have a right understanding of our attitude towards our missionary brethren.

"The Japan Methodist Church is an independent, self-governing body, and has reached its present condition, working ever towards self-support, since the union of the three separate Methodist bodies in 1907. The relation between the Japan Methodist Church and the mother churches in America is co-operative, while the evangelistic work that the missions began at the time of the union is also mutually co-operative. When the church was organized, its strength was very limited and it was necessary to our very existence and devlopment that we receive a measure of material assistance from our mother churches.

"Under the blessing of God, the Japan Methodist Church has grown, both in numbers and in financial ability, and has made remarkable progress towards self-support, but it is not yet entirely independent. At the General Conference held last January that body set as its goal complete financial independence within eight years, and vigorous efforts are constantly being made towards this mark. It is our earnest determination to reach full financial independence within the designated period, but we recognize that we must be very careful not to be influenced in this direction, by any thoughtless and unjust motives of anti-Americanism.

"In our relations to our fellow-workers, the missionaries, we must continue to work together in all evangelistic efforts, helping and relying upon each other, with the utmost friendliness; because they are our co-workers in the bonds of the gospel, standing exactly in the same relation as our Japanese brethren of the Japan Methodist Church, as laid down in the terms of the union, at the time we became an independent body in 1907.

"Our American brethren may sometimes err in judgment, but the Japanese will do that also; and so we must be patient the one towards the other and love as brethren. I exhort all to stand together with the missionaries, appreciating their labors in the past, sympathizing with them in their present painful and embarassing position, and hoping they will continue to help us to the utmost of their ability. This I firmly believe is the attitude and the sentiment of the nation at large, and certainly it is the Christian attitude, which should be superior to the national problem.

"May all those in America and Japan, who fear God and love Christ, endeavor in the most friendly way, standing on the teachings and the spirit of Christ, to arrive at a Christian solution of the American-Japanese problem.

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: Any Christian who has enough of interest in the shrines of his faith to lead him to make a pilgrimage to Palestine, very naturally enters Jerusalem with great expectations. But the moment he is well inside the gates his disillusionment is almost overwhelming—the romance is gone. On the streets and in the shops he meets a stench and a rabble which might well lead him to feel that Jesus' lamentation over Jerusalem was the knell of its hope.

To me the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is a travesty upon religion, and I think that the scorching rebuke which Jesus gave to the Jews of the Temple would be a mild remonstrance compared with what he would say to that motley, contending set if he were here now. Everyhwere is the evidence of pretense and sham, coupled with a highly developed economic instinct, with piasters as the base of calculation. The performance at the Jews' Wailing Place is so artificial as to be disgusting, and I would make little distinction between the spirit of Christian or Mohammedan in the exhibition of their closely guarded shrines.

Here are some instances: In the Church of the Holy Sepulchre there is the whole program of the death of Jesus. Part of a stone column to which he was bound is inside a case which has a round hole in it through which one may poke a stick, provided for that purpose, and then kiss the stick. The other part of the column is in Rome. There is the stone where he was whipped, the stone where his body was washed for burial, and the sepulchre where his body was laid. And about all these impossible spots there is a mummery of devotion which is revolting, to say the least of it. I was there on Sunday morning when the Greek Catholics were performing in front of the sepulchre and the Copts behind it and the Armenians in the balcony—all under the same dome, and apparently each trying to outdo the other, while soldiers stood guard lest they fly at the throats each of the other in a holy (?) riot. In this same church is a stone marking the exact spot where Adam was born, and in another spot is the stone chair in which Queen Helena was sitting when her workmen found the exact cross upon which Jesus was crucified. On the Mount of Olives is a little closed partition over the exact spot from which the proprietors claim that Jesus ascended. Inside of this pavilion is a grating, guarding indentations in the rock said to have been the one footprint of Jesus and the other the place where his staff stuck as he went away. So much for the fanaticism and imposture which is wholesale in Jerusalem.

Aside from all this, there are things which uplift and inspire one. It is easy to believe that the rock in the Mosque of Omar was the stone of sacrifice in Solomon's temple, and the stone upon which Abraham would have offered Isaac. The Mount of Olives, Gethsemane, Gordon's Calvary, the pool of Bethesda, Solomon's quarries, Solomon's stables, and Pilate's Judgment Hall are sufficiently attested to bring an emotional thrill to the soul. And in spite of the obscurity and the silly traditions peddled to the tourist, it is Jerusalem, where the rock of our faith was set. After all, other things do not really matter.

Of Jerusalem in general I may say that my impression was not favorable. Of Zionism I would not dare to speak dogmatically, but I have a very definite conviction that it is destined to be a thorn in the side of those responsible for the peace of Palestine. There is a prouounced antipathy of all natives against those who are establishing colonies and entrenching themselves in the arable and fertile lands of Palestine.

One afternoon our party was at the pool of Siloam, and a Jewish funeral approached from the direction of St. Stephen's gate. Eight gray-coated Jews were bearing an uncoffined body upon a litter, and just as they were opposite a Mohammedan cemetery stones rained upon them with such fury that the stately procession was turned into a run-away. This antipathy is unquestionably shared by the native Christians. And I do not wonder that it is so. So much for Jerusalem.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

By Payton A. Sowell.

Fifty or more years ago devout Methodists of New Orleans from Carondelet Street Church, and Felicity Street Church, and other Methodist churches of that city, led by that great Southerner, and chief among the apostles of Southern Methodism, Bishop J. C. Keener, secured a most charmingly situated plot of land facing 1,400 feet on the beach, one mile (then) west of Biloxi, Miss.—now far in the city limits. It ran to Back Bay—about a mile to the north.

Here these zealous Christians established a Camp Ground, and here many of the saintliest and most eloquent preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South,—men filled with holy enthusiasm, from the obscure circit rider to Sam Jones, Bishops Keener and Marvin—rang out in the silences of the historic groves of these sacred grounds the wonderful message of the "Good News."

Many a saint from many States was refreshed, and thousands who enjoyed those sermons were made strong to finish "the race" and receive the crown.

An old colored preacher, Rev. Robert Watson, who for over forty years served the campers, died two years ago in New Orleans. Before he was carried from the Camp Ground to the home of a relative to die, one day, while his eyes were open, he had a vision of a ship sailing over the Camp Ground. In it were scores of happy passengers; he saw many of the campers of years ago, now long in heaven; he saw a great company of the preachers whom he had heard under the old arbor, as they waved the "Banner of the Cross" and pointed the way of life to sinners, and the "gates of glory" to believers.

They looked over the sides of the ship and waved a joyous greeting to him. He looked up and shouted: "Let me aboard!" But with smiling faces they said, "not this time—but soon." In three weeks the "pale horse" pawed at his door in New Orleans and he went away "with the rider," on that strange journey, to the same land the inmates of that ship were bound for.

These have been gracious grounds, and some of the world's most precious history has been created here. It would take an archangel, skilled in penmanship, to write down all the names of the noble souls who have walked and worshiped on these hallowed grounds, on their way to glory. I rejoice, though late in life's evening, I have seen God in the beautiful changing sea and in the groves. In the flying years changes have come; the earliest dwellers are all on the "other side."

A vast population has come to dwell along the side of the sea; thousands hear the murmur of the waves. Biloxi has grown from a "French village" to a "city on the peninsula," with great packing-houses; Gulfport has been born "over night," with deep channel and the coming and going of ocean vessels from all the shores of the seas. And uniting these two cities is an electric railway and a "modernized" Spanish Trail Highway. Along all the twelve miles there is an unbroken line of lovely homes peering out from among the trees at the sea.

The simple days and the simple ways of fifty years ago, before airships and automobiles, when spiritually minded men and women came by boat and by train, and for a season in a retreat left their city churches in New Orleans and Mobile, and sang and prayed and worshiped by the sea. While they sang they could see His feet on the waves, and as they prayed they heard His voice in the joyousness of the "whitecaps," and felt "His breath" in the zephyrs born far out beyond the islands and the coastline. These days of simplicity are no more.

The tent or cottage owners are possessors of their cottages only—and not the ground on which they are built.

As the property now is school property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through the Alabama, the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences, its attitude is changed of necessity toward "the old original Seashore Camp Ground," as that institution was related to devotional and evangelistic service. It is now school property, and it can readily be seen that it is easy for this board of trustees to interpret properly that their duty is to the school, and not to evangelistic services. It is not to be presumed that these Methodist officials oppose the evangelistic features, but their duty is to the school.

There was a time when the "rents" of the cottagers, the "fees" of attendance on the grounds, all went to the upkeep of the property, and the expenses of the religious services, the board of the preachers, etc.

These "tenters" pay—or are due to pay annually—about $1,500 ground rent for about twenty-four and one-half acres on which their simple little houses stand. And this rent now goes to the school.

So that whereas in the days of Keener and his fellow-workers this income went to maintain the "camp meeting," now by the new charter it is "school funds."

Under these altered conditions it was but a natural result that the "old-time" ideal of "religious exercises" should change, and thus the "camp meeting" idea would die.

Rev. L. L. Roberts, the presiding elder of the Seashore District, Mississippi Conference, was obsessed with the purpose of restoring this "once fruitful" means to religion again and to the church and Christ.

And on faith in God and the merit of the work he undertook to conduct an "old-time camp meeting," as nearly as circumstances would allow. He secured the services of Rev. J. A. Smith, pastor of Picayune, Miss., and his wife, a remarkable soloist, and Rev. W. J. Ferguson, pastor of Gulfport Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Miss Alice Fountin, of Logtown, Miss., a charming pianist, and Rev. O. S. Lewis, pastor of Main Street Church, Biloxi, as director of the music, and conductor of the twilight or vesper worship.

From the lips of these preachers we have had a wonderful series of sermons—sound, intellectual, fitting and spiritual. And the music and singing have been rich in every sense.

Rev. L. L. Roberts chose for himself the early hour—8:30 a. m. each day—and he brought "beaten oil" into those hours, speaking on "Jesus." This series brought by the presiding elder deserves to be enlarged and brought to more length, and used far and wide.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, pastor of Biloxi Main Street Church, gave almost all the hours of the passing days to a hearty co-operation. It is a course of the greatest wisdom for our coast churches to use this place, so providentially put into our hands fifty years ago for $2,900. If we had to buy it now, it would perhaps require $150,000. And all Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana Methodists could hardly be induced to make the gift.

Two years ago I wrote for the New Orleans Christian Advocate a story of the Seashore Camp Ground, and I warned our people of the "crucial hour" on this "coast country," and said if we did not use this Camp Ground God had put in our hands for evangelistic purposes, others would see this "open door" and enter.

This summer the Southern Baptist Church came over to the coast, near Gulfport, and held a denominational meeting of ten days—at times with a possible attendance of 500. And they hope to turn the eyes of all Mississippi Baptists to the coast as a point for annual assemblies. Mississippi has thousands of acres of rich land but only one "gulf coast." This coast has on it the eyes of East, West, and North. It is being more thoroughly advertised than all the rest of Mississippi.

The Camp Ground is ours. It is near to Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. Winter and summer it might be used for Methodism and Christ. Will we throw it away? Rev. L. L. Roberts has done a great service to Methodism in restoring the religious element to this place.

May it be but the "breaking of day" for a glorious series of years.

These Conferences should co-operate and use this wonderful place. It can hardly be expected that in 1924 all the incidental phenomena of 1865 would be manifest in camp meetings.

The songs are different—the words and specially the tunes are not the same. The minor key is absent from the present music. Brother Roberts sang one old hymn, "When I Was Sinking Down," etc., and but few could follow. In the "old days" the singing of that hymn would have melted to tears.

And how serious was the effect of "Come, humble sinner, in whose breast," etc., in those days. There is no such music now.

Brother Roberts and the co-interested helpers are gratified at the interest, the consecration of scores of people in their public actions at the chancel. And more, that sinners were converted at the same altar where Keener and Marvin called the people to pray and find Christ.

REV. JOHN W. BOSWELL, D.D.

I met him first at a session of the Arkansas Conference at Clarksville in 1884. I was then editing the Southwestern Methodist in St. Louis. I engaged Dr. Boswell to represent the Arkansas Conference in the paper as correspondent and reporter of church news. In 1888, Bishop McTyeire wrote me to report to him the name of a man who would make a good assistant editor for the Christian Advocate. I sent the name of Dr. John W. Boswell. The bishop recognized the fitness of the man at once and wrote me that Boswell was chosen. I wrote Boswell congratulating him. He replied that my letter reached him before his notification of election and gave him his first knowledge of the matter.

During the years while Dr. Boswell was assistant editor of the Christian Advocate, and afterward when he was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and then of the Memphis Christian Advocate, I was also engaged in editorial work, and received Dr. Boswell's paper among my weekly exchanges; so we were associated editorially and by occasional personal correspondence.

To characterize Dr. Boswell in a general way, I would use the term "Faithful." I think there never was a more reliable man for work committed to his hands. He was always employed and never triflingly employed. He was industrious, serious, careful, correct. He was jealous of his work, loved his employment, and was contented. He had a logical mind and was alert, keeping in touch with the ongoing of the world; but he valued facts more than theories. In his thinking Dr. Boswell followed beaten paths. He was in harmony with the doctrines and institutions of his church; his one aim was to serve well his day and generation in the spheres which the church assigned him. His heart was warm, his companionship pleasant, his spiritual sky was clear. The sunset was cloudless and by the bright track of its golden car gave token of a goodly day to-morrow.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF TEMPTATION.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

Temptation is a fact that challenges the soul. It is the soul, and not the body, that is responsible for sin. The desires of the flesh are the medium through which temptation reaches the soul, but the seat of authority in a human life is in the soul. The body is both the medium through which temptation reaches the soul and the agent through which the purposes of the soul are realized, but it is the soul, and not the body, that is responsible for sin.

Satan has the most comprehensive knowledge of human nature of all intelligent creatures save God. He knows, antomatically, where any human being is the most vulnerable. There are but three planes upon which temptation can reach the soul: 1. The desires of the flesh. 2. Man's faith in God. 3. Man's lust for power and dominion. Satan has but one purpose in all temptation, viz., to destroy faith in and obedience to God in the life of saints. Satan does not bother to tempt sinners. He leaves them to the destruction of the forces of evil to which they have yielded in their own lives. Man's only pilot, man's only balance wheel is God. Faith in and obedience to God are the only possible means by which one can know how properly to adjust one's physical, one's intellectual and one's spiritual life. These three natures must be rightly adjusted, that out of the life may come peace, joy, happiness and life everlasting. Satan would no doubt be glad to have followers who are noble, kind, good and praiseworthy in all their life, save having faith in God. But when one's faith in God has been destroyed, one is like a vessel upon the ocean without a rudder, and like the watch without a balance wheel. Sin, corruption and death follow as a natural and inevitable result of losing faith in God.

The first and lowest basis upon which Satan tempts saints is upon the physical basis. Just as there was "forbidden fruit" in the Garden of Eden, so, too, is there "forbidden fruit" in the Eden in which every saint lives. There are many things that within themselves, when legitimately exercised and used, are not harmful and sinful, but helpful and beneficial. Yet when one exercises oneself in these same things upon an illegitimate basis, one does so to the destruction of one's soul because, as God's saint, it is forbidden to him. Before Satan can get a saint to indulge in the forbidden, there must first be created in the mind of the saint disbelief and distrust in the goodness and righteousness of God. Satan's words to Eve, "Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of the fruit of every tree of the gorden?" and "Ye shall not surely die," have been whispered to every saint since the first fall, down to the present day. Once the devil succeeds in making his suggestion of doubt take root in the mind of a saint, the work of evil and destruction begins in that life. When any saint regards the forbidden with the thought that he can indulge therein with impunity, he then begins to see within the forbidden things that are pleasing to the taste, beautiful to look upon, and desirable because of added wisdom through indulgence. Once the devil arouses doubt toward God in the soul of the saint, he leaves the saint to the influence and damnation of his own evil nature. Having lost faith in God, it is an easy matter to find a legitimate excuse for the performance of every evil desire that may suggest itself through the power of one's own evil nature. The desire for physical joys and pleasures is strong in the lives of all red-blooded humans. The saint who fails to watch and pray will fall into temptation through the desires of the flesh.

The second basis upon which Satan tempts saints is that of faith in God. He seeks to get the saint who resists temptation upon the lowest basis, to yield upon the basis of expecting God to care for him upon an unreasonable basis of fiath. "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, he will give his angels charge concerning thee," etc. Surely God will honor the faith of his child however expressed? No, even in our faith we must do his will. God requires that his children act with reason and common sense. No saint, however pure, holy and good, has the moral right to put God to test. Jesus expressed it, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Of course, Satan knew well and good that God will not take care of a saint who, contrary to good judgment, pulls a fool stunt just to try out God. What was Satan after, then, in this temptation? He tried to get Christ to put a false trust in God that he might thereby destroy Jesus' faith in God. God does not promise to care for saints except they are placed in unusual circumstances by himself, or through weakness and ignorance put themselves in unfavorable circumstances. That, however, is quite a different thing from a saint's deliberately walking into unreasonable and unthinkable circumstances just to try out God.

The third basis upon which Satan makes his appeal to a saint is through one's ambition for power, lordship and dominion. Usually saints who are strong enough to rise above the flesh and a false trust in God are persons who are capable of vaulting ambition. When a saint gets high up in the church and realizes that by a little unrighteous manipulation one can land oneself in a coveted place of power and dominion, the temptation is tremendously strong for one to heed the voice of the devil and make the necessary compromise to secure the coveted dominion. But when the devil came to Jesus with the proposition of devil worship (unrighteous self-exaltation is devil worship) that he might have mastery over the world, Jesus said, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." Looked at from the viewpoint of eternal consequences, devil worship, or unrighteous self-exaltation, is not worth the price that must be paid therefor. No saint can make an unholy self-aggrandizing alliance without first parting company with Jesus Christ. However much worldly wealth and dominion may be gotten by unrighteous manipulation, it is all too small a price for a saint to pay when he must thereby part company with God.

"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will with the temptation make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it." Clearly this does not mean that God will keep the saint from yielding to sin against his own decree and will. It means only that where God has co-operation in the life of the saint, it is impossible for that saint to fall. That is, when saints are like Christ in their attitude toward temptation, there can be no falling into sin. But when a saint is ready to listen to the devil's suggestions of disbelief in God, putting God to test, and selling out to the devil for power and dominion, it is impossible for God, upon the basis of man's free moral agency, to keep the saint from falling into sin. The saint who yields to the temptation for power and dominion always, whether successful or non-successful in his ambition, develops the pharisaical spirit and shows a ready disposition to chop off the heads of all others who cannot pronounce his Shibboleth.

"Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation."

Sardis, Miss.

THAT THEY MAY BE ONE.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Like a cradle, moving, rocking,
Swings the green earth on its way,
Over it the Father watching,
Guides its course from day to day.

Children cuddled on its bosom,
Laugh and weep in joy or woe,
Play their parts in Life's great drama,
Tired, sleep, and onward go.

The discipline of life makes for the strength of life. There can be no discipline, no struggle, no development of character worth the naming, without differences, opposing powers striving for supremacy on either side. The masterful souls of the ages have won the goal, not so much through the gift of genius, but rather by wise use of opportune occasions, and from trained experience forged into character. Man is a born struggler, a gladiator in the arena, a soldier on the field, a debater in the great House of Commons. So it is and so it shall be until the drama closes and the actors retire. This is the "age upon ages telling." There have been great questions settled or left unsettled in the past, but at no time in recorded history did ever before such perplexing and weighty problems cry out for answer and decision as now. In church and State these questions are ever recurring, and as Carlyle says, "Nothing is ever settled until settled right."

Possibly some thoughts on a great and momentous subject may help the question of uniting the two great bodies of Methodism in these United States. This is not merely a local or a national question; it is world-wide, and its decision is fraught with tremendous results to the kingdom of God on the earth. John Wesley's lofty claim of a world for a parish is being duly accredited and made good by his followers to-day. "Africa's sunny fountains," "India's coral strand," "Ceylon's spicy breezes" are no mere poetic euphemisms to this imperial church. Lone and far off indeed is that nation which has not been found by the Methodist missionary, with his gospel of free grace and full salvation. The eyes of the world are on us while we grapple with the factors and issues of this measure. That in union is strength and success, and in disunion weakness and failure, is a principle as old as Aesop, while the experiences of the ages more and more vindicate its truth. Never was a great campaign won with a disunited army, never was a great State founded and maintained until its people were bound and knit together by a common purpose and a common interest. The fires of patriotism burn brightly on altars consecrated to liberty, yet liberty is only a vague, indefinite term to those who are not united. If we believe what we preach, that Methodism is the best expression of God's Kingdom in the world to-day, this will settle the question at once and for all time. For no man of us can intelligently read that marvelous high priestly prayer, which rose like a swelling fountain from the heart of our blessed Lord, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of St. John's gospel and then deny that he would have his kingdom one in the world—one in purpose, one in zeal, one in faith, love, joy and peace. If we are not, in some measure, at least, heirs and sharers of this Kingdom, for which he prayed with the shadow of the cross resting on his suppliant form, we had best quit making this lofty claim. This is deep water, but if a man can't swim he had better not play in deep water. The history of no nation is more sad and tragic than that of Judah and Israel, with altar waged against altar, king against king, the North against the South, and in the end ruin and desolation. Mount Gerezim or Jerusalem, where liveth the true God? The woman at Jacob's well with her question was an echo of ages of disunion. A real spiritual gospel cannot be localized. If we do not unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church, it is high time to drop the suffix "South," unless we have the spirit of Samaritan and Jew of that elder day. A localized church is a travesty on the Great Commission. The South is truly a land of promise, with all the boasted splendor of climate, soil and people, yet the kingdom of God is somewhat larger. Of all the dark clouds that have overspread our human horizon, none have been deeper, darker and denser than this human scorn of human brotherhood. It is this spirit of intolerance which has lighted lurid martyr fires along the pathway of the ages, built dungeons wherein were immured princely souls, of whom the world was not worthy, and the oppressors fondly imagined that the narrow, vengeful, passionate hatred of men was for the glory of God. But enough on this line. May the riches of grace in Christ our Light give all a clearer, wider vision.

The youth of the church, eager, enthusiastic, rich in the affluence of coming years, with present promise, organized in Leagues and classes, are turning their faces suuward, looking for the coming day. No dissenting voice is heard among them. Their fresh youug hearts are kindled into a flame of ardent love and zeal at the thought of a united Methodism marshaling her forces to win the world and lay the redeeemed nations, trophies at the teet of their loved Lord. These are impatient at the lagging pace of the church in consummating this pending plan for unification, and are voicing in no uncertain tones their decisions in favor of the same. If this present body of men who have the influence and authority to decide this matter on the favorable terms now offered Southern Methodism do not do so, a more propitious day may come when the coming generation may close the covenant to our disadvantage. Rejected opportunity has defeated and hindered great movements for the betterment of humanity in the past. Delay is dangerous when opportune and strategic measures are at stake. "Strike while the iron is hot," is an old adage, old as the smithy's hammer and anvil. You cannot do much welding after the forge fires die. Great opportunities demaud immediate and courageous action. However, we do hope to keep the altar fires burning until their heat and glow shall warm every loyal Methodist heart in these United States of America, and the light of this United Church, with "One Lord, one faith, oue baptism," of holy purpose and sanctified love, shall stir and quicken the faith of all who name the name of Jesus.

UNIFICATION—JUSTICE DEMANDS REFERENDUM.

By Charles Strong.

Should the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church, all of the churches, hospitals, schools aud other property, amounting in value to many millions, cease to be the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and become the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a separate and distinct organization.

The government of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North and South, is, in each instance, an oligarchy, iu that it is the purpose of the church to have the ministry, men who have consecrated their lives to the service of the Master, select certain devout laymen to assist in the management of the church affairs, and they in turn are self-perpetuating. The government does not provide for leaving any of the business affairs of the church to the membership, believing that it is for the best interest of the church that the body of the membership be concerned solely with the vital purpose of the church, the salvation of souls.

The property of the church is held by trustees, and the trustees are selected by the minister and stewards. The trustees hold the property in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The church, however, does permit the membership to participate in the contributions, and with the contributions of the members the property owned by the church was purchased, and the ministry, schools, teachers and missionaries are supported by the funds received from the members, and in securing these funds representations were made the members that the money was to be used in certain definite expenditures, all for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The property of the church is held by the trustees in trust, and it is without doubt true that to divert the trust money or property from the purposes or organization for which it was given is a misuse of trust funds and dishonest unless the consent of the donor is received.

The world war was fought to save the world for democracy; and although the church may not in the past have allowed the members to speak as such, still it is recognized now in the matters of government, that constitutional questions and important changes in laws and government should be left to a vote of the people, and our church is not so bound by precedent that they are unwilling to see that justice is done.

There are hundreds of thousands of members of the Southern Church who love their church, and who feel that the issue should be regularly submitted to the members, all of whom would accept the verdict and abide the result, but who are not willing to allow this matter to be put over without a direct submission of the issue by those who for one cause or another favor unification. And these hundreds of thousands of members feel that their self-respect will not allow them to remain in a church where this has been done.

I feel that our church will stand united, and we will meet problems of the future together if a fair deal is given the membership, but that an attempt should not be made to lure them into a union by representing that the proposed plan will save them from race embarrassment except temporarily. In other words, be open, truthful, and frank, let the sunlight in, and say to them that after the union the Methodist Episcopal Church will be a United Church in the United States, and that the majority will rule as in other assemblages, for a statement that the majority will never control does not rise to the dignity of respectable nonsense, and should not be argued by right-thinking, conscientious people.

Both sides of this great controversy, brought on us and not by us, should exercise Christian kindness to each other. We should not disrupt our church that we all love, and trample ruthlessly on the hearts of thousands of lifelong Methodists and drive them from the church unless there is great reason therefor, and not then unless there is a full, free, and fair presentation of the true issue to the entire membership. Above all things, let us be honest, and not divert trust funds and trust property except by the consent of the giver.

To this end permit me to suggest to every right-thinking Methodist that at each Annual Conference at the close of this year a resolution be passed to concur with the other Conferences and have a vote on some certain day, and settle this question forever, and that the matter be fully and frankly presented to the members by advocates of both sides, and that when this is done that we abide by the result.

Macon, Miss.

UNIFICATION.

By T. C. Harvey.

This important matter should be discussed without rancor or prejudice. We discredit our intelligence when we insinuate that our representatives agreed to a plan which would betray us. We discount our piety when we imagine that our Northern brethren are seeking to beguile us into a trap and destroy us. We do not speak wisely when we smear the minority of our own "beloved bishops" with honeyed words "good and great," because that minority agrees with our prejudices; while we sneer at the majority of our own "beloved bishops" because they use their God-given privilege to exercise the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free.

It is true that the plan approved at Chattanooga lacked only some fifty votes of being defeated; but let it not be forgotten that the opposition was some fifty votes less than one-third of the total vote. Is it reasonable to conclude that all wisdom and goodness resided in that small minority, while folly and betrayal lurked in the two-thirds plus fifty? The plan absolutely protects us by specifically providing that no measure can pass the unified body unless such measure shall receive a majority of our own delegates voting separately—no action can be taken by the unified body voting as a whole; it must secure a majority of our own representatives. Supposo the representatives of the North cast, say, eight hundred votes for a measure and none against it, while our representatives cast one hundred and seventy-five votes for the measure and one hundred and seventy-six against it. What would result? The one hundred and seventy-six votes would prevail over the nine hundred and seventy-five votes. That provision was made for our own assurance. Yet good men conjure and shudder.

The Negro bugaboo should be tabbo—this is not an election for senator in Mississippi! The two Negro bishops in the Northern Methodist Church have never presided over an Annual Conference of whites, and will never preside over an Annual Conference of whites in the South. Those bishops serve their own people just as the Negro bishops to whom we gave "Apostolic succession" serve their people. Was any delegate, uni or antl, hurt by the presence and prayers of good Bishop Lane, Negro, who was welcomed to the platform by "our own dear Bishop Candler and our own dear Bishop Mouzon?" If so, why did not some negrophobist arise and protest? Let us not be children.

In Mississippi we will never know any difference after unification. In Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Kansas, Oklahoma, and all the great West, our common Methodism is shamed by the presence of two Methodisms where but one should exist, and even one frequently finds existence difficult. Over that shame angels weep and devils snigger. They also weep and snigger over the sin of attempting to explain to a heathen Chinee the difference between "North" and "South" in religion. It is said that in "our own beloved Southern Methodist General Conference at Chattanooga" only two votes against unification were cast by delegates west of the Mississippi River—that must be an exaggerated statement.

Ninety-eight per cent of Southern Methodist preachers followed the lead of great and good Woodrow Wilson, and now favor a league of all nations of the earth, composed of nearly two billion people with varying degrees of mental equipment and development and with divergent moral concepts and ideals, scattered over the entire surface of the earth, twenty-five thousand miles around the globe; and yet many of that ninety-eight per cent oppose the unification of two Methodist churches, made up of one people of one blood, one history, with identical church government and doctrinal belief, dwelling in one nation. Let some anti reconcile those two variant views.

For a decade Mississippi has been a hissing and a by-word because of narrow, crass provincialism; let not Mississippi Methodism adorn herself with cast-off clothing of political obscurantism.—The Big Brother.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

DON'T HOLD BACK FORGOTTEN MAN MONEY—SEND IT TO THE BOARD.

Thousands of dollars have been collected by the charges on their quotas for Superannuate Endowment, but they have not been sent to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo. What a pity, and especially so as we are just a-begging for them. Let these dollars come forward at once. Endowment money not invested is money with all the lift taken out of it. Don't get the Put-it-off-skie habit, but clean up as you go along. Promptness invariably pays big dividends, but delay levies a heavy tax. A city may be known by its streets and a country by its roads, but a preacher reveals himself by the way he meets responsibility.

A QUARTERLY CONFERENCE SCENE.

It is the third quarterly conference of lost-motion charge. The presiding elder takes the chair and calls the meeting to order. He calls the usual questions and receives the usual answers. Then he says: "Now, brethren, here is a new question which the General Conference requires me to ask at every quarterly conference, 'What has been raised during the quarter for Superannuate Endowment, and has the amount been sent to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo?'" The pastor, knowing that a considerable sum has been raised for this purpose, lifts his eyes in expectancy. The Treasurer of the charge Special Effort committee announces a definite amount as having been raised for this purpose. "But," he says, "I have it in a local bank, waiting until more can be collected." The presiding elder, pleased that an amount has actually been raised but disappointed that it has not been sent to the Board, says, "Brother, don't you know that this is dead money so far as helping the superannuate is concerned, until it is sent to the Board in St. Louis and invested? Don't you realize that your failure to send it produces a lost motion in this wonderful program? Please let it go forward to-morrow."

The treasurer of the charge Special Effort Committee promises faithfully to do his duty—but, alas, he belongs to Lost-Motion charge. He has the money in Lost-Motion bank. He breathes a lost-motion atmosphere and lives a lost-motion life. Therefore the money raised by his charge for Superannuate Endowment continues its lost motion.

Maybe you think the foregoing is overstated. The truth is, it is a very mild picture of what is actually going on this very day in hundreds of charges of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whenever anything like this happens, somebody has to pay. In this case it is the superannuated preacher. The very charge, probably, that he served so faithfully in his years of active service, now makes him pay a severe premium on its lost motion. Is it fair? Is there any justice in it? Is it in acocrdance with the gospel we preach? Nay, it shames us.

This quarterly conference of lost-motion charge could appropriately have adjourned its meeting by having the treasurer of the charge Special Effort committee sing as a solo the first verse of the grand old hymn that we all love so much, with the changes as indicated in the following:

A charge to keep I have,
A self to glorify;
A never dying task to shirk,
While crucial days go by.

FIGHT AGAINST FAILURE—WORK FOR SUCCESS.

Hundreds of charges have determined to pay the first year one-fifth or more of their total quotas, and they are doing it. They refused to listen to the whining voice of failure, but inclined their ear to the inspiring music of success. And just see what has happened as a result:

Sutton-Flatwoods, Western Virginia, Fairmont, Rev. J. E. Brown, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,845; amount remitted, $369.

First Church (Decatur), North Georgia, North Atlanta. Rev. G. M. Eakes, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,975; amount remitted, $2,167.15.

Macco, Louisville, Owensboro, Rev. F. J. Sanders, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,111.11; amount remitted, $244.

Epworth Church (Knoxville), Holston, Knoxville, Rev. Charles Lee Cox, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,840; amount remitted, $378.

Okeechobee, Florida, Orlando, Rev. F. L. Crowson, pastor; total assnmed quota, $1,500; amount remitted, $305.

Titusville, Florida. Palatka, Rev. R. A. Selby, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,325; amount remitted, $372.50.

Hay Street Church (Fayetteville), North Carolina, Fayetteville, Rev. H. A. Humble, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,000; amount remitted, $1,055.

Columbus, West Texas, Austin, Rev. A. I. Townsley, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,820; amount remitted, $389.

Emory, Holston, Abingdon, Rev. J. C. Orr, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,500; amount remitted, $500.

First Church (Tampa), Florida. Tampa, Rev. H. F. Tolle, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,068; amount remitted, $1,168.

Keywood Circuit, Holston, Abingdon, Rev. Devid M. Graybeal, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,368; amount remitted, $368.90.

First Church (Rocky Mount), North Carolina, Washington, Rev. H. M. North, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,000; amount remitted, $3,300.

Franklin, Louisville, Bowling Green, Rev. C. O. Sledge, pastor; total assumed quota, $675; amount remitted, $135.

Brownsville, West Texas, Beeville, Rev. O. C. Crow, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,000; amount remitted, $400.

McKendree Church (Nashville), Tennessee, Nashville, Rev. H. B. Trimble, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,034; amount remitted, $2,156.65.

Cambria, Illinois, Murphysboro, Rev. O. T. Rogers, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,000; amount remitted, $238.59.

Lady Lake, Florida, Ocala, Rev. T. J. Nolan, pastor; total assumed quota, $950; amount remitted, $213.75.

Kerrville, West Texas, Kerrville, Rev. F. A. White, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,881; amount remitted, $378.82.

Norman, West Oklahoma. Oklahoma City, Rev. L. S. Barton, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,590; amount remitted, $522.50.

East Helena. Northwest, Montana. Rev. T. B. Reagan, pastor; total assumed quota, $500; amount remitted, $103.

First Church (Orlando), Florida. Orlando, Rev. I. C. Jenksin, pastor; total assumed quota, $7,500; amount remitted, $2,100.

Institutional Church (Kansas City), Southwest Missouri, Kansas City, Rev. I. T. Cameron, pastor; total assumed quota, $775; amount remitted, $161.

THE PREACHER CAN WHO THINKS HE CAN.

While writing the copy for this page the postman handed me a letter from the pastor of —— charge, and its contents are so heartening that I quote from the letter as follows: "My charge's quota for the first year is $392. I have $200 of it on time deposit, due Sept. 1. I have $108 more in the bank now, making a total in cash secured of $508.16, or $83.84 short of the amount due the first year. I have several plans to secure this balance, such as a 'Chicken Day Gathering,' a 'Musicale' and a 'Black Handkerchief Party.' I confidently expect to hand you a $400 check at Conference. My people have not taken to this thing. No one would serve on the committee, and the preacher has had to carry the load. I had a Fall Festival which netted me $65, a Bake Sale which cleared $29, an Easter Egg Donation of $6 and a Muiscal Comedy which raised $30, one gift of $50, two gifts of $20 each, and the balance in dribbles. They cannot count me out until the last tick of the clock or until the gong of the last round of the scrap: I'll be there with a check for you, but I wanted to secure in cash the total amount for the first year before sending any at all. This charge is like the old gray mare, 'She ain't what she uster was.' The standbys are dead or going fast, and worst of all there is a terrible lack of spirituality. I have never quit on a job yet, so you will get the check at Conference."

Gee, how I love a man who has such a fighting spirit! Of course, he will raise the $400, for he thinks he can! I just want to hug him. The only mistake that he is making is holding the money he has in hand until he gets enough to pay the first year in full. If he would send the Board what he has as he has it, and keep on getting more and sending that as he gets it, he would be very close to perfection in the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment. Certainly he should not wait to hand me the check at the meeting of his Annual Conference. The check should be sent to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., and in time to get his receipt for the amount to present to the statistical secretaries at his Annual Conference. I am not scolding this brother, but just calling his attention to these matters which are vitally important for the proper condnct of this business. I am for him because he is for the Fogotten Man.

I WILL PRINT IT UNTIL YOU DO IT!

What do I mean? Just this: All money raised on quotas for Superannuate Endowment must be sent direct to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo. When making remittances to the Board the book of Remittance Forms which was sent to every charge in care of the pastor should be used. If this book has not been received or has been misplaced, another can be secured on application to the Board. If you want credit for the amount raised the first year on your quota in Statistical Table No. 4 in your Annual Conference Minutes, the amount must reach the Board of Finance in St. Louis by the time of the meeting of your Annual Conference. If you fail to get credit in the minutes for what you raise this Conference year, do not blame the Board of Finance but blame yourself, for we will do our part if you do yours.

SUMMER IS SWIFTLY PASSING.

By Willie C. Page.

Summer is swiftly passing, like the white sails
o'er the sea,
Counting out the golden moments in profusion glad and free;
On her sails are many colors, amethyst, emerald,
gold, and brown;
And she flaunts her banners gaily, the earth and sea around;
In silver tones birds are chanting farewell hymns of joy and praise,
To the beauty and the glory of the passing sunlit days.

Summer is swiftly passing; soon just a memory
it will seem,
Sweeping o'er the heartstrings like the music of a dream;
Soon the rose will fold her tents, the lily her robe of white—
Enjoy the beauty of the earth and sun, the enchantment of the night,
Rose-leaf dawns, gold-glimmering stars, the gladness everywhere,
Gay-winged harps, woodland treasures, jewels that perfume the air.

The summer life is swiftly passing. Have we made a song
To make the world bright and better as the moments sped along?
Helped some one with burdens, weary troubles, trials, and sorrows new?
Did we lift them up, give them our cloak, put the hard task through?
Have we been patient, kind, forgiving, thankful for each blessing sent?
If not, hasten to lay up treasure before the golden hours are spent.

MUD-COLOR.

By Lena B. Ellingwood.

Janette sat on the lowest step of the front piazza, her brows puckered in a worried little brown. It was a weighty matter that held her attention—that is, if you could call a very small scrap of tatting weighty. Janette's little fingers were spread out stiffly, holding her tatting thread in place.

It was hard work—oh, very bothersome work; and Janette, taking a long breath and resting from her labors for a minute, watched enviously the lightning movements of Big Sister's tatting shuttle as it flashed back and forth.

Then she looked at her own tatting. It was not handsome—even Janette couldn't call it so. And the hours that had gone into its making!

"How do you keep yours so clean?" she asked.

"What, my tatting?" asked Big Sister, smiling.

"Yes! All the dirt in this world just flies on to mine, and sticks there!" answered Janette. "Do they have brown tatting thread at the stores?"

"Very likely! Why?" asked Big Sister, whose name was Natalie. (That name was always a grievance to Janette.) "Why didn't I have a pretty name, too?" she sometimes asked. "Then folks wouldn't call me 'Nettie'—just like an old hair-net!"

"Why," she answered Natalie's question, "if the thread was brown the dirt wouldn't show on it! I'm making it to put on a handkerchief for grandma; s'poso she'd like brown?"

"I'm sure she'd love any tatting you made for her, whatever the color," was Natalie's polite answer. Her lips were sober, though her eyes smiled. Natalie's own tatting was blue and white, beautifully clean.

"I know one thing," declared Janette. "I can never, never learn to make two-thread tatting, like yours. Why, you work with the same shuttle all the time, and some of it comes out blue, and some of it white! I guess a fairy must live inside of your shuttle."

Janette broke her tatting thread with a determined air.

"There!" she said. "I'll use that piece of tatting to trim Leola's bonnet." Leola was a tiny doll which lay beside her on the step. "I want to keep it always, for it's the very first I ever made, and maybe I'll show it to my grandchildren some time—if I can wash it clean. I'll get that brown thread next time I go down street—if somebody'll give me a dime for it."

"Look!" whispered Natalie. "Don't move! See how close that phoebe-bird has come!"

In silence they watched the little bird, which had lighted on a spray of the syringa close by.

"Phoe-be! Phoe-be!" it called, then with a flirt of its tail, flew away.

Janette spoke. "Daddy said yesterday he thought a pair of phoebes were building a nest up under the piazza roof, but I forgot to look for it." She sprang up, and went searching for signs of the nest.

"Come here, Natalie!" she called a minute later, from the side piazza. "See? Just on that cross-piece under the end—up close to the house. Queer we didn't find it before!" And she pointed to a little nest, nearly finished. "Phoebe was up there, and flew away when I came. How do they build them, anyway?"

"Oh, they bring little sticks—and things," said Natalie, a little vaguely, "and plaster them together with wet clay or mud."

Just then came a welcome sound.

"Daddy's getting out the auto!" exclaimed Janette. "I'm going to ask him to take me to ride, and let me get grandma's brown thread!"

Janette was slow in coming in to supper that night when her mother called, and her face was puckered anxiously when she came.

"I can't find my tatting for Leola's bonnet anywhere in this world!" she announced. "And I know I left it on the piazza steps when I went to ride with daddy—right side of Leola herself. And I suspicion," she added sternly, looking at her brother, "that Jackie hid it, to plague me!"

"I never!" denied Jackie indignantly. "Prob'bly Leola threw it away, so she wouldn't have to wear the stuff!"

A quarrel might have followed, had not the maid brought in a beautiful shortcake just then, piled high with strawberries and cream, which completely absorbed the attention of both children.

A few days passed. Janette was sitting on the piazza steps working on grandma's brown tatting, which was progressing so well that papa said he really must buy Janette a silver tatting shuttle as a reward of merit.

Jackie came rushing around the corner of the house.

"There are eggs in that phoebe's nest!" he cried. "I climbed up the piazza post and saw them!"

Janette jumped up, dropping her work.

"Daddy, daddy!" she called, rushing out to where her father was fastening the crimson rambler to its new trellis. "Come lift me up where I can see phoebe's eggs!"

Father was interested, too, and left the crimson rambler waving in the breeze.

"My, but you're growing heavy!" he said, as he lifted Janette.

"Oh, how pretty! One, two, three, four"—then she gave such a surprised jump her father almost dropped her.

"There's something else in that nest beside phoebe eggs" she shrieked. "It's my tatting I lost! Phoebe was the thief. She liked it, and trimmed her nest with it, 'cause it just about matches the color of her mud-plaster!"—Zion's Herald.

FIRST FEED YOUR CAT.

Years ago I lived in the same apartment house with a professional idealist.

He was such a superior person that I used to feel quite ill at ease in his presence. He talked about social revolution, economic readjustment and other matters I do not understand, and was frankly contemptuous of our middle-class habits and philosophies.

But I noticed a slight rip in the fine garment of his perfection. His soul was so much absorbed with nobler thoughts that he neglected the little detail of supporting his wife and child. He did not pay his bills. And when he went away for the summer he left his cat in the hallway.

We had to feed the cat.

Now, I am content to have you label yourself an "Idealist," a "Liberal," or even a "Reformer," provided you don't assume that this gives you the right to ride free on the world and criticize the paying passengers. • • •

I am an ineffectual being in an imperfect world. But if you are going to appoint yourself to act as my preceptor and guide, I insist that you first feed your cat.—Bruce Barton in the Red Book Magazine.

Rev. H. S. Johns, chaplain of the Louisiana State Penitentiary, is attending the National Prison Congress in Salt Lake City.

Dr. R. G. Moulton, emeritus professor in Chicago University and well known throughout the world for his literary labors, died recently in England.

Mr. W. S. Holmes and Mr. S. M. Russ, prominent Methodist laymen of Baton Rouge, La., honored the Advocate office with a call while in New Orleans one day last week.

Central Church, Columbus, Miss., is planning for an "all-day singing" next Sunday. Singers from both Mississippi and Alahama are expected to take part.

Miss Ida Sue Mars, of Hattiesburg, Miss., informs us that her sainted father and mother were subscribers to the Advocate from its first issue. She, of course, continues to take it.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, accompanied by his family, has had a delightful visit to Lake Junaluska, N. C., making the trip in his car.

The name of Rev. J. F. Dring, of Sibley, La., appears on the honor roll of the Correspondence School, Southern Methodist University, in the Class of the First Year.

Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Williams, of Lake Charles, La., are visiting friends and relatives in Alabama. They expect to return home about Sept. 1. Brother Williams is presiding elder of the Lake Charles District.

Miss Virginia Cooper, daughter of Dr. I. W. Cooper, has just completed work for the Master of Arts degree at Southern Methodist University. She will enter the work of the Young Women's Christian Association.

We learn that prospects are bright for a large enrollment at the opening of the next session of Millsaps College. The plans for the new library building have been approved, and work on it is expected to begin soon.

Rev. C. C. Wier, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week. He was returning home from Wiergate, Texas, where he had been conducting a successful revival meeting.

The Louisiana State Epworth League will conduct a series of institutes throughout the Conference, from Aug. 20 to Sept. 13. Mr. Edgar E. Cayard, of New Orleans, is president of the State organization, and Rev. J. B. Grambling is the field secretary.

Rev. J. Allison Molloy, pastor of Tulip Street Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn., died on Aug. 15. He was formerly presiding elder of the Nashville District, in which position he achieved distinction as one of the best presiding elders in the church.

James W. Sells, who has been successful in young people's work for quite a time, has several open dates this fall for revival meetings with the young people. He is especially desirous of working with rural churches that have large numbers of young people. He may be reached by wire or letter at 1144 Bailey Ave., Jackson, Miss.

Rev. M. A. Massey, pastor, and Mr. Wm. Stead, secretary, request us to announce that the Salem Camp Meeting will begin on Friday morning, Oct. 10, and close on Sunday night, Oct. 19. Rev. W. C. Swope, of Charleston, Mo., will do the preaching. Mr. A. B. Goff will have charge of the music, with Mrs. Goff at the piano. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend the services.

Rev. Thurston B. Price, evangelist, and Mr. W. G. Waltermire, gospel singer, are engaged in a great tent meeting at Evergreen, Ala., the meeting to continue until Sept. 7. After that date Mr. Waltermire will have open time until Oct. 5, which he would be glad to spend in Mississippi. If any brother desires to secure his services, he may communicate with Mr. Waltermire, by wire or letter, at the above address.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of Laurel, Miss., has just closed at Wheeler, on the Wheeler charge, North Mississippi Conference, what is said by the oldest citizens to have been one of the best revivals ever held in that town. The meeting resulted in 13 additions to the church, and on the closing night more than 100 people rededicated their lives to God. The pastor, Rev. W. C. McCay, is doing a fine work and is in high favor with his people.

Prof. W. L. Summers, Associate Professor of Religious Education in Millsaps College, has resigned his position, with the expectation of pursuing his studies further in Emory University. Prof. J. T. Hooker has been elected to succeed him. Prof. Hooker is an A. B. and M. A. graduate of Wofford College, and has finished three years of graduate work in religious education in Boston University, receiving the Master's degree in that department. He has been a missionary in Korea, and comes to his work at Millsaps highly recommended by President Snyder, of Wofford, and Dean Athearn, of the School of Religious Education of Boston University.

We announce with very great sorrow the death of Miss Virginia Alford, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. L. E. Alford, of the Mississippi Conference, at the Touro Infirmary, this city, on Monday morning at 7 o'clock. She had undergone an operation a few days previously for an affliction with which she had suffered from childhood. Her father and mother were with her at the end. She was an accomplished young woman, having an A. B. degree from Whitworth College, and being engaged in work looking to a degree from Tulane University. The body was carried to McComb City, Miss., for interment. The Advocate extends deepest sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

FROM THE DECATUR DEN.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Let somebody hand Dr. Davies a banana, and while he slowly peels and eats it, let me enlighten him about the way the "horder" stands on unification. The Baltimore Conference has long been a debatable field. Well, from letters received from leading men over that way I feel very hopeful for our side. I have written two little tracts, "Be Not Deceived," and "The Parable of Jonah," both against unification, and here are orders from the Baltimore Conference for hundreds of copies for distribution. I expect to be over there next week, and will see how the land lies. We have just begun the fight to save ourselves. How is West Virginia? I spoke in Fairmount and in Clarksburg, Stonewall Jackson's home, and in both places my sentiments were applauded to the echo. One of the leading laymen in that Conference said: "Keep up the fight, Steel, and we will win!" He may depend on my keeping it up. How about "Old Kaintuck?" I am just back from there. I spoke to large audiences, and they cheered my anti-unification sentiments. I met preachers in the round table conference, and they were all opposed to this plan. I put a lot of my tracts on the platform, and there was a rush to gobble them up. I talked with many persons privately, and all are opposed to unification on this plan, except one lady, the secretary of Dr. Ellis. When I learned who she was, I thought of an incident of Margaret Fuller, who said, "I accept the universe." When old Carlyle heard of her remark, he said: "Egad, she'd better." Ellis' secretary "had better." I believe Kentucky will turn this plan down. Missouri? Ransford says it is "unanimous" for unification, and declined to print what I sent him; the plain inference from which is that he is afraid to let them hear both sides. The pastor of one of our largest churches in Missouri told me that 80 per cent of his membership are opposed to this plan, but he "dared not say a word." I have not been a Methodist preacher fifty-seven years not to know what that means. I don't give up Missouri by a long shot.

Give Davies another banana, or something stronger, while I tell him about Arkansas. Dr. Millar told me as I boarded the train here for Chattanooga that he knew of only three people in Arkansas who opposed unification, one man and two old ladies; all of them, I inferred from the way he talked, eligible for admission to the home for imbeciles. I wrote to the man I supposed he meant in Little Rock to congratulate him on being like Milton's Abdiel, among the rebel angels,

"Among the faithless, faithful only he."

He replied, saying he appreciated Dr. Millar's intended compliment, if he meant him, but it would have to be distributed among so many that it would hardly go round. A Pennsylvania Yankee like Dr. Millar ought to be better informed than he seems to be. They are usually mighty shrewd. Jernigan, a real Arkansan, says he preached on the plan, saying everything he could for it and against it, and took a vote of those present. There were forty-one Methodists present, forty voted against the plan, and one did not vote. Jernigan voted against it, which made forty-one in that bunch. If we had a referendum of the whole membership of the Southern Methodist Church, that is about the way it would go from Baltimore to San Diego. Our people don't want this plan, and I hope will not adopt it. Our people are waking up to what it means to put the great church which for nearly eighty years has been at successful work in the power of the Northern majority.

Some "pious" folks tell me "I must love my enemies." Tommyrot! I don't consider the Northern Methodists my "enemies," but friends from whom I honestly differ on many questions that enter vitally into the whole subject of our relation to each other. Dr. Joy, editor of the New York Advocate, hugged me right out in public at Chattanooga. I didn't see him hug Carley, though the youugster is ready to haul down his flag and surrender, loek, stock and barrel. Joy said: "I am an unreeonstrueted Northerner and you are an unreeonstueted Southerner; so we balance eaeh other," and he gave me the fraternal hug. It is not a question of loving enemies, but of practical wisdom in the serviee of our Lord. If the Northern Methodists ean do any good here in the South, let them do all the good they can; but do not embarrass our usefuluess by yoking together two utterly dissimilar parties. Dissimilar? Yes, sir. How can two walk together unless they be agreed? A house divided against itself cannot stand. Your united Methodist Church would be divided against itself on the race question. The Southern people, years ago, foreseeing with wonderful prevision the inevitable results of the liberation of the slaves, decided that it is best for both the white and colored people that they should be kept separate. The results of fifty years have amply vindicated the wisdom of that policy. The Negroes of the South have made, and are making now, steady progress. The most friendly relations exist between us, and we are more and more trying to help the backward race; but we are resolved to do it in our own way. But the Northern Methodist Church said at their reeent General Conferenee that our way is directly opposed to the teaching of Jesus, and that they will refuse to recognize as valid any discrimination on account of raee or color. They put themselves squarely in antagonism to our Southern policy of handling this difficult problem. You say they do not intermingle with the colored people any more than we do. Then they are ineonsistent; they violate the teaehings of Jesus, accordiug to the resolution of their General Conferenee. But they do mix with them in the North, and the Negro delegates in the General Conference voted unanimously for this plan because, they said, it would mean a "new era for them in the South." That is nonsense. If the Southern Methodists adopt this plan, it will not alter the status of the Negro at all; it will simply shut the door to Methodism in the Negro districts of the South.

THAT MINORITY REPORT.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

The preachers of the Episcopal District over which I have the honor to preside are receiving through the mails a pamphlet of forty pages entitled, "The Minority Report." It is natural to suppose that it is being sent throughout the church. This is the address read to the special session of the General Conferenee by Bishop Denny under the name of "a Minority Report," which the Conference received as a minority report on unifieation. Concerning the performance of the Bishop in presenting this document to the Conference, Dr. George R. Stuart, of First Church, Birmingham, spoke as follows:

"My brethren and sisters of the General Conference, we are asked this hour to adopt what was designated as a minority report. I would not impugn any man's motive, and everything must stand on its own merits. I want to congratulate Bishop Denny on presenting to this body the cleverest and most unanswerablo paper ever put before a body. It is clever in these respeets: Bishop Denny evidently in tho silent hours of the night took all the speeches and all the books in the history at his command and prepared the most masterful speeeh that he was eapable of preparing, and brought it to this body under the semblance of a mere minority report. He brought it at the psyeehological moment, on the second day, between 11 and 12 o'clock, immediately after the report of the Commission, and the Commissioner did not open his mouth on his report. And he asked us to take a carefully prepared speech with all kinds of stuff in it—I mean all kinds of material in it—legal lore and history and everything else. And there is not a man here that would endorse the whole of it. I just thought while he was reading it with everything in it, what would be the result to the great Southern Methodist Church if we were to adopt a thing like that and call it a report. Now listen. I say it is unanswerable. Why? Beeause it covers the argument made in the College of Bishops. And by common eonsent the bishops have not asked the floor. Therefore, his colleagues cannot answer that speeeh, and it goes down in our records without a carefully prepared document from the Conference. In the next place, this small minority of the Commissioners came before this Conferenee in a long, prepared speech, and not a member of the Commission, as a Commissioner, has a right to this floor in reply. You all know I am right on this. How could it be otherwise? The facts are before you. Now I do not impugn Bishop Denny's motive; but sometimes we get over-zealous and allow ourselves to be drawn into positions that make it exeeedingly critical for a great ehureh. I want to say that I would not undertake to take up these articles seriatim unless I had the manuscript, unless you would give me a week." (See Dally Advoeate).

Judge John S. Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., said, among other things, to the General Conference eoneerning this "Minority Report":

"I have listened along with you with great interest to the wonderful preparation emanating from the most wonderful mind that I think has been known to the world from the ereation of Adam through Methuselah and all the way down to Alf Smith. I doubt eapitally whether there is any man anywhere in this creation from Greenland's iey mountains to India's coral strand that could have grouped in one paper as many different things to appeal, possibly not intentionally, but from the order of the mind and its peculiar arrangement, to every prejudice that may be found to exist in any mind anwhere in this country. We listened to the wonderful correlation of ancient history from 1784 down to the third day of July, 1924; and if anybody ever connected with the Methodist Episeopal Chnreh has ever dotted an i or erossed a t, or ever said or done anything that might be offensive to the sensibilities of anybody south of Mason and Dixon's Line, your attention has been carefully called to it." (See Daily Advocate.)

I am very glad to learn that the preachers of Missouri and Colorado have received this docnment. That it ean only be called a Minority Report, by courtesy, I think most of our people will agree.

The pamphlet is accompanied by a special sheet, unsigned, printed in red ink, headed "Important," in large letters, whieh eontains among other things the following: "If the Annnal Conferenees should adopt it, referring to the plan of unification, our church would be speedily disintegrated and absorbed by the Northern Church." This statement is unsigned and, of course, is intended to create the impression upon our people that their interests have not been cared for in the formation of the plan of unification. The General Conference which met in Chattanooga on July 2, manifestly did not believe this statement represented the facts, and I agree with the General Conference. We are given every protection and every right under the plan that is given to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and stand upon an exaetly equal platform with them. If, with full authority to control our own affairs and without change in our present order or law, exeept as we agree to it, we cannot save ourselves from "disintegration and absorption," then I do not hesitate to say that the time has come for us to be absorbed.

If, after reading the "Minority Report," any brother should feel the need of diversion in the way of something fresh and up-to-date, I suggest getting a copy of "Dust and Ashes of Empire," by Dr. W. A. Shelton. not long since published by our house at Nashville.

BIG BROTHERS OPPOSE UNIFICATION.

At the meeting of the Big Brothers class on Sunday, July 27, a very important matter was taken up. There was a good attendance, more than 100 being present, when Judge Percy Bell rose and asked the indulgence of the class while he stated his understanding and position on the pending unification plan. He spoke very calmly, analyzing the plan, pointing out its defects, and explaining his opposition to it. At the end of his statement the President asked if there was any further discussion, and there being none, the class adopted, without a dissenting vote, the following resolution:

Resolution.

Whereas, there is now before the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a proposed plan of unification with the Methodist Episcopal Church, which plan is to be voted on by the North Mississippi Conference with others; and,

Whereas, we feel that all members and organizations of the church should express their opinion on this important matter, for the aid and guidance of the electorate; and,

Whereas, we have considered the said plan, and feel that it is not advisable for our church to accept it, and that unification under it will mean the surrender of our convictions on many important matters, notably the question of social equality, and the ultimate absorption of our church, without effecting any desirable end; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Big Brothers' Bible Class of the Greenville, Miss., station of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, That we are opposed to the proposed plan of unification with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that we use our influence to prevent its adoption.—The Big Brother.

MEMOIR.

Mrs. John Herbert Fleming, Juliet Featherstun, fourth daughter of Rev. H. Walter and Mrs. Emily W. Featherstun, died at the Sanitarium in Greenville, Miss., Aug. 4, 1924. She was born in Kavanaugh College, Holmesville, Miss., on May 7, 1885.

The memory is fresh and beautiful of her as the babe of the college, loved, nursed and petted by teachers and pupils, a strange sweet light to every life there. At 5 years of age she went with us to Edward McGehee College at Woodville, and at once became to her new college home what she had been at Kavanaugh.

When we passed out of college life into a parsonage we went to Yazoo City. One memory of her there brightens. It was at the close of our first year that the Annual Conference met there. She was about 9 years of age, and with her bright eyes, dimpled cheeks, and sunny curls and friendly manner, she became the light of the Conference, from the white-haired Bishop who would call her to him at times as he occupied the chair, and pet her, to the undergraduate who laughed and talked with her.

She graduated in early womanhood from the Moffatt McLauren Collegiate Institute, Meridian, Miss. She saw a bit of the big world in a brief stay with her brother in Chicago, and a visit to New York.

After teaching for a while in Georgia, she became assistant editor of a Hattiesburg daily, and during the world war traveled, lectured and organized for the Red Cross in Mississippa and Louisiana.

When, early in young womanhood, her voice showed great promise, a gentleman who was a judge of voices, wished to have her trained for opera singing, but she declined, saying: "My voice belongs to my Maker and shall be used in his service." She became a much admired solo singer, aiding church choirs and singing in revivals in both of the Mississippi Conferences. She assisted in the Centenary drive, singing and speaking with a band of workers. She also spent some time in the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union work, and editing the White Ribbon.

She was not married early, and the years spent in the homes of her sisters and brother were very precious to them. Her bright enthusiasm, her unselfishness, her charming and affectionate manners and her wonderful influence over the children endeared her to her family and to all who knew her. Her younger sister and her numerous nephews and nieces will miss her inexpressibly.

A devoted friend writes of her: "She was indeed gifted with her pen, and wrote the most attractive and satisfying letters I ever read. Her sympathetic understanding, her unselfish and thoughtful tenderness, never failed, and with her rare humor, made her a friend beyond compare. She was a dreamer and an idealist, filled with earnest visions and noble ambition, on a firm foundation of sense and practical ideas."

Nearly six years ago, she was married in Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, to Mr. John Herbert Fleming, and went to live on a Delta plantation near Greenville. Their married life was beautifully ideal. To the Fleming family she became a loving daughter and sister, and their grief at her death showed their deep appreciation.

Two beautiful baby daughters, now 4 and 2 years of age, came to brighten their home, and her devotion to them was exquisite, and their loss is tragic indeed.

She was an active member of the little church at Avon, which was nearest her home; she helped to build up the Sunday school and was president of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Last spring, when our children and grandchildren gathered about us in celebration of our golden wedding, her face was one of the brightest, and at the close of an entertaining pageant, picturing events in our lives, she sang a lovely song, addressed to us, having composed the words herself. We never saw her after that happy time, though her frequent letters kept us ever in touch with her and her happy home life.

After a very brief illness, caused by diphtheria, she left her devoted husband and precious little ones for the mansion the Savior had prepared for her. We feel that none can fill her place, but the knowledge that she is with that Savior draws us nearer still to him.

In that same Galloway Memorial Church where the happy marriage service had been held, there was performed, on Aug. 6, another service most sadly beautiful. Sweet voices softly sang hymns that she loved. Mrs. Dr. Shands, in her lovely voice, rendered one of Juliet's old favorites, "Face to Face," and Dr. Means' address was the most appropriately beautiful and comforting we ever heard.

FATHER.

The following lines are her mother's heart:

Juliet's Heavenly Birthday.

Oh the glory! Oh the rapture of the heavenly welcome song!
Oh the greetings of our loved ones, from out the heavenly throng!
Oh the meeting with her Savior, she had sung of "face to face"—
Her Jesus who had saved her, who had saved her "by his grace."

Her sweet voice, now made glorious, has joined the white-robed throng
Around the throne, where even angels cannot join the song,
But only those whose robes are washed in the Lamb's most precious blood,
There our Juliet's voice is lifted, with the earth-born, pure and good.

Is she looking down from Heaven upon her loved ones here?
Is she grieving for her little ones, and all those most dear?
We feel that her sweet spirit is still hovering o'er them here,
But she's put them in His keeping, who has promised to be near.

Oh she loves them as ever, but she sees through all of time,
Sees life as but a moment, sees Eternity sublime
Awaiting us; and very soon, we will be gathered there,
A whole united family—yes, our Father answers prayer.

Oh what is life's short span of years! Eternity how long!
Eternity in which to join with her in that great song!
And in that life we'll understand, will "know as we are known."
When all "the mists have rolled away," we will not walk alone.

MOTHER.

A PLEA FOR A LITTLE MORE TOLERANCE.

Dear Dr. Carley: As the matter of unification is the thing that seems to be uppermost in some minds, just one or two observations. First, those who favor unification seem to be so intolerant of the fellows who oppose. For example, a writer in the last Advocate says: "Ignorance is ever the foe of truth, and if joined with rancor and prejudice, the cause of convincement is hopeless." I was approached by one recently, and this was about the way it was put to me: "I am surprised that a man of your intelligence and ability could be against unification." You could almost hear the sneer in the whole. The idea of some seems to be that a man is against unification because he is so ignorant or has not sense enough to know any better. This attitude does not get any one to their way of thinking. I am further from it than when the subject was first mentioned.

I was once for it, with all my heart, but after spending six months in 1918 in the Y. M. C. A. Training School, and the army training camps, where 75% were Northern men, a majority of whom were Methodist Episcopal preachers, who all had the same ideas of everything connected with the South and the Southern Church, looking on us with contempt and pity for having been born in the South, etc. Those who know will tell you that it was practically impossible for a Y. M. C. A. man from the South to go over seas. "He did not have sense enough." If I had not been convinced then that I did not want to be a part of this church, I was thoroughly convinced after having spent ten days at Columbus, Ohio, attending the Centenary celebration in 1919. I have never had any reason to change my mind, and I cannot be convinced by our own people taking the same sneering attitude towards all their brethren who oppose unification.

LET'S SMILE MORE.

By Emma Gary Wallace, in the Christian Herald.

It takes nearly four times as many muscles to frown as to smile. Think of the waste of energy when we do overmuch grouching!

Smiles are of several different kinds, and while we are buying smiles, we might as well pick out the loveliest and most becoming of the lot.

There is the smile of greeting which is genuine and lights up the face, making the plainest one beautiful. How it warms our heart to meet a friend and to see that radiance of spontaneous pleasure!

The eyes as well as the lips smile, and the whole expression says, "Well, well, I am glad to see you!" This is the sort of a smile which makes friends.

Then there is the smile of appreciation which speaks of an inner satisfaction or pleasure.

One of the happy things about the appreciative smile is that it has a reflecting quality. It nearly always awakens an answering smile on the countenance of the other person.

One of the finest games in the world is to develop skillfulness in painting smiles on the faces of other people.

The smile of amusement is the twin sister to a hearty laugh. Specialists declare that when an individual stops laughing, the condition of health needs careful investigation.

People who are too busy to smile, are sure to be too busy to laugh. It is a wholesome thing to cultivate a sense of humor.

The old saying that "We might as well laugh as cry," has a good deal of truth in it, and there are lots of funny things in life to make mirth bubble up if we will only cultivate the habit.

A sense of humor saves many a difficult situation, even as a soft answer is so effective in turning aside wrath.

Many people take the little, inconsequential things of life too seriously. It is much better to "Pack up such troubles in an old kit bag, and smile, smile, smile."

Life is a splendid moving reality—not a mere picture, and we might as well make our experiences count in as happy a way as possible.

THE LEAGUE ASSEMBLY AT MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

Mr. Editor: Perhaps your readers would like to know something about the Western Assembly of the Epworth League, which convened here in second annual session, Aug. 10, and will adjourn Aug. 22.

As is well known, the constituent Conferences of the Assembly are: Central Texas, North Texas, Northwest Texas, Louisiana, Little Rock, North Arkansas, East Oklahoma, West Oklahoma, Missouri, St. Louis, and Southwest Missouri. Delegates are here from each of the Conferences, some States being represented by fairly large delegations. There are twelve or fifteen, I believe, from Louisiana, principally from Shreveport and Monroe.

The daily programs are interesting and instructive, many classes assembling each morning, with capable instructors, who lecture on subjects of special importance to Epworth Leaguers. Scores of visitors are present, and manifest much interest in the League and the great Methodist Church.

I am informed that Mount Sequoyah takes its name from an Indian chief, who, according to tradition, or more correctly speaking, tho record, was a Cherokee chief, moving from the Atlantic coast to Arkansas, locating on top of this mountain. He had been converted to Christianity, and thereafter devoted his life to instructing his people, crudely it may have been, but effectively. It is, therefore, fitting that this mountain should be devoted to the work of the Epworth League, as it is a living monument to the memory of Chief Sequoyah.

I understand the Assembly owns more than four hundred acres of land of this picturesque mountain, and is improving it as rapidly as possible. There are thirty or more neat cottages, capable of acocmmodating comfortably from four to ten people each, with elcctric lights and a system of water works which supplies excellent water. A large cafeteria furnishes wholesome food. There are assembly halls and a chapel. Mount Sequoyah is 1,700 feet above sea level.

A permanent assembly hall, built of native stone, brick and cement, is almost completed. The corner stone was laid last Thursday afternoon with appropriate ceremonies. Dr. F. S. Parker, editor of the Epworth Leaguo Era, of Nashville, Tenn., delivered the address; Dr. A. C. Millar, editor of the Arkansas Methodist and president of the Western Assembly, laid the corner stone; Rev. Ralph E. Nollner, of Nashville, Tenn., was master of cercmonies. Representatives from each of the constituent Conferences participated, Rev. W. W. Holmes and Rev. R. E. Goodrich, of Shreveport, reprcsenting La. I had the pleasure and honor as a deiegate from the La. State organization, to deposit in the strong box within the corner stone, a copy of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, dated Aug. 7, 1924. The ceremonies were both interesting and significant, the several hundred people present being deeply interested and impressed by the significance of the occasion.

This is a charming place. The days, even in midsummer, are delightfully cool, while at night blankets are absolutely necessary if one desires to sleep comfortably. There is an abundance of fresh fruits, including native apples, luscious peaches, plums, grapes, berries and melons. These fruits are grown in this immediate section. I never saw such extensive orchards, with the ripening fruit literally breaking down the trees and vines. The roads, for the most part, are excellent, practically all being hard-surfaced, with miles and miles of paved roads through the country, making traveling by automobile pleasant and easy.

It is strange that more Louisiana people do not spend the summer here, where one may go in any direction in an automobile, while the railroad service is good. It is a wonderful country, and is worth a visit.

Mr. J. L. Bond is superintendent, and any information desired may be obtained from him.

What impression of God do we give to men? That is the final question for the Christian in the matter of influence. It does not matter what men think of me; it does matter what they think about the God I profess to believe in. The answer to this question is not to be found in what I preach or what I persuade, but in what I am.—G. Campbell Morgan.

SUFFERED PAIN FOR YEARS

Mrs. Jahr Finally Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Howard Lake, Minnesota.—"I write to let you know that I have taken several bottles of your medicine in the last three months, and found it to be very good. I had pains and other troubles women have and was not able to do my work. Seeing your 'Ad.' in the paper, I thought of giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. I got good results from it and feel able to do my housework now. I used to have lots of pains, but after taking the medicine I am relieved from pains that I had suffered from for years. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends, and hope this letter will be satisfactory for you to publish."—Mrs. JENNIE JAHR, R.R. No. 2, Box 81, Howard Lake, Minn.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

During the past two months eight young women who have taken courses in religious education at Grenada College have taught twenty-one classes of Sunday school teachers in our Conference. These classes have ranged from ten to twenty in number. The very best reports come from the pastors as to type of work these young women have done. We hear speakers at conferences discuss the rural problem at length. They seem to be blue as to the outcome of the country church and country people in general. The main thing the rural church needs is what the town and city churches need, and that is the right kind of religious education and enough of it to influence their thinking and living. There is a great difference between the young woman who has a degree from a college where religious education is given and the young woman who has received her degree from an institution that cannot give religious education. When parents discover this truth and act upon it in sending their children to college, we shall see a better day. Our children need all the religious instruction they can get at home, in the church, and at college. Yes, there is a difference between the church that has received sound religious instruction and the one that has drifted along without this instruction.

We are planning to help all our pastors and superintendents to increase the enrollment of our Sunday schools to seventy-five thousand. This can be done if all our leaders are willing to co-operate. Why be contented with the attendance of "the falthful few" when there are thousands on the outside waiting for the love that will go after them? Christ would have us reach every man, woman, boy, girl, and child in the community.

One phase of this membership campaign is embraced in the observance of Children's Week, Oct. 12-19. Last year twenty-one churches observed this week with varying results, but all of them accomplished some good. We are asking fifty churches to observe Children's Week this year—from six to nine in each district. There are three points that constitute an adequate observance—Home Visitation, Parents' Meeting, and Forward Step. Two themes are given for the public addresses—Home Atmosphere and Children's Worship in the Sunday School. Miss Virginia Thomas, Tupelo, Miss., has charge of this work. If you want to be one of the fifty churches that are anxious to do more for the children, write Miss Thomas for literature, posters, etc.

Now is the time to get ready for Promotion Day, the last Sunday in September. On this day there should be a well-arranged program based altogether on materials studied and learned by the pupils during the year. Two programs are being sold by Lamar & Barton, Nashville, Tenn., for use on Promotion and Training Day. One of these is based on the uniform lessons and the other on the graded lessons. In connection with Promotion Day there should be recognition given to all who have taken courses of study in the training courses of the church. This will be a good time to enlist all officers to work for their gold seal diploma.

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

Rev. A. K. McLelland, pastor at Barham, was a welcome visitor at our Sunday school office recently. He reports a training school of fifteen members, ten of whom have just taken their examinations on the text, "The Organization and Administration of the Sunday School."

Erls Rutledge, of Clinton, who acted as secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school during the camp meeting at Bluff Creek, writes: "The report for the last Sunday is as follows: Number present, 122; offering, $7.42. The first Sunday, number present, 81, and offering, $2.58."

The Houma Standard Training School opens Aug. 25. Dr. W. W. Drake will teach a course on "The Missionary Message of the Bible," and most of the preachers of that section of the district have registered to take this course. At the end of the year it is very likely that the New Orleans District will show a larger per cent of the preachers taking Standard Training courses than any other district in the Conference.

Three of our District Elementary Superintendents, Mrs. Early, of Crowley; Mrs. N. L. Hudson, of Cedar Grove, and Mrs. B. D. Talley, of Bogalusa, have written us concerning Children's Week observance. Last year we had a large number of churches that observed this week, and we hope a larger number will do so this year. Let all interested remember they can get information and literature from our office at Alexandria. Mrs. Culpepper, Conference Elementary Superintendent, is very much encouraged with the responses she is receiving from district and local workers concerning Children's Week observance.

The record in the office shows that fifty-two Sunday schools have sent in an offering from Sunday School Day observance. The Monroe District at present leads in number of schools, eighteen, and amount, $177.69. The presiding elder writes he has set a goal of $500 from Sunday School Day offerings. The Alexandria and the New Orleans Districts are next in line.

We wish to call attention to the observance of Promotion Day the last Sunday in September, for the purpose of strengthening the Sunday school organization in each local church. This should be preceded or followed by a survey, which should be carefully followed up. Let pastors and superintendents remember we have leaflet material which we will be glad to mail them upon request.

We hope that every Sunday school superintendent, in ordering the Sunday school literature, beginning with the 1st of October, will keep in mind the "Story Papers." These papers compare favorably with the "Youth's Companion," "The American Boy," "Boy's Life," and such type of papers.

Mr. H. P. Wall, District Secretary of the New Orleans District, writes: "I checked the Algiers school last night, following their Worker's Council meeting. We figured that they are entitled to three seals on the 'B' Type Program of Work." In Arkansas there will be a State-wide campaign in checking up all the Sunday schools of that State. It would be a good thing if the Louisiana workers would promote such a campaign.

Rev. J. B. Peters, of Mansfield, has recently closed a training class, in which sixteen credits were issued. In this list we find the name of the superintendent, Mr. C. J. Bolin, and many other leading Sunday school workers in the Mansfield Sunday school.

Rev. Larry Armstrong, assistant pastor of First Church, Baton Rouge, recently taught a local training class on the text, "The Organization and Administration of the Sunday School."

BENTONIA W. M. S. ENTERTAINS VISITORS.

A most profitable and enjoyable day was spent at the Anding Consolidated School, Wednesday, Aug 6, upon which occasion the ladies of the Bentonia Missionary Society were hostesses to delegates from Flora, Phoenix, Satartia and Eden.

A bountiful dinner of fried chicken, salads, sandwiches, pickle, iced tea and ice cream and cake was served at the noon hour.

Mrs. W. E. Phillips, our district secretary, was present and made a most helpful talk on the missionary society and its work.

The program for the day was as follows:

Hymn—No. 157.

Hymn—No. 60.

Devotional—Mrs. C. W. Wesley, of Bentonia.

Prayer—Mrs. Ross, of Flora.

Solo, "Give Me the Vision, Lord"—Mrs. D. O. Miller, Bentonia.

Greeting—Mrs. C. F. Harris, Bentonia.

General Talk—Mrs. W. E. Phillips.

Dismissed for dinner.

Afternoon.

Hymn.

Devotional—Mrs. Harris, Flora.

Prayer—Mrs. Stricklin, Eden.

Duet. "Rock of Ages"—Mrs. C. W. Wesley and Mrs. D. O. Miller.

The afternoon session was then opened to all, and the following problems were discussed:

'How to Get New Members and to Interest Those Who Are Already Members"—Led by Mrs. Ross.

"The Conflict of Interest in the Epworth League and the Young People's Society"—Led by Mrs. Wood.

Mrs. Stricklin's suggestion that the district be divided into zones, with meetings held quarterly, met with instant approval, as all felt such meetings would be most beneficial to all in introducing new ideas and the working out of old problems.

The Eden society then invited all present to meet with them in September, the day to be decided on soon.

The meeting was then dismissed with a prayer by Mrs. Wood.

FINE MEETING AT BELMONT, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed a very successful meeting at Belmont, Miss. This meeting lasted nine days, Aug. 8-17. Our church was greatly revived and took on new life. We had some very spiritual services during this time. This was a time of reconsecration on the part of the membership of the church. The expression was often heard, "I want to be more useful in the church."

We were assisted in this meeting by Rev. A. J. Notestine, general evangelist, of Birmingham, Ala. Brother Notestine did both the singing and preaching during the meeting. He was recommended to us as "the two in one," but we found him to be three in one, as he took care of the singing and preaching and the children—all. He is a very strong gospel preacher, and did us fine work in the pulpit. I consider him one of the strongest preachers I have ever heard.

Brother Notestine took care of the song service. He is a very fine singer and a good director of music. His solos were unusually fine, and to hear him is to learn to appreciate him.

Then he held a short service at the beginning of almost every service for the children, and this work was very fine. He would enforce these messages to the children with slight of hand tricks that were always a means to an end. The children soon learned to love him and crowded their section at every service to hear him.

The results of this meeting were fourteen conversions and eight additions to the church, with others to follow. I unreservedly recommend Brother Notestine as a strong preacher, a sweet singer, and fine worker with the children.

THE TOMB OF OUR SAVIOUR.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

An interesting fact to Bible students was brought out in the London Times recently, which may have a decisive bearing upon the still-disputed question of our Lord's tomb. Most visitors to Palestine go to see "The Garden Tomb," outside the Damascus Gate of modern Jerusalem. It is often called the "Gordon tomb," from the fact that General Gordon was one of the first to call attention to it; many explorers and antiquarians followed him in thinking it to be the tomb of our Lord's burial and resurrection. It was acquired by an English committee on the ground that it was, at any rate, an excellent specimen of a Jewish tomb of the New Testament period.

In a recent removal of loose stones from the ground, a stone with peculiar markings was discovered, which is now said to be a part of a shrine of the goddess Aphrodite. The startling thing about this discovery is its relation to the fact that in A. D. 135, when Jerusalem was finally destroyed and Aelia Capitolina was built on its ruins, the Emperor Hadrian is said to have built a temple of Aphrodite over the tomb of Christ with the purpose of desecrating it completely. Few serious antiquarians give credence to the traditional claim that "The Church of the Holy Sepulchre" contains the sacred site. Perhaps the most that can be said is that it strengthens the evidence for the tomb outside the Damascus Gate. Further investigation will be eagerly awaited.

The entire line of our frontier work has been so greatly strengthened by the Centenary that we have a new day in all our border Conferences.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

WHAT TO DO ON MOBILIZATION DAY!

Mr. Editor: The people are still asking, "What does it all mean?" and "What am I expected to do?" I venture a few suggestions: Let Sept. 12, or the previous Sunday, be used for promoting widespread attention to the Draft Treaty drawn up by Prof. Shotwell, of Columbia University, and a group of unofficial American experts. This efficient proposal for a type of defense, incalculably greater than that proposed by Gen'l Pershing, has been presented this summer by the Council of the League of Nations to the Governments of the fifty-four nations in the League. It will be considered officially by the League in September. It provides a way by which all nations, whether in the League or not, can outlaw all aggressive war, can have the term "aggressive" for the first time defined, and a punishment for aggression arranged, which every nation may or may not share in as it pleases. (The treaty would mark an enormous step forward toward security.)

Every church should protest against a civilian share in "Defense Test Day" so far as co-operation with military forces is concerned. It would be an unprecedented and menacing performance, which would have made wild outcry had Germany planned it in 1913. But, besides protest, there should be the positive program of the "Draft Treaty." Apply for copy to "The Inquiry," 129 East Fifty-second Street, New York City.

NEW DEPARTMENT IN BOARD OF EDUCATION.

On June 1 Rev. J. Marvin Culbreth assumed the duties of the Department of Religious Education in the Board of Education. The specific matters to which he will give attention are:

1. Applications for help in finding and supporting pastors' assistants in State school centers.

2. Visits to schools and colleges, both church and State, in the interest of the Christian life.

3. To aid in the development of courses in Religious Education both in church and State schools.

4. Attendance upon conferences, institutes, and other assemblies for the development of leadership among the youth of the church.

Correspondence relating to these subjects should be addressed to Rev. J. Marvin Culbreth, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

General Secretary.

KOREAN JEWELRY.

The Bureau of Specials is anxious to dispose of the remaining pieces of Korean jewelry contributed by the women of the congregation of South Ward, Songdo, Korea, during the revival of the famous Korean evangelist, Kim Ik Doo, in 1921. Missionaries represent this man as a wonderful preacher of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. F. K. Gamble gives the following pen picture:

"In his power of graphic description, his apt use of homely illustrations, his ability to attract and hold the crowds, and his delivery of plain, practical, forceful messages, he reminds me much of Dr. George H. Stuart. The average Korean is rather sober-sided and serious, and the average Korean preacher delivers his message in a dignified manner. But this man, Kim Ik Doo, is unique in that he illustrates his messages with his facial expressions and bodily movements. He is a splendid caricaturist, and the way in which he takes off the old-time Korean gentleman of leisure, or the new woman, or the countryman riding on the train for the first time, or the grandparents in their ecstatic delight over the arrival of their first grandson, is both ludicrous and fascinating. . . . With all his humor and pathos Kim Ik Doo is a wonderful preacher of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. He is a sincere believer in the power of prayer, and in the truth and power of God's Word. He exposes sin in its subtle as well as its gross forms, exalts Jesus Christ as the only and all-sufficient Saviour, and shows the definitness and certainty of the Christian's hope. It is nothing short of marvelous that such a preacher should be produced during one short generation of the Gospel's preaching in this land. It must be remembered that the first missionaries came to Korea in 1884."

At the close of the meeting in Songdo, a collection was taken toward repairs on the church. Some seven hundred yen was received, besides a large number of ornaments from the women, who have no money. This jewelry was sent to the Board of Missions, with the hope that it could be sold in this country and the money sent back to Korea to strenthen South Ward Church, that it may stand as a light, a power and a bendiction in the city of Songdo for years to come. Some of the jewelry has been disposed of, but there is still a number of pieces which the Bureau of Specials is anxious to sell.

The collection includes enameled and hand-carved silver hair ornaments, with and without settings; enameled and plain silver ear spoons; gold and silver rings, some beautifully carved and others enameled. For prices and further information, write the Bureau of Specials, 627 Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn.

CAN YOU SPELL?

Spelling seems to be reviving once more. Fifty-four boys and girls from different counties of New York took part in a prize spelling bee at the State fair at Syracuse. The words which decided the final standing of the contestants were: rerefy, repellent, picnicking, vilify, gentian, genteel, plaguy, inoculate, fallible, embarrass.—Exchange.

Like Joseph of old, who provided during fat years for the lean years to come, the Centenary with its ten per cent returned to the Annual Conferences of over $1,600,000 to date, has enabled our church everywhere to move up all along the line.

AGAINST UNIFICATION.

I have no prejudice against our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church, or against the Negro. My convictions are against principles fraught with evil. I have been opposed to unification on any ground. All plans look to ultimate organic union, and this means the absorption of Southern Methodism, the smaller communion swallowed up by the greater.

The present plan is granted to be imperfect, but a step toward the ultimate goal, the name to be chosen and determined after getting together, and many vital issues unsettled till after unification is effected. What business man or corporation would do business like that? They tell us to trust our brethren of the North, that we are too suspicious of the great and good men of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I deny the charge in toto, but they stand for certain principles that we shall forever oppose. See Bishop W. A. Candler in the Advocate, New Orleans and Nashville, for Aug. 14, in his masterly argument. God grant that the whole church shall read this article, "Who Misunderstands and Who Is Mislead." By all fair interpretation of these great men of the Northern Church, it is with them social equality with the Negro, and they proved their disregard of the Southern protest and seemingly to teach us a needed lesson, as they evidently felt.

In the face of our protest, they elected two Negro bishops. Bishop Candler's article referred to above is a call to the whole Southern Church to sanity, candor and to the principle of self-preservation. The method of the pro-unificationist, at the recent General Conference in Chattanooga, was the tactics of astute politicians in the name of brotherly kindness and religion, which makes it sting all the deeper. Think, will you, of connectional men standing on the floor of that General Conference and making bold to say that in certain Conferences there was absolutely no sentiment against unification!

When I read such statements, I said Southern people are too much alike for that to be possible, and now we are learning to the contrary. In this part of Methodism perhaps 90 per cent are opposed to any sort of unification. The people want to be let alone; they say let well enough alone, that both churches have been doing a glorious work, and that by this agitation our church is disturbed, that by the action of the recent General Conference we are alarmed, that our representatives, many of them, did not represent the church membership at all. They are now saying we are a democratic people, but our church autocratic in that its ministers, and many of them young ministers who never paid a dollar in the building of the churches and parsonages that they are now the custodians of, to vote away the property rights and sacred name of their church, and the membership by the multiplied thousands helpless, no vote nor voice, who calls such a representative form of government by all the law of the Gospel, and manly righteousness since ours is a representative form of government.

Every preacher and delegate is morally bound to vote as his people stand, and more especially since the very life, entity, and sacred interests of the church are involved. Every Bible student knows, or should know, being one in Christ does not mean organic union. The unity of oneness which the Bible teaches, is love, faith, and brotherhood in Christ, nowhere was there any organic union of the seven churches of Achaia. Unity of the Spirit is the thing needed and not any sort of unification which means ultimate organic union. Our pro-unification brethren use high-sounding adjectives, as if God was glorified in big drives, and leading thousands into the church on reformation for salvation, till the church is loaded down with formalism and worldliness, and now they are determined to have a big world ecclesiasticism. Do they mean to out-Rome the Roman Catholic Church? God save us from such a fate, and save Southern Methodism, in name, in polity, and its holy indestructible doctrine, out of which a holy life is only possible.

R. K. MORGAN, Principal
Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn.

Your Greatest Problem—that Boy of Yours.

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now? Every parent knows it depends entirely upon the training he is getting now, his associations, ideals and aspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., has been training boys thirty years. He knows boys. He wants your boy. He recognizes in every boy possibilities which, if developed, will make him a leader. He wants to develop that tralt in boys. Roht. K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality and his school is a material projection of that character.

Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., to-day. He will send you a catalogue and tell you about what this school can do for your boy.

HOW A WESLEY BIBLE CLASS STUDIED MISSIONS.

By P. K. Abel.

A church that has not—through the Woman's Missionary Society, the Men's Bible Class or one of its other auxiliaries—made a study of the mission fields of our church and received and studied the wonderful literature that is sent out from the Bureau of Specials of our Mission Board, does not know the feast of good things it has missed.

The Wesley Bible Class of the [illegible] Sunday school decided the 1st of October last to study the mission fields, so a schedule or course of study was worked out, beginning with Mexico, Sunday, Oct. 21, 1923, and one each Sunday morning in the following order: Cuba, Brazil, Belgian Congo, China, Japan, Korea, Siberia-Manchuria, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, and closing the course, Jan. 6, 1924, with home missions, and a general review of all the fields, Jan. 13, 1924.

We wrote the Bureau of Specials outlining our plan and asking to be placed on the mailing list and furnished with material for our studies. Each week, in due time, we received a general supply of literature, consisting of mimeographed copies of news-letters, reports, statistics, maps, photographs, tracts, etc., giving fully and in detail the field, its missionaries and their work, to be studied the following Sunday. The first package of literature for Mexico, among other valuable things, contained a letter from Norwood E. Wynn on "Need for More Workers in Mexico;" "The Story of Allende Church," by Jackson B. Cox; Short Sketch of Ramon Gardea; statistical reports showing in detail our work in Mexico; Dr. White's annual report on Monterey Hospital, and many other documents, all of which are very instructive and inspiring, so valuable that we thought they should be preserved and put in form for general use among the members of the church.

Believing this, we secured files (those we use come from M. L. Bath & Co., Shreveport, La., at a cost of 5 cents each), one for each mission field; and as the material would come to us from the Mission Board it would be placed in its proper file, so we have one for each field now, including our home mission field, making twelve files, or volumes if you please, of material from which we may know our missions, our missionaries, the countries in which they labor, and the peoples, their habits, customs and environments, for and with whom they labor. These files, of course, will be added to as the news-letters, reports, etc., come to us, and may be used as a circulating library, giving all who desire an opportunity to be informed on what is going on, not alone in the Louisiana or some other American Conference, but a world vision of our missionary activities.

In these weeks of mission study, while we had but fifteen or twenty minutes each Sunday morning for the study of each field, we know very much more about missions now than when we began, and we expect to continue the study and encourage other members of the congregation to pursue the study of missions until the church is thoroughly imbued with the missionary spirit. Then it will be easy to raise current expenses for the local church, collect balances on Centenary pledges, raise Superannuate Endowment quotas, increase the membership of the Sunday school, build up the attendance at the preaching services, instead of a corporal's guard, have a company of revived, Spirit-filled attendants at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting. The missionary spirit is the Christ spirit, and the more of it we get into the churches the more we will advance the Master's Kingdom and bring glory and praise to his name.

We are very grateful to the Bureau of Specials for furnishing us with the material for our studies, and heartily recommend this plan of mission study to any church that would know more about missions at home and abroad.

HARRISVILLE CIRCUIT NOTES.

Dear Dr. Carley: Our pastor, Brother I. H. Sells, conceived the idea of having revivals at all four churches of Harrisville circuit the same week, then going to Harrisville the following week for circuit-wide revival conducted by Brother Bennett.

Brother M. L. Burton has just closed the past week at Poplar Springs, and I am glad to say we had a revival indeed. Many reconsecrated their lives to Christ, and are going out after others. The older people say it was the best meeting we have ever had here. We received nine members—five by faith and four from the Baptist church.

We cannot forget Brother Burton or his messages.

Next week we will all worship at Harrisville, where we expect to find even greater things in store for us.

FROM LOUISVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are entering upon the second week of our protracted service here in Louisville, Miss. The preaching is being done by General Evangelist Tucker, of Memphis, Tenn. He preaches the old-time gospel, and he preaches it with great power. To Brother Tucker the Bible is the Word of God, and Jesus Christ is the divine Son, born of the Virgin Mary. Our day congregations are fine, and at the night services we cannot take care of the people that come to hear these gospel messages. Brother Turbeville, of Jasper, Ala., is leading in the song services. No purer man ever led a song service than Prof. Turbeville. We are having a great time.

JAMES T. McCAFFERTY.
Aug. 18, 1924.

FROM HARLESTON, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed one of the greatest revival campaigns that have ever been experienced on the Americus charge. Rev. O. S. Tallent, of Lineville, Iowa, did the preaching. We began at Hurley Church, July 6, and closed at Cross Roads Church, Aug. 10, having made the entire circuit with the exception of two churches.

Brother Tallent came to this charge a stranger, but quickly won his way into the hearts and lives of the people. It was interesting indeed to observe how quickly he grasped the situation, and fortified himself against the forces of evil, in every community.

People would say, "It is the most powerful preaching we have ever heard." Young men would come to the preacher and say: "Oh, Brother Tallent, if we could only have heard such preaching as this when we needed it most, we would have been saved from a blasted life; but how we do thank God that you came before it was too late."

All of the sermons were as if God had spoken to his messenger, and then directed him to speak to his people.

The results of these meetings were simply wonderful. Sinners of every type were converted and received into the church; old differences of long standing were settled; homes and communities were reunited; prayer meetings organized, family altars erected and the work in every way built up. There were twenty-two accessions to the church, and eleven infants baptized.

On the last night of the meeting, at the close of the service, hundreds came to say good-by to this great man of God and assure him that they were going to be faithful until death.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.

I am a poor boy in misfortune, and I write this letter to you all to see if you can help me a little by buying a box of beautiful Sea Shells. They are strange and wonderful things, fine for presents, souvenirs, or keep-sakes. Price, $1 a box. I am a crippled boy, permanently bed-ridden, caused by a fall. I can't walk or sit up. Been down in bed 25 years and I have to earn a living in my helpless condition, and if you can send me an order for a box of Sea Shells I sure will appreciate your kindness, and I believe you will be pleased with these pretty Sea Shells.

Yours in Misfortune,

EXPERT TESTIMONY AND SCIENCE GONE TO SEED.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

For many years past a subtle materiallsm with fatalism in its very essence has been infecting the minds of this generation.

It has not been confined to any class, but has affected all classes in a greater or iess degree.

It has found expression ln the writings of the learned and the scribblings of the ignorant. It has been most loudly and constantly uttered by the half-educated who have mistaken it for established science and proclaimed it vociferously in order that they may be taken for scientists.

In all quarters there has been manifested a pronounced tendency to explain everything in human life as the result of heredity and environment. All that men are is the outcome of a long process of evolution through these two master forces, the outcome of which has been, and is, as invariable and irresistible as the operation of gravitation. The love of a moth and the malice of a murderer alike are the result of physical conditions, controlling mental and moral activity for which neither is responsible.

Character and conduct, according to this theory, are entirely dependent upon the nature and quantity of the nervous energy inherited by a person from his ancestry or developed in him by the circumstances surrounding.

Such teachings have found ready acceptance with a generation inclined too much to rid itself of being troubled by the effort required to live right or by the pains of conscience for its failure to do right. Why should one put forth effort to be truthful and honest, or suffer any sort of self-reproach for deceit or dishonesty, if the whole matter of whether his telling the truth or telling lies, and being an honest man or a thief was really determined before he was born by the inexplicable combination of matter and force with which he had nothing to do?

This soporific system of fatalistic materiallsm has generally been indulged as a kind of soothing oplate which gave rise to pleasing dreams and agreeable delusions without doing serious harm to individuals or society. But now its effects have spread into the region of the law courts, and its pernicious influence threatens things which have been considered heretofore as most stable and most necessary to civilized government.

Some months ago two students of a well known and opulent university committed a most horrible murder. When their crime was fixed upon them, and they were arrested, they confessed it. Brought into court, a plea of guilty was made for them by the able attorneys whom their wealth enable them to engage for their defense. After the plea of guilty was entered, proceedings were begun to extenuate the enormity of their bloody offense by showing they were "mentally sick," and that the want of good glands accounted for their lack of good character. Scientific experts were called to give scientific testimony for the establishment of this theory set forth to secure their escape from capital punishment. Thus the public has been given an exemplification of the final consequences of this pseudo-science with respect to both life and law. If the philosophy to which it logically gives rise is sound, no room is left for praise or blame of human conduct, there are no such things as virtue and crime, penal laws and criminal courts are worse than useless, and the punishment of crime is itself a crime, if there can be any such thing in the universe.

As far back as 1892, in a notable article which appeared in the Fortnightly Review, this view of crime was set forth as the logical conclusion of this system of thought. The writer said:

"What is crime? A crime is an action threatened by the law with punishment, says Kant; and freedom of action or free-will is a legally necessary condition of crime. But the law of heredity conclusively demonstrates that free-will and freedom of action stand in the category of lively imaginings. Therefore crime, as the law understands it, is non-existent, since no imputability can be recognized when a man is not responsible for his actions. Therefore, the law is not justified in inflicting punishment."

Certainly, if this fatalistic science is sound, the law is not justified in inflicting punishment. And if it were, who is morally and mentally competent to determine guilt and fix penalties?

The experts testified that the disordered glands of the young scape-graces on trial for the brutal murder of a defenseless boy in Chicago explained and extenuated their horrible offense. But who has examined the glands of the experts? It may be that their testimony is a glandular secretion for which they are in no wise responsible. Perhaps their science is glandular activity or inactivity. Possibly the judge whose decision their testimony was designed to influence may be in a state of glandular disorder. The attorneys on both sides of the case may be in a like condition, who knows? Can any certainty of sanity and justice be assured amid possible conditions of such glandular confusion and illusion?

It is time to have done with a dangerous and delusive materialism which effaces all distinctions between right and wrong and makes law a laughing stock.

A system of science which reduces the formula of civilization below zero cannot be true. It is obliged to be false.

And it is as blighting as is false. Before it every beautiful and good thing must inevitably wither and die.

Already it has withered much that is high and holy, and engendered noxious growths in their stead. It has taken the vigor out of the virtuo of multitudes of men and women and produced in its place a self-pitying sentimentality which enervates the moral faculties until sinners lament their weakness but never bemoan their wickedness. It excludes both strenuous goodness and genuine repentance.

It is time to set aside the exponents of this vicious philosophy and discredit their expert testimony. They assume the aims of immeasurable wisdom and talk with the tongue of boundless folly.

The least dependable testimony offered in the courts of the land is expert testimony. It is at best nothing better than delusive theorizing, incapable of being tested by common sense. In many cases it is purchased at a high price and used to accomplish bad ends which could not be reached by plain truth.

Much of the boosted stuff miscalled "modern scholarships" is equally unreliable. It is "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." (II Timothy iii:7.)

There is a superstition about it the chief article of which says, "all modern scholars are now agreed, etc." This is the utterance of ignorance.

Modern scholars are agreed about very few things, and when by chance they agree on something for a little while, they very soon disagree. The same man disagrees with himself often within brief periods, and sometimes holds at once mutually destructive theories. For example, some of the rankest materialists are spiritualists, and although making for themselves pretentious claims of scholarship, they do not possess enough logic to perceive that they are retaining contradictory theories in their systems as incompatible as acids and alkalis. It is a wonder that they do not explode. Frequently they do.

It is time for common sense to resume its reign. Reason should no longer be subjected to pseudo-science which has gone to seed, and law should no longer listen to experts who draw their testimony from the eccentric theories of glandular materialism.

Fatalism is folly. Men are free, and whatever may be the effects of heredity and environment the regenerative power of the Holy Spirit more than offsets their influence. In Christ life and liberty are offered to the feebiest children of men.

No soul is ever lost because he cannot do right, but only because he will not be and do what the Redeemer requires and enables him to be and do.

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." (John iii:19.)

MILLSAPS COLLEGE AND THE CITY OF JACKSON.

By President D. M. Key.

(An Address Delivered Recently Before the Lions' Club, Jackson.)

Millsaps College is an A-grade, Liberal Arts College, of the highest type. It has been for twelve years a member of the Southern Association of Colleges. This organization, to which the highest class colleges and universities of the Southern States belong, was founded twenty years ago. The Mississippi State University was a charter member. It has for its purpose the advancement and improvement of collegiate education in the South. It attempts to do this by setting up standards of excellence in various respects to which all member colleges must measure up. Since these uniform excellences characterize the best colleges, practically all institutions attempt to measure up to them, and thus collegiate education in general is improved.

The Southern Association of Colleges, together with similar regional associations, the Association of the Middle States and Maryland, the North Central Association, etc., covers the nation. As stated in the latest publication of the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the Southern Association, "the essential requirements for the standard four-year college are now practically uniform throughout the United States." Thus a student of a standard college like Millsaps in any part of the country may transfer without loss of credit to a standard college in any part of the country and there continue and complete his work for a degree.

Some of the features which characterize a standard A-grade college may be here noted.

1. Entrance requirements. Fifteen units, unconditioned. Practically all the students entering Millsaps College are graduates of accredited schools in Mississippi with fifteen units.

2. Requirements for graduation. The college should demand 120 semester hours of credit according to the requirements of all standardizing agencies. Millsaps requires 128 semester hours.

3. Training of faculty. The training of the members of the faculty should include at least two years of graduate work in a university. Millsaps College includes five men with the Ph.D. degree, which is based upon at least three years in a university, six with a master's degree from a recognized graduate school, most of them having spent two years in graduate work, and four who have the bachelor's degree, with graduate work in their particular subject.

4. The college should have an annual income of not less than $50,000 and an endowment of not less than $500,000. Millsaps College now has an endowment of about $700,000, which will soon be increased to $1,000,000. In addition to this it receives from other sources, stated contributions from the two supporting Conferences. etc., some $10,000 a year. The productive endowment is thus very much in excess of the minimum requirements of a standard A-grade college. However, as the enrollment is constantly increasing, making necessary a larger faculty and greater running expenses of the college, the increased endowment which is being sought is greatly needed.

The standards of the Southern Association furthermore specify the number of books in the library, the method of administering the library, the proper organization of the library, the amount of scientific apparatus and equipment necessary for effective work in the laboratories of the college and the expenditure for laboratory supplies. In all these respects Millsaps College not only adequately fulfills the minimum requirements of the Southern Association, but maintains an organization adequate for the large number of students enrolled.

Millsaps College is a church college, belonging to the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is a Christian college. A Christian college is one in which the influence of the Christian religion is brought to bear on the character and development of the student. It is a common conviction in these troublous times that the hope of our country and of the world is in the development, through education, of intelligence and character. Intelligence without character has nearly brought about the destruction of our civilization in a large part of the modern world. There is a general realization of the importance in our body politic of those colleges where some specific effort is made to mould character as well as sharpen intellect.

There are two avenues through which right moral principles may be brought to bear upon college students during the impressionable years of their education; one is that of the moral life of the community in which they live, and the other is offered by the convictions, integrity, and purposes of their instructors.

The church colleges of the South, some of them founded one hundred years ago, have illustrated the character-forming impact of these two influences by the long roll of their graduates, men of character and achievement, who have made in large measure the history of the South. I think that I can show that, though under conditions so different in the present day, Millasps College is bringing to bear these two vital influences in the moulding of character in her students.

The old-time church college, to which so many of the great men of the South looked as their Alma Mater, was located in one of these county towns where that which was best and most cultivated in the society of the old South centered. Such colleges were old Centenary College in Jackson, La., Southern University in Greensboro, Ala., or Emory College in Oxford, Ga. One is stirred with deep emotion as he looks upon the magnificent buildings that housed these venerable institutions in these quaint old towns which are reminiscent of all that was finest in the life of the South before the war. The college buildings themselves, now in too many cases fallen into ruin, are magnificent in their architecture, and like the old colonial homes along their elm-shaded streets, create upon the mind a feeling of reverance for the beauty, the wealth, the power, and the sterling character of the heroic men who builded them. Their founders, cultivated in mind and heart, were the picked men of a generation preceding them; men who had been educated in the colleges and universities of the North and of Europe. Into these cultivated communities, small in numbers, there were brought the students of that day, and the high ideals, the traditions of honor and sincerity and the culture of that society were brought intimately to bear upon the character of the students. They were taken to board in those old homes, where servants were plentiful, and shared the social life of the home, held their parties in the spacious halls, imbibed the Christian and chivalrous ideals of the community and became high-minded men.

It was because of these ideals, unconsciously exemplified before the students by leaders whom they admired and looked up to, that they formed the deep principles of honor, fidelity, veracity, and integrity which made the graduates of these small-town church colleges the leading men in State and nation of the generation past.

The old-fashioned church college was manned by a band of heroic men as professors, men of marked and sometimes of eccentric personality, whose consecration and devotion combined with the high and unselfish temper of the community to make high manhood in their students. Many a tale is told by the "old grad" of these rare old spirits. They are always represented as venerable, sometimes irascible and sometimes benign, and they waged a battle of wits with their mischievous wards. Their voices are represented, by those who canonize them at the annual alumni banquets, as either throaty and reverberating, or high-pitched and squeaky, resembling no type of vocalization known to the modern world. But always there is a glistening in the eye and a tremor in the voice of those who exchange these reminiscences that tell unconsciously of deep affection, reverence and respect for the heroic figures that helped to shape their youthful aims and purposes.

The social fabric of that day is gone; the rural and almost feudal organization of society has given place, even in the South, to an urban life that is characteristically commercial and industrial. The old condition will never return. Have the place and the scope for the church college passed with the changing time?

In almost every case the college has left the village and moved to the city. Centenary College has moved to Shreveport, Southern University to Birmingham, Emory to Atlanta, and Southwestern at Georgetown gave place to the Southern Methodist University at Dallas. In the city they found larger financial resources, better and more intimate contact with the life of our times. What has become of the personalities and environment that shaped character in olden times?

So far as the faculty is concerned, it must be admitted that the present day college professor is not the beloved, revered, and exalted character that exerted such a dominating influence upon the youth of former days. He is a younger man, generally fresh from the graduate schools of the Northern and Eastern universities, a practical man of his times, actively identified with the civic organizations and enterprises of his community. Yet his very service in the church colleges, with its meager salary and burden of overwork, accredits him as an idealist with the authentic and consecrated devotion to service of the former generation, while his youth gives the more intimate influence of comradeship and common interests.

The modern city is not necessarily a corrupting and distracting influence such as the city of a generation ago, with its open saloons, gambling houses, and brothels, and the vice that flourished there.

The city of to-day, with its organized promotion of health, sanitation, education, and benevolence, fills the public mind with ideas that are bound to be constructive. Ignorance, vice and poverty are often more characteristic of some rural districts, the haunts of the moonshiner and the bootlegger. Especially does a city like Jackson impose upon the mind fine and true ideals—this new Jackson of recent years, the Jackson whose most widely known and most characteristic organization is the Flying Squadron, the Jackson of the Associated Bible Classes, the Jackson that built the Auditorium and the Poindexter High School, closed up needless business on Sunday, and assembled thousands day after day to hear Gipsy Smith, Jr., J. Campbell Morgan, Billy Sunday, and other great evangelists, the Jackson of Service Clubs, the Jackson that stands first in its class in the United States in Boy Scout work.

Seven years ago, Jackson's most famous inhabitant was Old Point Comfort. To-day there is a group of her most influential men who are known by their first names from Richmond to El Paso because they exemplify the amellorative power of true religion and go about doing good. I crave no greater advantage for my boy than to get his education, form his character, and establish his principles in the stimulating atmosphere of a modern city like this where the first people put first things first.

We have here a community influence exerted upon the college youth as different as it is possible to conceive from that which surrounded the antebellum college, yet I firmly believe that in Jackson in 1924, just as in Greensboro, Ala., or Oxford, Ga., in 1870, the college youth is brought under the formative influence of the finest there is in the community life of our day.

As the college is helped by the community influence in its task of making useful men, its aim and ideal are to be of service to the community, to be the center of her culture, the focus of her intellectual life, and the crown of her splendid educational system.

The typical American city is not concerned solely with factories and railways, transportation and trade. Having formed that commercial and industrial organization that creates wealth for its inhabitants, the builders of an American city of the best type want to provide for their people recreation, education, diversion, and an intellectual and spiritual activity that add color, variety and interest to life. Parks, drives, playgrounds, museums, churches, libraries, schools and colleges—these are the crown and reward of commercial prosperity; and they in turn create moral and intellectual health, strength, intelligence, justice, and industry, the conditions necessary for permanent success in creating wealth.

There is a life of culture and learning and a whole field of intellectual activities and interests that should center round the college—with its faculty of highly trained men and women, quixotically devoting themselves to the service of the next generation, with the ardent patriotism of its alumni organizations and their reunions and annual banquets; with the perennial stream of young people and the panorama of their athletics, glee clubs, fraternities, intercollegiate debates, football parades. All this goes to make up the pageant of life and add to its color and significance in a modern American city.

What Vanderbilt is to Nashville, what Tulane is to New Orleans, what Northwestern and the University of Chicago are to Chicago, and Columbia University is to New York, Millsaps should be to Jackson.

On the financial side there is the same mutuality of interest between the college and the city; the average student brings into Jackson and spends here during the school year about $500. The Jackson boys and girls who go away to college spend much more than that. Therefore every student of the college adds that much to Jackson's volume of trade. Furthermore, the college's expeditures for operation are greater than the tuition paid by about $200 per student. This comes from endowment funds, etc., but every cent is spent in Jackson. Thus each student represents an expenditure of $700 in the city of Jackson. As we now have 339 students, Millsaps College added $237,300 to the Jackson volume of trade this year. Add to this the expenditure of the 125 summer school students, and you have a total of more than a quarter-million dollars.

The city, therefore, has a direct interest in the plans that are on foot for increasing the endowment to a million dollars, in the new library that is now being contracted for, and the comprehensive layout now being prepared by a landscape architect for the beautification the campus and location of new buildings to be erected in the future—a gymnasium, athletic bowl, women's dormitories, and science hall. While no appeal for funds not already subscribed is being made, it is evident that such a healthy growth can come about only by the hearty co-operation of the community. A great modern educational institution will not come to us unless Jackson money is put into it.

Such an enormous annual expediture represents a great amount of sacrifice and outlay that has come almost entirely from outside the city of Jackson. The operating cost of the college is borne jointly by the student on the one hand and by the supporters of the college on the other. The enormous recent demand for a college education has made this cost almost overwhelming.

This is not a local but a national problem. The most significant thing in American educational development is not universal free education. Various nations surpass us—even Japan—in universal primary education. But America is the only nation that has ever undertaken to provide a high school education for all her citizens. Higher education has always been the privilege of the aristocracy. But in America there are about 3,000,000 students in high schools to-day.

These young people are not content with the high school course; they want college training, and it is becoming a grave question how higher education is to be financed in the United States. Even in the wealthy States of the Middle West and the West, the ten thousand, fifteen thousand, or even twenty thousand students in the State universities place a heavy tax on the resources of the State. The 700 high schools of Mississippi are producing so many candidates for college education that the problem of financing both the college and the student is difficult.

It is apparent that Mississippi will not be able to spend many millions of dollars of tax funds on her State colleges and universities in the near future. Every encouragement should therefore be given to the growth of privately endowed colleges such as Millsaps College.

The problem of financing the individual student is also a difficult and interesting one. The ambitious high school graduate without money presents a problem that is national in scope. The Harmon Foundation of New York is making a nation-wide study of student loans. The Field Co-operative Association, founded by Mr. B. B. Jones, of Mississippi, is financing hundreds of Southern students. Various Jackson organizations are providing funds to be loaned to Jackson and Hinds County boys and girls. It is the opinion of those who have made a careful study that a loan made on good business principles to students of character and industry may be both a safe and profitable business transactiou and also better from the student's standpoint than part-time employment, as it permits the student to put all his energies into his studies.

However, the larger proportion of students earn part of their expenses by work. While Millsaps is in no sense an industrial school, the opportunities for part-time employment in the city of Jackosn are highly appreciated. At the same time this select body of intelligent and industrious young people offers to Jackson business houses service of a high type. A real contribution can be rendered by making a specific effort to use these young people where possible.

A number of scholarships are offered by the college to graduates of the Jackson High School. A number more are provided by civic organizations. I should like to see these opportunities increased until the college became virtually the crown of Jackson's free school system, i. e., that the cost of tuition need deprive no Jackson boy or girl of a college education in his own home town. The hope and desire of the college is for the closest and most cordial relations of mutual helpfulness. May there continue to be on the part of Jackson people a friendly concern in all college and student activities from debate to football. May there be a pride in the victories of our athletic teams, that general interest that will bring financial success to our intercollegiate games. Naturally those who are especially interested in sports will be glad to see good athletes enroll in the local institution. They can help to make it possible for any ambitious student to borrow or earn the money necessary to finance himself in college. That is a service that offers unlimited possibilities for good, both as an individual, a local or even as a national enterprise. It should be thoroughly organized and operated on approved business principles—else it will make paupers and crooks rather than men out of its beneficiaries. As you are aware, there is a code in athletic affairs the object of which is to secure an equal chance to rival teams. It forbids players to receive financial inducements to enter college, and each player pledges himself on honor that he has not received such inducement. It does not forbid giving opportunities for service such as a man can accept with self-respect.

If any such professional athletes are placed on Millsaps' teams by misguided friends, they will have to be both expert players and clever liars, and because in that brain-factory out there we are short on brains. Frankly, as citizen and as college official I do not crave for our college and community the notoriety of athletic teams so good that they have to be explained, or an athletic success that is brought about by the co-operation of local sports in bootlegging athletics. The Millsaps Majors have a long-standing reputation for clean sportsmanship, and their splendid success for the past year proves that in the long run it pays. The college and the city should co-operate in the great service of creating intelligence, physical vigor, and character.

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: Having spoken of Jerusalem and its immediate vicinity, it may be well to speak briefly of some other places of interest round about.

On the way to Bethlehem we passed the tomb of Rachel, which called to mind the weeping for her children and her refusal to be comforted. Bethlehem is still a small village, and, so far as we could see, has still a single claim to the attention of the world—the birthplace of Jesus. As usual a church covers the traditional site. But it is a place of more than usual interest. Underneath the floor of the church is a cove in the rock which easily suggests the manger and the traditional setting of the birth of Jesus. It was not so repulsive as the stable which Papini describes in his "Life of Christ," but it is sufficiently natural and primitive to furnish the atmosphere of that first Christmas night. In another room under this same church is the place where St. Jerome translated the Bible into the Vulgate. It is little like the masterpieces of painting with which we are more or less familiar. It is a chamber whose rudeness well befits both the age and the devotional spirit of that apostolic soul. Near this room are the tombs of Jerome and of Eusebius, who was his assistant. There are many places where the purveyors of religious legends are too well informed for those who think, but, all in all, Bethlehem is a sacred place.

On our return from Bethlehem we stopped at Bethany, which is a squalid village, preserving no trace of anything which really suggests the beautiful home which gave it place in the affection of the world. It requires more credulity than I was able to muster to believe in the "tomb of Lazarus." The site of the home of Lazarus and his sisters is cluttered with the rubbish of a Crusader church, and the ruins of the house of Simon the Leper might just as well be the wreckage of one of the hovels of a very much later time.

Jericho, which is situated in the valley of the Jordan, just above the Dead Sea, is an interesting place. There is the present village of that name, the Jericho of the time of Jesus, and the Jericho of the time of Elisha. The present city is a dirty aggregation of mud huts sweltering in the heat of the valley of the Dead Sea. The Jericho of the time of Jesus is perhaps two miles west of the present city, and is only a site. The most interesting spot is the Jericho of Elisha's time. The unfinished excavations show that here was a city, and hard by is the fountain of water which Elisha redeemed with the cruse of salt. It is still called the Fountain of Elisha, and it is a beautiful and refreshing spot at the foothills which border the valley of the Dead Sea.

The Jordan here and the Dead Sea are both engaging, but there is no spot on either one where interest may be focussed. As one looks upon the muddy tide of the Jordan, one can well understand why Naaman preferred the limpid waters of the Abana for his healing ablutions.

Leaving Jerusalem on an early morning train, we traveled toward Joppa. We passed the home of Samson, and coming to Ludd (Lydda) we turned southward through a desert plied with sand dunes and dotted with an occasional grove of date palms. At sunset we crossed the Suez Canal at Kontara, and our feet rested upon the soil of ancient Egypt—the land where God's ambassador to an ancient Pharoah gave to the pages of history one of the most marvelous chapters in the diplomacy of the world.

W. L. DUREN.

JACKSON DISTRICT NOTES.

Notable happenings in our district since the last report. Good revivals in practically all the churches. Pastors active interchanging labors. Several pastors helping outside the district. We will probably report more accessions than last year.

* * *

The goal set by the laymen at the Camden district conference—"a revival in every charge, and collections 100%—is at least in sight so far as the first item is concerned. Now, how about the collections? The preachers and laymen can answer.

* * *

Brother Sells, at Harrisville, has tried the plan of carrying on meetings at his four churches the same week, uniting the meetings at Harrisville the second week, where Brother Bennett, our Conference evangelist, did the preaching. Sells proved that this is a workable plan. There were above forty accessions, a revived membership, and every church pledged to pay up all financial claims.

* * *

M. W. Porter had helping him in meetings recently the following brethren: Otto Porter, at Mount Olivet; Brother Greenway, at Phoenix; Jack Davis, at Satartia. He reports that the prospects of a new building at Mount Olivet are good. If this scribe's memory is correct that is the church where a blizzard came nigh ruining him and Brother Burton's Ford last winter when there substituting for the elder at a quarterly conference. Yes, they need a new church, all right.

* * *

Charley Wesley and his Bentonia congregation are rejoicing over their nice new church. Brother Wiley Ferguson, of Gulfport, is helping in a meeting there this week.

* * *

Camden reports the best third quarterly conference in years. Every church was represented and all reports were good. Allen is in high favor with his people.

* * *

At Vaughn's, Brother Byrd is flying high. He has the neatest, most compact work (three churches) in the district. Meetings in progress conducted by G. S. Harmon and W. M. Sullivan. Vaughn and Seymour are exchanging work, both happy in their bishoprics.

* * *

Sims reports good meetings on the Florence charge. He has as helpers, Chambers, Griffin, Gatlin and Greenway.

* * *

At Mendenhall Brother Greenway, as usual, is doing fine constructive work.

* * *

Downer, at Terry, is having good meetings. With him as helpers are Harkey, Ormond and George H. Thompson.

* * *

Bennett has held the greatest meeting at Edwards that the town has experienced in the past twenty-five years, according to those in position to know. Brother B. F. Jones, with youhtful enthusiasm, pushes the interests of the church.

* * *

Yazoo City, where our beloved Dr. A. F. Watkins is in charge, will hold a rather unique union meeting, participated in by the Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, and Presbyterian churches. The pastors of these churches will take turn about preaching. The place of meeting and other matters pertaining to the meeting will be decided on by a committee of public worship, composed of laymen from these churches. The spirit of cooperation there is fine, and we await the outcome with special interest.

* * *

Brother Barrett, angel of the Fannin charge, while in pursuit of his favorite avocation of Ford mending recently, met with a peculiar accident. In the favorite attitude of said avocation (flat on the back, face upwards, underneath the car), hammering at the radius rods, an unstable "jack" allowed the Ford to descend urgently on our brother. The combined efforts of bystanders relieved the situation, and on examination it was found that all parts were intact and no punctures sustained, though bruises necessitated parking him abed for a few days. We rejoice to state that Brother Barrett is "on the job" again.

* * *

At Pelahatchie, W. J. Dawson, the pastor, had J. V. Bennett in a fine meeting. The Epworth League here is probably the largest in proportion to church membership in the Conference. There are eighty members.

* * *

On the Benton charge, Enoch King has made extensive repairs on the Zeiglerville church, has added four Sunday school rooms to Midway church, and has so repaired old Benton church as to make it look like a new one. All that Benton charge now needs is a new parsonage. Give King a little more time and he will build that, too.

* * *

The price of nails has soared. Our elder picked one up coming through Ellisville the other day that cost him $1.25. Moral: Do not pick things up which do not belong to you.

* * *

With next Sunday our elder starts on the fourth round of the fourth year of his superintendency of the Jackson District. These have been toilsome years, for Brother Burton eats no idle bread, and has little patience for the fellow who does. Despite physical handicaps which would have reduced most men to helplessness, he has vigorously pushed the work of the district and inspired the men associated with him to like endeavors. That these may not seem idle words, read the record.

A Notable Action.

Perhaps the most constructive action taken by any quarterly conference in Southern Methodism was that taken by the third quarterly conference of Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss. The action was in the nature of accepting a trust presented by ten laymen paying $100 each to constitute a loan fund, to be known as the Galloway Memorial Loan Fund. This fund is to be added to annually, to be loaned to students who are taking the course in Religious Education in Millsaps College. The students receiving loans secures the note he gives for the amount he receives (plus 3% interest) by a life insurance policy taken out in favor of the trustees of the fund. Three trustees administer the funds.

These students are required to make monthly or quarterly reports to the quarterly conference of that church, detailing their expenditure.

That this is a notable progressive step is apparent. The credit for this action is about equally due Dr. E. K. Means, the pastor; Brother Burton, the presiding elder, and Prof. C. A. Bowen, of Millsaps College. These generous laymen, who have the vision to see the need this fund will supply, are to be commended.

Professor Bowen has greatly impressed himself on the laity of Jackson, and he has been able, as few men could have done, to impress these men with the tremendous importance of putting over the program of Religious Education in our church. This action of the Galloway laymen, aside from its splendid possibilities of doing good in years to come, is a fine tribute to a gifted and worthy young preacher who is passionately striving to do a great work.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

Amite has retired the debt on the parsonage, and painted the church. The Standard Training School for the central part of the district is being held there this week. Rev. B. H. Andrews, the pastor, is in high favor with his people.

* * *

A new church is under construction at New River, on the Gonzales charge. Rev. A. Brulet is the pastor.

* * *

The Bluff Creek Camp Grounds are located in the bounds of the Olive Branch charge, and the Pine Grove and Greensburg circuits co-operate in its management. Rev. R. W. Tucker did the principal part of the preaching this year, and it was well done. Rev. J. S. Rutledge is the pastor, and is beloved by his people.

* * *

The Clinton charge embraces two country churches besides the town of Clinton. Rev. William Schuhle is the faithful pastor of this people.

* * *

The Pine Grove church, of which Rev. J. Coburn is the pastor, believes in the Epworth League, and sent Mr. Tillman Jones, its president, to the Mansfield Assembly.

* * *

The church in Istrouma was burned in April. Rev. P. B. McCullen, the pastor, and his official board, immediately began planning for a new church. The work on the new building will begin in a few weeks.

* * *

The people of St. Tammany, on the Pearl River circuit, have constructed a new church, and it will be dedicated in a few weeks. Rev. H. W. Jamieson is the pastor. All departments of the church work are organized and working on this circuit.

* * *

The new church at Bogalusa is well equipped to do the best of church work, with Sunday school annex, parsonage and ample room for all church purposes. Rev. Elmer C. Gunn is the pastor, and the plant has been erected under his administration.

* * *

Improvements have been made on the church property at Natalbany, which greatly adds to its usefulness. Rev. B. W. Waltman is the pastor.

* * *

First Church, Baton Rouge, under the efficient pastorate of Rev. C. W. Crisler, has held a great revival, in which Rev. W. B. Hogg did the preaching. About two hundred members have been added to the church this year. This church is remarkable for its splendid board of officials. A contract was recently let for a new church building that, when completed, will represent a value of approximately $200,000.

* * *

Our work west of the Mississippi River is represented by two large circuits; is largely missionary in character, and is a rich field for development. A veteran in this field is Rev. G. P. White, of Livonia, who has spent ten years in his present field, partly in connection with Plaquemine, where he resided for a long pastorate. Rev. H. B. Hines is covering territory enough for two men, and doing two men's work. These two charges should receive ample support from the Conference and connectional boards.

* * *

Rev. A. L. McQueen is the busy pastor of the Denham Springs charge. He has six appointments, holds a revival at each point, and has good Sunday schools and Leagues.

* * *

Greensburg is another six-point circuit in the rural section. The Oakland Camp meeting is a co-operative movement between Centre and Days churches on this charge. When Rev. A. E. Barrett opened the meeting there on Aug. 3 he preached to 1,000 people. He was assisted in the meeting by Rev. L. W. Cain, after Wednesday, Aug. 6.

* * *

Hammond is one of the few tithing churches in the Conference. The District Epworth League Institute was held there Aug. 22-24. Rev. J. E. Selfe is the pastor.

* * *

Rev. B. D. Watson, of the Jackson charge is planning with his people for improvements on the Jackson church. He has recently taken charge of the Boy Scout movement for his town, and is making it a success. The work is prospering under his faithful leadership.

* * *

The revival campaigns on the Zachary and Slaughter charge were called off after the work had begun, on account of local conditions that were unfavorable. But the pastor, Rev. T. J. Warlick, still plans to renew the effort. Rev. F. R. Power had been engaged to do the preaching in both meetings.

* * *

The work on the St. Francisville charge is well done under the faithful pastorate of Rev. W. J. Newsom. There are six points on this circuit.

* * *

The revivals on the Baker circuit were successful at all four points. Rev. J. T. McVey, the pastor, believes in revivals at each point on the charge.

* * *

The country points on the Ponchatoula charge are co-operating heartily in the work. Wesley church had exceeded its assessment at the third quarterly conference, which was held in July. At Lee's Landing a week-day quarterly conference brought out a large crowd and an old-time basket dinner. The Ponchatoula church entertained the district conference royally, and full houses testify to the popularity of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Booth.

* * *

Rev. L. W. Cain is the only four-year man on the district. He is bringing his quadrennium to a close by building a new church at Franklinton, and Sunny Hill, an afternoon appointment. The church at Fisher, also under his pastorate, has built an annex to its church. He is carrying three afternoon appointments, besides his regular station work at Franklinton.

* * *

The Keener Memorial Church has purchased a new building site at the corner of Dufrocq and Government Streets, which is the center of a rapidly growing section of Baton Rouge. Rev. C. C. Miller, the pastor, is leading in this new movement.

* * *

This elder called a halt for three whole days, two weeks ago, and together with his brothers, W. M. and Rev. R. M. Brown, and A. M. Brown and their families left the highways, and trailed the cow paths and pig trails where he rambled when a boy, and renewed his youth at the old springs and swimming holes, and muscadine swamps of his childhood. He is back on the job again, no worse for the vacation.

THE QUESTION OF BOARDS IN THE UNITED CHURCH.

By Bishop W. N. Ainsworth.

It will be readily admitted that the connectional boards are about as important as the General Conference in shaping the affairs of the Methodist Church. These Boards are created by and are subject to the General Conference, which lays down certain broad lines within which their work must be conducted, but they are really more potent than the General Conference in determining the policies of the church. Millions of dollars are disbursed annually by the Mission, Church Extension, Education, Sunday School, and Finance Boards and the entire program of the church is vitally affected by their administration. It becomes a question of primary importance, therefore, to determine how these Boards shall be constituted in the united church, if unification should prevail.

This very important matter is one of the numerous unsettled questions in the pending plan of unification. Not a syllable has been written into the plan with reference to it. Some say that each jurisdiction will have its own Boards, while others insist that the General Conference will provide consolidated Boards to administer their interests in both jurisdictions. The former view will not likely prevail, and, if it should, there would not be much union with two Boards administering in the same territory. A consolidation of Boards has been constantly proclaimed by pro-unificationists as their chief reliance to prevent connectional aid to competitive enterprises, and hence the most direct point of control and cure for overlapping. But how will these consolidated Boards be made up? This is the crux of the matter and undoubtedly one of the most vital and far-reaching problems in unification.

The big Boards are now composed in the two churches of one member from each Annual Conference in this country (together with certain ex officio members), or of members selected in equitable proportion from every section or area of the church. Presumably the consolidated Boards would be made up in this way, and two-thirds of every one of them would be from the Northern Jurisdiction and with Negroes from their Negro Conferences on each one. There is no provision for a "fifty-fifty" basis for these Boards, and it would not be reasonable to expect or right to demand such an arrangement. The Northern Jurisdiction will have twice as many Conferences and members, and will raise twice as much money as the Southern, and is entitled to a larger share in the administration of such funds. On the other hand, it will not appeal to our people in the South to have Boards, administering funds for two Jurisdictions in the same territory, composed of two-thirds from the North, and some of them Negroes, against one-third from the South.

JAMIE HOLDER.

For some months the family and friends of Miss Jamie Holder had been fearing that the end was near. This thought, however, was kept in the background and every effort was made that could be made to keep her here to bless the world. But, after all had been done that could be done, the hour struck for her to go up higher, and she went to heaven Wednesday morning, July 30, 1924.

Jamie was the second child of Brother and Sister J. H. Holder. She was just in the bloom of youth, having passed her seventeenth birthday in June. Very young, indeed, to be overtaken by disease, and yet a beautiful age, to go to heaven. She will get more of heaven than those of us who go on later.

It has never been our privilege to see a girl with more faith than Jamie had. Only a few days before the end came she was expressing her desires as to the line of church work she would pursue when she got well. There seemed to be no doubt in her mind as to her recovery. We shall always feel glad that we have known such a character.

She leaves a heart-broken father and a sister, Elizabeth, and friends to the number of her acquaintances. We will all miss her cheerful life.

The funeral was held at the family home in New Albany, July 31, by her pastor, J. D. Wroten, assisted by Dr. J. R. Countiss, of Grenada, Miss.; Rev. E. G. Mohler, of Booneville, Miss.; Rev. W. R. Lott, of Amory, Miss., and Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Corinth, Miss. Her body now rests in the family lot in New Albany Cemetery. God bless the family.

J. D. WROTEN.

MAKING THE MOST OF HOLIDAYS.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

"What real need is there that we should have holidays?" was the question the Rev. W. J. May, a Wesleyan minister well known in Methodism, asked in the Methodist Recorder some time ago. "Our fathers seldom or never had a holiday. Why, then, should we?"

The answer may be found in the manner of our living. We cram more activity, more emotion, more spending of ourselves for this or that, into ten years than our fathers crammed into a lifetime. So we find ourselves exhausted by the strain, and we are compelled to rest. What was once a luxury is now a necessity. Whether a fashion of life makes a holiday a physical necessity is another question. To many of us it is a question we find no answer for; that life is thrust upon us. Holidays are a moral and spiritual necessity. What time have we to think? What opportunity have we to remember the things which belong unto our peace? There is only the weekly day of rest, and the cares of Saturday and the anxieties of Monday encroach upon that, and Sunday brings so many social claims that we often find so little peace and less refreshing in it. For the sake of the life of spirit and soul, the holiday has become a necessity, and I want to make a plea for that side of the holiday opportunity of renewing spiritual strength.

Many people think that the holiday is supremely an opportunity of escape from thought about all things more serious than frocks and excursions. Holidays give us time to think. It is a time to examine our soul and see how we stand, to take stock of the things of the spiritual life, and mark what losses we have sustained, what gains we have made. There has not been much time to care for the soul in the rush and hurry of business life and social life. It is not an easy thing in the rush and press of modern days to find time for the education of the heart. The books we keep for quiet hours are left unread, waiting for the quiet hour that never comes. Now, at last, you have time to think.

Physical renewal is important enough; we all acknowledge that. Mental rest and restoration are absolutely essential; much more, then, must we attend to the needs of the sin-sick soul. Whether you are concerned, or whether you are indifferent, Jesus is concerned about it. The waves that wash up the shingle will speak to you of his cleansing power. The tides that ebb and flow will remind you of the tides of his spirit in your soul. The breezes will whisper to you of the Spirit which is the breath of his new life. The quiet countryside will tell you of his peace.

Jesus, in these quiet days, will remind you that he does not only come to reveal your desperate state, but to remedy it. He is the great Restorer of the soul. There is no sickness he cannot cure, no disease he cannot heal, no weakness he is not able to reinforce with Almighty power. You will give Nature a chance to renew wasted tissues, and to restore an over-tired, over-taxed brain. Will you give Jesus a chance to restore your soul?

A few weeks ago I stood in Westminster Hall, and looked up at the beautiful vaulted roof. It had been restored, for it was found that the oak rafters which had stood for centuries, apparently intact, had been attacked by the "death-watch beetle." The beams looked all right. Everything appeared safe enough; the rafters looked as solid as ever. But the heart had been eaten out of them; they needed to be restored, for they had become a peril rather than a support. Steel replaced the oak. That is a parable for those who have ears to hear. "Heart of Oak"—what finer compliment can you pay a man than that? "Heart of Oak"—what is more trustworthy and secure than that? Heart of oak, eaten out and destroyed by the death-watch beetle—restored; restored with steel to reinforce the oak. Who but its Builder and Maker can restore the temple of the living God when it is battered and weather worn?

Instead of giving religion a holiday this year and crowding God and holy things out of your life, give the world and business a holiday. Give God an opportunity to carry on his work of restoration.

OVER $600,000 PAID TO DATE—DID YOUR CHARGE HELP TO PAY IT?

Each day pushes the total paid on quotas for Superannuate Endowment to a higher mark. Is your charge doing its bit in the big program? If not, you have no reason to rejoice except because of what other charges have done. You will not experience the real thrill of the thing, until your charge does something to make the thrill possible. Do not be content to stand on the side lines and applaud the procession, but lock-step with the marchers and become a part of the procession.

WHAT THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES ARE DOING.

It is interesting to know that the Special Effort is going in every sections of the church. As an evidence of this fact, attention is called to the amount paid on quotas by each Annual Conference to Aug. 1, 1924, as follows: Alabama, $11,495.31; Arizona, $624.20; Baltimore, $642.25; Central Texas, $9,850.85; Denver, $2,036.96; East Oklahoma, $5,158.57; Florida, $29,609.55; Holston, $21,450.05; Illinois, $2,200.21; Kentucky, $21,095.26; Little Rock, $9,782.45; Louisiana, $21,009.96; Louisville, $29,226.04; Memphis, $12,140.71; Mississippi, $13,188.80; Missouri, $16,732.35; New Mexico, $1,453.42; North Alabama, $13,240.32; North Arkansas, $10,939.59; North Carolina, $28,344.41; North Georgia, $25,651.01; North Mississippi, $12,205.51; North Texas, $23,419.43; Northwest, $1,664.09; Northwest Texas, $5,738.11; Pacific, $7,245.22; St. Louis, $18,021.07; South Carolina, $11,592.22; South Georgia, $10,159.78; Southwest Missouri, $22,702.74; Tennessee, $30,696.63; Texas, $6,014.63; Upper South Carolina, $15,064.21; Virginia, $31,258.44; West Oklahoma, $4,210.65; West Texas, $23,569.46; Western North Carolina, $14,677.10; Western Virginia, $18,313.10.

THESE ARE HITTING ON ALL FOUR.

It is splendid to do a thing the way it ought to be done. Then you can smile when it is over. The Special Effort calls for at least one-fifth of the total quota to be paid the first year, and hundreds of charges have done it. The list of those doing it grows longer every week. In addition to those already published, note the following:

Crab Orchard and Grassy Cove, Tennessee, Cookeville, Rev. T. E. Marshall, pastor; total assumed quota, $450; amount remitted, $169.60.

O'Fallon and Wentzville, Missouri, Mexico, Rev. E. W. Reynolds, pastor; total assumed quota, $908; amount remitted, $307.75.

Carrollton charge, Kentucky, Shelbyville, Rev. G. D. Prentiss, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,000; amount remitted, $596.50.

Olmstead, Illinois, Murphysboro, Rev. C. F. Corzine, pastor; total assumed quota, $600; amount remitted, $146.01.

State Street (Bowling Green), Louisville, Bowling Green, Rev. J. A. Chandler, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,375; amount remitted, $700.

Bucklin Station, Missouri, Chillicothe, Rev. J. A. Medley, pastor; total asumed quota, $1,332; amount remitted, $667.

Smith's Chapel and Shiloh, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. T. B. Harris, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,672; amount remitted, $351.50.

Wewoka, East Oklahoma, Shawnee, Rev. G. W. Griner, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,866; amount remitted, $375.

Chilhowie, Holston, Wytheville, Rev. J. V. Hall, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,750; amount remitted, $443.50.

Highlands (Fort Thomas), Kentucky, Covington, Rev. J. P. Strother, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,000; amount remitted, $600.

Epworth Church (New Orleans), Louisiana, New Orleans, Rev. J. B. Grambling, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,750; amount remitted, $425.

Central Church (Kansas City), Southwest Missouri, Kansas City, Rev. M. N. Waldrip, pastor; total assumed quota, $12,401; amount remitted, $8,028.75.

Westport Church (Kansas City), Southwest Missouri, Kansas City, Rev. W. A. Tetley, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,620; amount remitted, $732.

Booneville, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. O. M. Rickman, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,897; amount remitted, $825.

Leander, West Texas, Lampasas, Rev. M. L. Derby, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,610; amount remitted, $398.

Pruiton, North Alabama, Florence, Rev. W. Parkin, pastor; total assumed quota, $200; amount remitted, $40.

FUMBLES LOSE MANY TIGHT GAMES.

"We would have won if Red had not fumbled the ball." So said a husky athlete when the struggle was over. Many pastors would win in the Special Effort, except for his "fumbles." To help you win, note the following:

1. That all payments on quotas must be sent direct to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., and should be in the hands of the Board by the time of the meeting of your Annual Conference. Otherwise credits for payments cannot be given in the official report of the Board which will be published in the Minutes of the Annual Conference.

2. That the Treasurer's Book of Remittance Forms should be used in making payments on quotas. One of these books was sent to every charge in care of the pastor. If the book sent has been lost, another can be secured by application to the Board.

We can't remember having heard of a man who held the plow handles until he was a nervous wreck.—Denton Record-Chronicle.

The Home Circle

WHAT THEY CAUGHT.

Four deluded youngsters
On a summer day
Just to go a-fishing
Slyly ran away.
Willows, worms and tackle
To their work they brought;
And if you'll believe me,
This is what they caught:

Tommy caught a wetting,
He was overbold;
Jimmy caught a scolding;
Johnny caught a cold;
Harry caught a whipping
Much against his wish;
But with all their trouble
No one caught a fish.

—Exchange.

ON A RAINY DAY.

By Emma Florence Bush.

"Oh, dear, it is storming and there is not a thing to do," said Roland, looking out of the window at the pouring rain.

"Not a thing to do," echoed Helen, as she sat in the rocking-chair by the table.

"Not a thing to do," echoed the twins, Edna and Marguerite, as they sat side by side on the living-room couch.

"Not a thing to do," laughed mother, who came into the room just then with baby in her arms. "I wish you could change places with me, then, and do some of the things I have to do. But where are your games, and books, and dolls, and"—

"They are all so old," said Roland. "If it was near Christmas and they were new it would be different, bnt we are tired of them all. I wish I had something new to play with."

Mother laughed again. "I am busy," she said; "so I can't help you, but if I were you, if I could not get what I wanted I would want what I have and make the best of it," and she left them alone together.

The children sat in silence for a minute. Then Helen spoke: "I am going to finish my apron this very minute. I did not want to work on it because I did not have any pretty material. But I am going to finish it now, and then when I do get something pretty I will know how to make a better one." She hurried upstairs for her work-box and was soon busily sewing.

"I guess I will make some puzzle pictnres," said Roland as he watched her. "I had some to cut out, but I didn't like them very well. However, no girl is going to get ahead of me," and soon they heard his jig-saw going merrily, and would you believe it, yes, he was actually whistling!

Edna released her hold on Marguerite. "I know what I am going to do this very minute, Marguerite Basser," she said. "I am going to practice that piece I hate and have had for my lesson for three weeks," and away she ran to practice.

Marguerite sat on the sofa alone. She watched Helen at work, and listened to Roland and Edna, all the time thinking busily. At last she rose and went upstairs where her mother was at work.

"Mother, dear," she whispered, "please tell me what I can do. Roland is making puzzles, Helen is finishing her apron, Edna is practicing, and I don't know of anything to do."

Mother laughed and whispered something. Marguerite's face lighted and sho slipped away, and was soon busily at work in the hall closet.

After a while Helen finished her apron, and looking for something to do came out in the hall. "What are you doing, Marguerite?" she asked.

"Cleaning up," said Marguerite gaily. "Looking over our games and putting them in order. Mother said she thought a cyclone had been through the closet when she looked in yesterday."

Helen had started in to help. "Why," she said, "I had forgotten all about this crokinole game. Let's set it up in the hall when we get through and play a while."

"All right," said Marguerite, "I am almost through, only one shelf, and that won't take us long."

Soon they were busy throwing the rings, and Roland, his puzzles finished, found them there. He watched them a minute, then began to rummage in the closet. "Oh, Roland, don't mix it all up," said Marguerite. "I worked so hard and I want mother to see it tidy."

"I won't," said Roland, "I was only hunting. Why, here is the checker-board I had last Christmas. I had forgotten all about it. I haven't played for weeks. I guess I will get Edna for a game," and taking it in his hands he started for the room where Edna was practicing.

Their game finished, Helen and Marguerite looked around for something to do.

"I know," said Helen. "Mother said she was so busy that she hadn't dusted downstairs yet. Let's do it for her. You take tho dining-room and I will take the sitting-room. We will see who gets through honest first."

Before they knew it the luncheon bell rang, and they began to tell their experiences of the morning.

"I know what I am going to do this afternoon," said Roland. "I am going to look in the hall closet. I had a fine game of checkers and I shouldn't wonder if there were other games we haven't played for a long time.'"

Sure enough, the children found a game of "Flags" they had long ago put away and forgotten, and after that mother came and played "Authors" with them.

Then she brought down an old pasteboard box, so old it was falling apart and had been sewed with thread. She opened it and took out such funny-looking old cards. On the cover it said, "Peter Parley's Trip to New York."

"I found this to-day," she said. "I had it when I was a little girl no older than the twins. There were not so many games in those days, and we were glad to play it over and over. I thought perhaps you would like to try it now."

The children were delighted and shouted with laughter over the quaint, old game.

"What is this I hear?" said a voice in the hall. And how they jumped!

"Why, it's father," they cried. "Father and six o'clock, and we didn't know it was four!

Father laughed, and drew out a package from his pocket.

"I thought you would find the day very long," he said, "and be wishing there was something to do, so I stopped in the store and bought a game for us all to play this evening; but I see I wasted my sympathy."—Zion's Herald.

CONCERNING THE TONGUE.

Did you ever keep your tongue for one day, allowing it to speak no unkind, untrue, no unclean word; allowing it to utter no word about another's business, condemning, or critical word? Did you ever take an inventory of your words at the end of the day?

It was the Greeks who said: "The boneless tongue, so small and weak, can crush and kill." Said the Turks: "The tongue destroys a greater horde than does the sword." The Persian claims: "A lengthy tongue means an earthly death." And: "Don't let your tongue cut off your head." From Arabia comes this: "The tongue's greatest storehouse is the heart." This from the Hebrews: "Though your feet may slip, never let your tongue." The sacred writers say: "If a man claim to be religious and bridle not his tongue, this man's religion is vain." "If a man offend not in word, that same man is a perfect man."—Selected.

PETER PUT-TO-BED.

"Oh, who is Peter Put-to-Bed? At twilight every night he swings the fragrant garden gate and puts the bees to flight; the little birds, half gone to sleep, soft twitter far and near, "It's just Peter Put-to-Bed; old Peterkin is here."

He wears a rumpy lilac gown and has a beard of gray; his slippers flop with every step in such a sleepy way; he's often known to stop and yawn and nearly shut his eyes before he stoops to fold to sleep the weary butterflies.

He strokes the perky pansy heads, and bids the froggies sink down deep beneath the lily pads and quito forget to wink. He strokes the wing of Bobolink and tucks away her head. But Peter's quite too wise to try to put the owl to bed.

Old Peter's in the garden now; I hear the grasses blow as, slippered soft, he trails his robe where bells and lilies grow. I must be putting down my book and going up the stair; he has a way of looking up to see if I am there.—Miriam Clark Potter, in the Youth's Companion.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. Del Longgrear, pastor of Central Church, Columbus, Miss., will begin a revival meeting on September 14. The preaching will be done by Rev. John W. Robertson, evangelist.

Rev. W. W. Holmes and family, of Shreveport, La., have been on their vacation in the Ozarks. Brother Holmes writes that he and family have "Forded" it through a large part of Arkansas, and that they are now on the home stretch.

Brother G. A. Perkins, representative of the American Bible Society in New Orleans, recently called at the Advocate office. Brother Perkins is accomplishing great good here in this city.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference and a pastor in this city, now in the evangelistic work, has just closed a good meeting in one of the churches in Waco, Texas.

It is evident from communications received that many of our people will agree with the editorial of August 28, entitled, "Let the Church Vote on Unification." One of the communications especially commended the democracy of the plan proposed.

Centenary Church, McComb, Miss., is planning for a $100,000 church building in the near future, so as to be able to care for the growing Sunday school. Three of the classes now have to meet in the city hall. The church is of course planning to have a large part in the meeting which will be conducted by Gipsy Smith, Jr., in McComb, in October.

The Methodist congregation of Millport, Ala., recently visited Central Church of Columbus, Miss., and the occasion was a most happy and profitable one. The singing of the Millport male quartette was a feature of the service greatly enjoyed, while the entire congregation was edified by the sermon of Rev. J. A. Gann, pastor of the Millport church.

Our church at West Monroe, La., has all the "Conference collections" in full, and is able to report progress in other things as well. Beginning on September 14, Rev. J. B. Culpepper and his party will be with the pastor in a revival meeting. The meetings will be conducted in the evangelist's large tent. The many friends of the pastor at West Monroe, Rev. J. L. Evans, will be glad to know that his health is greatly improved.

Rev. B. F. Lewis, superintendent of the Mississippi Methodist Orphan's Home, Jackson, writes that all the contracts have been let and all the arrangements made for the building of the new dormitory at the orphanage, and before this issue of the Advocate comes from the press work will actually be in progress. We rejoice with Brother Lewis and others who have made this possible.

Rev. J. M. Morse, secretary-treasurer of the Christian Education Movement, Mississippi Conference, desires through our columns to thank his many friends who have been so solicitous about him while he has been for some time in a hospital. We are glad to report that he is much improved after an illness of several weeks, that he is now able to sit up and to do some little walking about.

Bishop Hay has appointed Rev. R. L. Armstrong to succeed Dr. Briscoe Carter as pastor at New Iberia, La. Dr. Carter having been appointed to take up the Centenary work in the Louisiana Conference. New Iberia is one of the leading churches in south Louisiana, a cane and sugar section of great wealth and wonderful possibilities for our church. Brother Armstrong has been serving until this recent appointment as assistant pastor of First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge.

A letter from Rev. R. A. Tucker, presiding elder of the Grenada District, brings the sad news of the death of Thurman Liming, the eleven-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Liming, of Waterford, Miss. The unfortunate lad was killed by falling under the wheels of a truck on August 23. He was buried at Black Jack church, in Benton county, the day following his death. The service was conducted by Rev. R. A. Tucker, assisted by Rev. W. L. Robinson and Rev. L. Betterton. This was the only son and the oldest child of his parents. Our sympathy goes out to the sorrowing parents. Brother Liming is a member of the North Mississippi Conference.

Under the leadership of Rev. L. I. McCain, the church at Lafayette, La., will soon begin the construction of a church building to cost $75,000 or more. This will be a great achievement for this congregation, which is small in number. A new lot has been secured in the center of the city, in a very commanding location, across the street from the handsome high school building and only one block from the route of the Old Spanish Trail, now a fine highway leading from the Texas line through south Louisiana into New Orleans and beyond. Members of the church in Lafayette report that the preaching of Brother McCain is drawing an attendance which taxes the capacity of the present house of worship.

The Editor of the Advocate is enjoying a much-needed vacation of a few days at Ellisville, Miss., and it is safe to assume that editorial cares are not pressing heavily upon him at this time, and that conflicting estimates and opinions of his recent editorial concerning a referendum of the matter of unification are not troubling him, for at the exact moment at least of this writing they are lying on his desk in New Orleans as yet unseen by him. It is also safe to assume that some of the clear-running streams about Ellisville have recently seen the gleam of a "Shannon twin-spinner." If you do not know what that is you are a very unfortunate fellow, and not at all like the first disciples.

Rev. W. H. Lane, of Purvis, Miss., reports several good revivals in his charge during the summer. At Union Grove Church, with Rev. J. F. Campbell doing effective preaching, the church was revived and one was received into the church upon profession of faith. Beginning July 25, at Purvis, Rev. Joseph A. Smith assisted the pastor in a gracious meeting, which resulted in seven additions to the church. Another revival was held at Talowah, with Rev. B. H. Williams doing the preaching. The church was greatly blessed and six were received upon profession of faith. Brother Lane and his family were recently recipients of a number of good things which were brought to the parsonage by the kind folk of Purvis.

A Methodist layman's rally for the northern portion of the Shreveport District, Louisiana Conference, was held at Vivian, on Thursday evening, August 21. The meeting was planned and carried out by Dr. H. B. Wren and other church workers with a view of inspiring greater activity among the laymen of the church. The ladies of Vivian served supper on the church lawn to the guests from out of town, and a good program was carried out from eight to ten o'clock. The following laymen were present and made inspiring talks: Messrs. R. T. Moore, H. H. Bain and Blanton from Shreveport; Mr. Keith from Ida, and Mr. Douglas from Gilliam. Mr. T. B. Jones, of the Queensborough Church, led the music. A similar meeting will be held in that portion of the Shreveport District before the end of the year.

Work has begun on the great new church building at Baton Rouge, La., where Dr. Charles W. Crisler is the pastor. This building will be one of the greatest churches in the country, and is especially designed to meet the needs of this growing congregation of the capital city of Louisiana, and especially the needs of the church for larger facilities for the work of the young people. With the completion of this great church plant some time during the following Conference year, the pastor and people will greatly enlarge their work, especially in the department of the Sunday school, complete facilities for which will be provided in the new building. The fact that there were 385 Methodist students in the State University at Baton Rouge during the last session shows the importance of the work of our church in the capital city and this announcement that work has commenced on the new church plant will be received with general satisfaction by our readers.

A beautiful service has been prepared for the unveiling of the baptismal font, on Sunday morning, Sept. 7, in the Algiers Methodist Church, New Orleans, La., which will be presented to the church by Rev. C. C. Wier, in memory of his beloved wife, Virgie Ewell. Brother Wier is now presiding elder of the Alexandria District of the Louisiana Conference, but was pastor of the Algiers church when Mrs. Wier passed to her reward, after a long illness marked by her patient endurance of suffering and expressions of triumphant faith. The responsive reading will be most appropriately taken from Proverbs 31, 10-31. Beautiful music has been prepared by the choir. Joseph E. Wier will unveil the font, Rev. C. C. Wier will present the font, and Rev. J. C. Rousseaux will accept it as the pastor of the church. Immediately following the presentation, the font will very appropriately be used for the first time in holy baptism.

Rev. T. B. Thrower, pastor on the Shuford Rural Demonstration Charge, Shuford, Miss., writes that he has just completed the round of protracted meetings for the year, and that they were attended by good results. Thirty-seven were added to the church upon profession of faith, and two by certificate. Brother Thrower was fortunate in the help which he secured for these meetings. Rev. P. F. Luter, of Hernando, did the preaching at Eureka; Rev. J. A. George, of Ripley, at Mount Olivet; Rev. R. G. Moore, of Coldwater, at Lovejoy, and Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Oxford, at Pisgah. These brethren all preached an effective gospel and God blessed their efforts. In connection with each meeting a daily Bible school, on the order of the vacation school, was conducted by Miss Brand, the rural worker on the charge, assisted by two or more young ladies of the church. The parents co-operated by having their children attend these schools every morning from 8:30 to 10:45. Some of the children came from quite a distance. They were taught the Scriptures, and to work, to play and to pray. Much good was accomplished.

The McComb Journal recently published the following concerning the prayer meetings at Centenary Methodist church: "Prayer meeting attendance at Centenary church 'fell down' last Wednesday night, there being 'only' 156 present. as against 188 the week before. But it was found that while the average attendance for July was 120 the average for August was 157. This news should be of state-wide interest—yea, even nation-wide interest,—for everybody who is familiar with prayer meetings of any kind knows that they are not characterized by crowding in the pews, and that a church which can muster a crowd numbering from a dozen to forty regularly once a week is keeping up a 'fair' average." Rev. J. L. Sells, pastor of the Centenary church, writes that the attendance upon the prayer meeting there has steadily grown since the first of January, from an attendance of forty to the figures given above. He also states that the attendance upon prayer meeting at Pearl River Avenue and La Branch Street is very good. McComb is setting all our patronizing territory a fine example in the interest shown in the midweek service of the church. There is no doubt as to the results which will come in the life of the church there.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Annual Conference will meet at Lake Charles on Wednesday, Sept. 10, at 3 p.m., Bishop Sam R. Hay will be present.

REMEMBERS DR. BOSWELL.

Dear Dr. Carley: On returning home from an extended trip I noticed an article on the death of Dr. J. W. Boswell, so I looked up my Nashville Advocate and read with interst the acocunt of his life and death. I have known Dr. Boswell possibly longer than any other living minister. His first work was the Oxford circuit of '59 and '60. I well remember his youthful appearance and his boyish manners with the high crowned silk hat worn then by all preachers. He was junior preacher with Brother Perry, and his appointment was in the week day. Dr. T. L. Boswell was his father; he was a great preacher. My first work was the Hickory Flat circuit, where Dr. Boswell was married a few years before, and where he learned to make shoes and boots to supplement his salary during the Civil War. His wife's family were excellent people. I spent many pleasant hours in their hospitable home. In 1871 I visited Rev. A. J. Sea, who was sick, and I found the brethren of Sardis carrying on a prayer meeting hoping that Brother Sea would soon recover to continue his meeting. So I took charge of the meeting, and we wired Dr. Boswell to come up from Grenada and preach for us. He was delayed one day, and I said to him why did you not come yesterday, and with a smile he pointed to his foot and said. "I had to make me a pair of boots to wear before I could come." (Where is the station pastor now who will do likewise?) He did us some fine preaching. In 1884 he and I corresponded. I met him in Dallas in 1902 at the General Conference, and a few years ago I got a most brotherly letter from him in regard to the charter members of the North Mississippi Conference. There were then only seven living as far as I know; now there are only two, J. J. Brooks and myself. I am in good health for my age, and preached yesterday for my pastor, on "God's Purpose in the Creation of Man."

Yours in Christ,

S. W. MILLER.

A CORRECTION AND OBSERVATIONS.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Several times recently the charge has been made in the public press and at least one widely circulated pamphlet that Bishop W. A. Candler has said: "We grow by race prejudice," which charge is followed by some more or less frenzied exclamations of horror.

Now, no one who knows Bishop Candler, and is capable of fair judgment, will believe that he said any such thing.

What the Bishop did say is, We grow by respecting national lines and racial prejudices"—a very different statement. His meaning is perfectly clear. All growth must begin with what is—not with what is desirable. Development is only possible when clearly recognizing and properly dealing with the situation that really exists. "National lines and racial prejudices" are facts that are found everywhere (not merely in the South, as some uninformed persons seem to fancy), and hope of progress lies in recognition and right treatment. This is such an elementary principle in pedagogics that it is astounding to find anybody questioning it.

Now, the situation of these writers is interesting. Ordinarily they are intelligent and discriminating persons, and no doubt intend to be perfectly truthful and fair in all their statements. But, though it is evident from the published articles that Bishop Candler's full statement was before their eyes, they have grossly misquoted his words and misrepresented his position, and then held him up to contempt by their hysterics and horrors over what they accuse him of saying.

Now here is the peculiar situation: The only excuse for, or mitigation of, these false charges, so publicly made, comes from the realization that these intelligent, discriminating Christian writers were laboring under blinding prejudices of their own—prejudices that set their minds and colored their judgments to see only what they preferred to see. Either they must plead their own prejudices in extenuation of their gross fault, or else they must accept the full moral responsibility for conscious and purposeful misrepresentation of Bishop Candler—a thing unbelievable of Christian gentlemen.

Evidently, these brethren are caught in their own trap.

Two observations seem appropriate here:

1. Witnesses whose statements will not bear checking up with the actual facts have discredited themselves for further participation in a cause. The honest-hearted of their own side will decline to hear them thereafter.

2. In the discussion of "unification" it will hardly be discreet for anybody to throw too wild a fit of horrors over his opponent's prejudices. There is an old proverb about stones and glass houses.

CASTING OUT FEAR.

By C. A. C.

"Why do we fear?" quietly interrogated a woman recently, and the tone of her voice indicated that it was all such a pitiful mistake. Sore bereavement, physical disability and financial stringency had combined to make the preceding year the saddest and most difficult one of her life.

"Looking back now," she resumed after a pause, "hard as things were we have suffered no real want; the Divine Presence and the human hand of kindness have never once failed us. Again and again doors were opened, ways were made where there seemed at times no door, no way. The future is not likely to be any more difficult than the past—it may be far easier and brighter, so why fear?"

To learn and lay steadfastly to our heart the faith that trust is truer than our fears would transform, as few other convictions, our whole outlook on life.

"If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars," sang Arthur Hugh Clough, and an honest page out of the life experience of most of us would prove conclusively that hope has duped us scarcely once, where fear has lied us into cowardice and disquiet a score of times. For the deceptive hopes we have probably learned a more cautious wisdom and courage to smile in the face of failure and defeat, making disappointment less vital loss than spiritual gain. From lying fears we have had only harassing hours of useless worry, depleted vitality and blindness to present blessings with secret shame and humiliation for our ignobie distrust. Lord Beaconfield said 'that the greatest tragedies in his life had been things that never happened.

Some one has said that the reason the past appears so much more beautiful to us than the present is that in retrospect the element of fear is absent from it. It is only by faith, not alone "the faith that looks through death," but the faith also that can look bravely and trustingly through the daily, hourly exigencies of to-day and to-morrow, can fear be effectually eliminated; by faith alone in Him "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," can we successfully vanquish those grim spectres of the unknown that haunt us in the dark hours of difficulty, reverses, illness and uncertainty. "Belief and love," declares Emerson, "a believing love will relieve us of a vast load of care. O, my brothers, God exists."—Christian Guardian.

THE BROTHERHOOD.

One of the strangest and most interesting and most significant things about the earliest Christian history during the lifetime of Jesus and his immediate disciples was the way in which men and women of differing nations and of the most diverse types were brought together into a great fellowship in which mutual understanding and appreciation and love were very real and vital forces in every-day experience. In one of the shortest and simplest of the New Testament books we have what must have seemed a most inexplicable picture to the people of that time of Paul, the Pharisee, and Philemon, the Gentile, and Onesimus, the slave, insisting that the things which might have driven them apart were as nothing compared with the things which united them in a bond of understanding and love and the truest of good fellowship. "Behold, how these Christians love one another!" was the ejaculation forced from the lips of those who did not love them specially or were not greatly interested in them, but who were forced to see this thing about them that was so outstanding and so full of meaning. No one can read these chapters of New Testament history without coming to the conclusion that the Christian spirit and the Christian principle of love are strong enough and vital enough and warm enough to bind together into a real unity the most diverse types of men.—Christian Guardian.

In the early morning of May 6, 1924, the Prince of Glory decided that the days of probation were over for WILLIAM LEWIS COSTLEY, of Hamburg, Miss., aged 68 years. Born in Jefferson County, Miss., in December, 1855, he grew up into manhood in the county of his birth, and married Miss Viola Bedford on Dec. 24, 1884. He then moved to an adjoining county, Franklin, where he resided the remainder of his life. He joined the Methodist church when but a boy, and thus being in a religious environment from his youth up, it was indeed fitting that he should serve his Redeemer as a Methodist Sunday school superintendent for many years. He grew up in the church, he died in the church. He was a steward at the time of his death, which came at Baton Rouge, La., at the home of one of his daughters, after almost a year's illness. He is survived by four daughters and two sons: Miss Kate Costley and Mrs. Ethel Aldridge, of Hamburg, Miss.; Mrs. F. J. Blake, of Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. V. P. Farr, of Baton Rouge, La.; H. L. Costley, of Darling, Miss., and William L. Costley, Jr., of Hushpuckena, Miss. His body lies at rest at Mount Carmel, one mile east of Hamburg, while his spirit has gone on to be with his beloved companion and wife, who preceded him by twenty years, to be with his Maker, and

"To drink the living waters
And stand upon the shore,
Where neither sorrow, sin, nor death
Shall ever enter more."

MR. T. L. ENNIS fell on sleep Aug. 13, 1924. Mr. Ennis was born in Georgia, but moved to Louisiana in 1899, and settled in the community known as Elmore. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at New Prospect, on the Elmore charge (now Clay charge) twenty-six years ago, where he remained a devoted member for eight years. He was always found in his place and discharged his various duties that were laid upon him by the church to the best of his ability. He then removed to Ruston and changed his membership, and remained a consecrated member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Ruston until his death. Mr. Ennis was born July 15, 1853. He was never married, but leaves a loving and devoted sister, Miss Lily Ennis, and two nieces, Mrs. Patterson, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. Hancock, of Columbus, Ga. In the absence of his pastor, Brother Joyner, the writer was called to hold the funeral. It was held in the home. A large number of sympathizing friends were present. In his afflictions, Brother Ennis always showed great patience, and trusted in his Lord. He has risen above the toils and cares of this mortal life to a life of peace and rest with God. May we each strive to live as he lived, that when the summons comes we, too, will be ready to meet death in triumphant victory.

L. M. SMART.

MR. JAMES LOUIS WILSON—IN APPRECIATION.

The subject of this sketch was born in Gloster, Miss., March 15, 1892. At the age of 6 weeks he moved with his parents to Boyce, in April, 1892, and from Boyce to Alexandria in 1899. After a tragic death by drowning, July 20, 1924, at Floralla, Ala., his remains were brought to Alexandria and laid to rest in Greenwood cemetery July 23. His death was a very sad one. His taking represents an unfinished life, as he was only 30 years and a few months of age. Mr. Wilson was a lieutenant in the late war. He received his training at Camp Logan H. Root, Little Rock, Ark., but was afterwards stationed at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., where he was discharged after the armistice was signed. He was a member of Company M at Alexandria, and went with them to the Mexican border in 1916. He was a grandson of Captain James R. Wilson, of the Confederate Army, who was captured at the fall of Port Hudson. He was a Mason and an Elk, and a member of other organizations, who participated in the funeral rites. He was also a member of the Alexandria Methodist church, and in the absence of the pastor, Dr. O. W. Bradley, the Christian funeral service was conducted by Rev. C. C. Wier, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, assisted by Dr. B. L. Price, of the Presbyterian Church, and Dr. W. P. Price, of the Calvary Baptist Church, and his uncle, Rev. Delos H. Cassels, a Methodist minister of Gloster, Miss. The funeral was most impressive, and from the moment of the helpful words, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," until the Veterans sounded taps and the white-robed men deposited a cross of flowers, there was a solemnity over the assembled relatives and friends, who felt deep sorrow that he had been taken. He had only lived in Florala, Ala., a short time, where he was sales manager of the Florala Lumber Company at the time of his death. He is survived by his parents, Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Wilson, of Alexandria, La.; his widow, who was Miss Martha Sheltou, of Richmond, Va.; his two small children, two brothers, Messrs. John L. and Rivers Wilson, of Alexandria, and the following sisters: Mrs. Howard La Caze, Alexandria; Mrs. Mark Alexander, New Orleans, and Miss Margaret Wilson, of New York City. We deplore the taking of this young life that was so full of promise and hope. In the midst of his years, just as he had launced out into the deep, and success was in his grasp, he was taken. We weep beside him as beside a broken column, for his life was incomplete and unfinished. We deplore his untimely taking. To the immediated relatives and loved ones we extend tenderest sympathy, and pray that a Father in heaven may bless and comfort them in this hour of sorrow and bereavement.

C. C. WIER.

FROM HARRISVILLE, MISS.

My Dear Dr. Carley: We closed last Thursday night the greatest evangelistic effort the Methodist churches of this section of the county ever put forth. There are four churches on the Harrisville charge, with the Harrisville church situated in the center and the Rexford, Mt. Pisgah, and Poplar Springs churches lying round about. We began meetings at all four of these churches on Sunday, Aug. 3, with the following brethren assisting: Revs. J. V. Bennett, M. L. Burton, J. W. Sells, and J. C. Ellis, Jr. Rev. J. L. Sutton preached for Brother Bennett on the first Sunday, Brother Bennett coming Monday morning. The meetings at Rexford, Mt. Pisgah, and Poplar Springs closed Saturday, Wednesday and Thursday, in the order named, with a total of 17 accessions. Then, on the following Sunday, we all came together at the Harrisville church for a circuit-wide meeting, which was a continuation of the meeting at that church. From Sunday through Thursday, Brother Bennett preached three and four times a day, to the largest congregations ever assembled here. Several times there were five hundred people seated in the church, and it was built by a membership of one hundred, and is in the open country. God was with us in all of our services, and we were all greatly blessed. There were fifteen accessions by profession, ranging from nine to sixty years of age, also four by letter. This makes a total of thirty-six on the entire charge.

This plan was a new one, but I believe a good one. "In unity there is strength." The pastor was hindered from being at all of the services, but the visiting brethren did the work well, and my absence was hardly felt. We thank God for his goodness, and take courage.

Bishop Ainsworth will be with us on the 25th of September to dedicate our new church. Come and be with us.

We are winding up our fifth year here, and hope to report a clean slate at Conference.

Rev. R. S. Stewart, of Wilmore, Ky., one of the general evangelists of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will begin a series of revival meetiugs at the Methodist church here, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, August 24. While a native of Georgia, Dr. Stewart has been doing evangelistic work in Korea, in connection with the missionary work in that country for several years, but for the past year has been teaching in Asbury College, at Wilmore, Ky.

He is considered one of the strong preachers of the denomination, and has been unusually successful as an evangelist. He will bring with him his song leader and services will be conducted at the church twice daily, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and each evening at 7:45. Preliminary services will be conducted Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, at 7:45, and committees have been appointed to take charge of all details of the revival.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Much Interest Being Shown in the Large Number of Women Safely Carried Through the Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Following Letters Are Impressive

Owing to modern methods of living, few woman approach this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying and often painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, nervousness, headaches, melancholia and irritability are only a few of the symptoms incident to this trying period of a woman's life, and the following letters prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to overcome these abnormal conditions.

"Fisherville, Ky.—"For several months I was under the doctor's care as he said my nervousness, chills, hot flashes and weakness was caused by the Change of Life, but I did not seem to get any better. I was not able to work and spent most of my time in bed. A friend called to see me and asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you how much good the medicine did me, as I had such a hard time before taking it. I can only advise every woman passing through the Change of Life to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it did so much for me."—Mrs. EDWARD B. NEAL, Star Route, Fisherville, Ky.

A Michigan Woman Helped

Ionia, Michigan.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and had been under the doctor's care without any relief. A friend in Lansing, Mich., asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel fifty per cent better already. If any one in this condition doubts the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to help them I will gladly answer their letters."—Mrs. MAX W. HAHN, 537 N. Jefferson Street, Ionia, Mich.

A New York Woman Helped

Syracuse, N. Y.—"I was used up with nervousness, weakness and hot flashes so I could hardly keep around, and could not get out much on account of those awful prickly feelings. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helping another woman with symptoms like mine. My husband got some for me, and after taking it five months I can get around and even do my housework, washing and ironing included, and my friends can see what a change it has made in me."—Mrs. SIDNEY HUMPHREY, 826½ Burnet Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The business of the Church is to bring the kingdom of God on earth as it is in heaven. When the leaders of the Church are husy at other things they need fresh orders from ahove. The kingdom should he first and uppermost in our hearts all the time. When we accept Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord he expects ns to accept his attitude toward the kingdom.

It is my purpose to visit every school that has adopted the Program of Work and "check up" that the school may see what it lacks in doing its full share in the hringing in the kingdom of God. Let every one of us work to have one hnndred schools cover the ten points of the Program of Work.

The last item under point X—"Annual survey with follow-up plans." This is the most satisfactory method of increasing the enrollment of the Sunday school. A school built up hy this method will last longer, hecause it requires hard work and a real love for souls. Any snperintendent that cares to try this best method of increasing the memhership of his school can get all the cards he needs hy writing to me for them.

Perhaps yon have read notices of the new book in our training course, "The Missionary Message of the Bible," by Dr. Ed. F. Cook. The price of the hook is one dollar. Order of Lamar & Barton, Nashville. This is a fine text for adnlt classes and for young people. No school is teaching all that ought to he taught until the subject of Missions is occupying a large place in its curriculum. Talk to your pastor and yonr superintendent about this course of study.

If every class above the Juniors was organized, as required hy the Program of Work, and all these classes wonld have their membership committees make a campaign for new members and the teachers who have charge of the children from 12 years of age and under, observe Children's Week, Oct. 12-19, we could add ten thousand to the membership of our Sunday schools before the convening of our Conference. All the hishops of our church have given a strong endorsement to our campaign for new members.

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

By Mrs. J. M. Henry, Assistant Conference Superintendent.

The impossible has happened! A successful Standard Training School has heen held in Houma, in the heart of the French territory. Some thought it could not he done, but when thirty people ont of an enrollment of forty do creditahle work and receive a credit, one might reasonahly come to the conclusion that the students were intelligent and earnest.

Mrs. L. M. White and Miss Ella Hooper (the consecrated and efficient superintendent of onr Wesiey House who had been appointed educational director) had things well organized and the students ready for work, with hooks and assignments, the day before the opening session. Probably no school this summer had been better advertised and prepared for than this one.

The faculty is composed of: Rev. Alonzo Early, Prof. D. B. Rawlins, Mrs. J. M. Henry, and Dr. W. W. Drake. Mr. Atkinson is enrolled and is helping to keep the spirit of the school up to the best.

These fine people are deeply interested in the work, and it is a pleasure to see how they are enjoying every phase of the school.

The morning sessions have been unnsual in point of attendance, in spite of the continued hot weather. The inspirational messages hrought by the members of the facnity on Adult, Yonng People's and Elementary Work and Missions, were very impressive. The meetings seemed indeed to he marked hy nnusual earnestness and spiritual uplift. The many instances of sacrifice on the part of the stndents, to he present, and do the work thoroughiy, has been a great inspiration to the instructors. Some of this written work handed in by French people will he sent to the Nashvilie office, that our leaders might see the possibility for greater things, among the French people, in the future.

The school has a quartet, composed of Messrs. Early, Hebert, McCoy and Serex, which has given much enjoyment to all. Mr. Serex, a young Frenchman from Switzerland, who is stndying in the United States, is doing missionary work in the summer among the French, and has helped not only with the music, hut in the recreational work.

The pastor, Rev. McCoy, has done a great deal toward making the school a success. More preachers are in attendance than in any school held this summer.

The educational work of onr church is moving along surely, and as we look into the nea- future, we see a long line of trained teachers and leaders who are saying in their hearts:

"Lead on, O King Eternal,
We follow, not with fears,
For gladness breaks like morning
Where'er thy face appears.
Thy cross is lifted o'er us,
We journey in its light;
The crown awaits the conquest,
Lead on, O God of might."

NOTES FROM RICHTON, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: During July an eight days' meeting was heid at Richton, in which the pastor was ahly assisted hy Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Gulfport. The revival meeting resulted in five accessions to our church by vows, and in a great quickening and enrichment of the spiritual life of the church membership. Our congregation at Richton is now engaged in building a modern, well-equipped Sunday school annex, which, in connection with the remodeling of our house of worship, will cost $5,500 or more. The contract has been let, and work has already hegun.

Our church building at Ovett has just received two coats of paint, and presents an attractive appearance. The first year's quota for the Superannuate Endowment fund (for the entire charge) has been paid in cash. Up to date, forty-four members have been received by vows and baptism, and twenty-four by certificate.

Yours fraternaily,
M. M. BLACK, P. C.

Aug. 21, 1924.

A REVIVAL AT BETHANY, ON THE EDEN CHARGE.

Dear Brother Cariey: Beginning Aug. 10 and closing on Wednesday night, Aug. 13, we had a revivai. The preaching was done by our beloved pastor, Rev. A. W. O'Bryant. God is in his heart and in this work. He gave to this people gospel truth, that spiritual food that we so much need. We were blessed and lifted up hy his preaching, his prayers, and association in the homes.

He toid the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Congregations were good, especiaiiy at night. The people were very attentive and eager to hear.

Whilst we had no new additions to our church, most every one already being memhers of some church, quite a numher gave their hands for prayer, professing new interest in the church.

A nice little offering was presented to Brother O'Bryant, which he accepted and appreciated.

With love and best wishes to the Advocate and its readers,

MRS. J. T. KENLEY,
A memher of Bethany Church.

FROM THE OLIVE BRANCH CHARGE.

The revival at Biuff Creek, La., the only Southern Methodist camp meeting in the State, closed Sunday, Aug. 17, after a ten-day session. Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Homer, La., conducted the meeting, preaching twice each day. Rev. P. B. McCullin had charge of the singing, whiie Rev. C. D. Atkinson iabored with the Sunday school work.

The crowds attending were decidedly larger than last year, due partiaiiy to the ideal weather which prevaiied throughout the encampment. Almost 1200 tickets were sold.

Numerous ministers were there, including H. N. Brown, presiding elder, of Baton Rouge District; William Schuhie, Clinton; R. S. Walton, Rayne; T. D. Lipscomh, Sulphur; W. R. Harvell, Bunkie; B. D. Watson, Jackson; H. C. Murphy, Midway; William Newsom, St. Francisville; J. Cohurn, Pine Grove; J. S. Rutledge, Olive Branch.

The first revival of the year was held at Olive Branch by Rev. A. Brulet, of Gonzales. A splendid work was accomplished there. The church interest was revived and several accessions were made.

Rev. V. G. Clifford, of Centerville, Miss., assisted in a meeting at Clear Creek church. Fifteen persons united with the church there.

At Gilead the meeting was conducted hy the pastor.

Several infants have been baptized this year, and the work is progressing nicely.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY SENDS NEW TESTAMENTS TO FRANCE.

The American Bibie Society has recently sent to the Bibie Society of France 5,000 French New Testaments of a special edition that it prepared during the wartime for the use of American soldiers going to France, and the officer in charge of the affairs of the Bible Society of France, who, by the way, was one of the most briliiant soidiers of the celebrated "Blue Deviis" of the French Army, writes:

"You cannot but realize how useful these New Testaments are going to be to us. Since learning of the shipment of 5,000 New Testaments, we have already sent to certain of our friends some three or four hundred of the New Testaments we had ieft.

"One incident of special interest is the sending of some New Testaments for the occasion of the dedication of the Memorial Church of Chateau Thierry.

"We are going to send a package for gospel work to a mining center at Firmeigny, near St. Etienne, Lyon. We will advise you regarding our distribution from time to time."—Bulletin, American Bibie Society.

Everywhere men are seeking joy and striving for happiness. The haunts of vice, the dens of death, the whirl of giddy society, all, all bear witness to the universai desire for happiness. Pubiish to all the world that hoiiness is the spring of happiness. Christ enthroned within is the fountain of perenniai joy. His people walk "the way of hoiiness" with songs and everlasting joy, and sorrow fades before the sun of righteousness. —L. L. Pickett.

There's part o' the moon in a rose,
There's part of the flaming Pleiades

THE SHILOH CAMP MEETING.

Rankin County has the distinction of having the first camp ground in the State of Mississippi, and one of the oldest in the country or of the South—known as Shiloh—for camp grounds never flourished in the Northern, Eastern or Western States, being a decided product of the South.

The early immigrants to the Territory and State of Misssissippi came from Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Virginia, and what is now Alabama, which State was admitted to the Union two years after Mississippi had assumed statehood.

These sturdy immigrants, the real pioneers of our State, first settled along the river courses, but later, as civilization advanced, spread out towards the west, as the hostile Indians were subdued.

Many of them made homes in the wilderness, along and near the headwaters of Strong river and its tributaries. The lands in eastern Rankin, and south of Pelahatchie, were found to be fertile and proved to be productive, cheap and in every way desirable for immigrants who sought homes and farms in what was then considered the far west.

What is now known as the Shiloh section received a large share of immigrants who were seeking to better their condition; among them many of the most desirable men and women who came to Mississippi. They felled trees and built homes and school houses. They had no churches, and the immigrants who had settled in eastern Rankin, in the year 1832, organized and built Mississippi's first camp meeting, which has for ninety-two years borne the scriptural name of Shiloh.

The story of the famous camp ground, several times destroyed by fire and storm, but always rebuilt, would prove of unusual interest, and as thrilling as a novel if the facts could be given to the public. Its great line of tenters, preachers, and thousands of converts, could the list be obtained, would fill several interesting volumes; for some of the ablest ministers of the country have held services at Shiloh camp ground, and

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

"YOU HAVE BEEN SO LONG IN COMING."

(Extracts from Recent Letters of Miss Phoebe Emery, Missionary of Methodist Episcopal Church, in Budaon, India, to Her Prayer Helper.)

One day we went to eleven villages. Can you imagine what it means on the physical side alone to hold eleven meetings in eleven different villages in one day? We were gone from 8:30 in the morning to 8:30 at night.

We were in an especially needy part of the district. It was so far from Budaon with no railroad that the District Superintendent did not get out very often—and no missionary had been there to do village work for nine years. A new preacher was put in this year, and I was sent out to help him in reclaiming the villages, as a great many of them had gone back to heathenism—and had the joy of reclaiming them all but two or three.

In one place there was an old man, with a long white beard, reminding me of Abraham. He was overjoyed to see us, and kept saying over and over: "You have been so long in coming. You have been so long in coming." Under a tree in the courtyard I saw a pile of old bedding, and my suspicion being aroused, I went over and looked under it. I found, as I expected, that an altar was present. We talked to them about the sin of idolatry, when the old man turned on me with the words: "I know it is all wrong for us to have the altar here, but you must bear your share of the blame. We have sinned, but you have a part in that sin. Twenty-five years ago I was baptized, the first Christian in these parts. I went to one village after another telling my friends and relatives of the joy I had found in the new religion, until they believed and were baptized. All the work in this section is the fruit of my effort. The preachers and missionaries came regularly to teach our children, and we were all happy in the way for years. But about ten years ago the last missionary came to the village, and since that time there has not been a single one here. The Indian preacher quit coming altogether after a little while. I tried to keep the village in the Christian way, but I could not read the Book myself, and I knew only the little I had learned from the preacher. Meantime these young men of the village were growing up without a real knowledge of any religion. They began to ask me questions which I couldn't answer, and by and by I gave up trying to tell them about the religion to which we were all supposed to belong. Then one day one of the holy men happened along and the young men listened eagerly to him. I tried to remember the old teachings that the preachers had taught me, but he only mocked me and told me the preachers and missionaries had forgotten all about me. I had better return to the old religion of my fathers, for in that there were always plenty of priests to help one. What could I do? They were all for returning to the old ways. At last I gave my consent that if they wished they might build an altar. I would not worship at it, but they must have something to worship, and I had forgotten the new ways I had learned from the missionaries, and so could not help them.

"I sinned in thus allowing them to build the altar, for I was elder in the village and my word was law, but, Miss Sahiba, you, too, have a part in that sin. Why have you neglected us for so long? Why has the church forgotten us and allowed us to go on alone? I confess my sin before God, but you must confess yours before we will tear down the altar."

What would you have done if you had been the missionary in my place? There was only one thing I could do. I stood up before the congregation, and in a voice not quite steady I confessed my sin on behalf of the church of Christ in leaving them so long without teaching, and I promised them in the name of that same church that although what was past was past and could not be undone, yet in the future we would do our utmost to carry out the commands of the Master to carry the glad tidings to the village of India. Then to the shouts of "Masih hi jai" (glory to Jesus) the old elder took the spade, and in a few minutes what had been an altar was merely a heap of mud. They all laughed heartily when a tiny toddler, in imitation of his grandfather, took up the spade when he threw it down and began to dig vigorously amid the debries, but I took it as an omen of the future, when those baby hands would carry on the work so ably begun by his grandfather. But, Oh! evangelistic missionaries are so few, and it took all the faith I possessed to make him the promise that the church would not leave him alone again. Beloved prayer-helper, take no rest and give him no rest until his kingdom be established in India.

Later, received Aug. 15, 1924.

My old man "Abraham!" I have not seen him since I left, but conditions are still very bad. The pastor lost his two small children, and he was held up by thieves and robbed of all he had with him. He has 110 villages in his circuit, with only three local preachers to help. That place has always had five, but with the Centenary cuts, retrenchments have had to be made all along the line.

I cannot go back again this year, for I still have seven hundred villages that I have not visited yet, and other places are just as needy as that. When I think of all these shepherdless sheep I wonder that we missionaries ever dare to sleep at night. Oh, pray, pray, beloved, as never before that the Lord will send forth laborers into his vineyard. Everywhere we go we hear the same cry: "Why don't you send us a teacher?" Day before yesterday three villagers followed me half a mile, pleading: "We will build a house with our own hands. We will be willing to pay him Rs 10 a year." Ten rupees a year looked like a big sum to them (rupee about 33 1-3 cents), but when I told them that even 110 rupees would not be sufficient and that we had no money at all for a new worker, they went sorrowfully back to their heathen surroundings, condemned to struggle in the darkness after they have once had a vision of what the light could mean to them. Pray for me that I may be given the strength of ten as I break the Bread of Life to these starving ones. Prayer is a mighty force in the salvation of India. Without the prayers of you faithful ones we would faint under the burden and heat of the day.

(Sent by B. B. Barcroft, 416 Church Street, Tupelo, Miss.)

Miss Barcroft writes with the foregoing letter:

"As a missionary intercessor in all the world, and India in particular, I get many letters from missionaries. I shall appreciate the enclosed in the Advocate for the purpose of arousing interest in the millions without a chance. God has led me to four and one-half hours of prayer a day, five and one-half hours on Saturdays.

Dear co-workers, would it not mean a great deal in the kingdom of God as well as to our own spiritual growth in grace if we each would devote more time in prayer—to be definite in our prayers? Surely our hearts go out to the million in India pleading for the Gospel and to our overworked missionaries there as well as in other mission fields. Those who will pray definitely, daily for India send your names and address to Miss Barcroft, who can let the missionaries in India know about your interests in bringing in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Physician Explains Who Should Take Nuxated Iron

Practical Advice on How To Help Build Up Great Strength, Energy and Endurance

"Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life," says Dr. Emile Sauer, well known New England physician. "It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles without ever realizing the real cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through the body something like corn through an old mill with rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

"For want of iron you may be an old man at thirty, dull of intellect, poor in memory, nervous, irritable and all 'run down,' while at 50 or 60 with plenty of iron in your blood you may still be young in feeling, full of life your whole being brimming over with vim and energy.

"But be sure the iron you take is organic iron—Nuxated Iron—and not metallic iron which people usually take. Organic iron—Nuxated Iron—is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings and is therefore an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron. Nuxated Iron represents organic iron in such a highly concentrated form that one dose is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen baked apples. It is like taking extracts of beef instead of eating pounds of meat."

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It quickly helps make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out exhausted nerves and give increased strength and energy. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if it does not produce satisfactory results.

NUXATED IRON ENRICHES THE BLOOD—STRENGTHENS THE NERVES

THE SHILOH CAMP MEETING.

many of the purest and best men and women of the State were there converted and led to God.

In olden days the Mississippi Conference furnished the preachers, and among them were found such able and distinguished ministers as Dr. Charles K. Marshall, Bishop Charles B. Galloway, and many others, including presiding elders by the score.

Formerly the services were conducted by a dozen or two ministers, specially appointed for that service; but within the last few years, since the evangelistic work became so popular and powerful, the trustees have selected one evangelist to do all the preaching, finding that plan gave better results.

Saturday evening the ten-day service began at Shiloh, with Rev. J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, in charge; Mr. James Stalmaker, music director; with Miss Hattie Lee Lewis, of the famous Lewis family, as organist; Rev. E. H. Cooley, resident minister, as master of ceremonies.

A good sized congregation greeted the minister as he delivered his first sermon of the series, but not his first in reality, for he conducted the services at Shiloh last year, and so pleased were the trustees with his work and result, that they unanimously invited him to return and do the preaching this year.

Sunday morning and afternoon the tabernacle was filled to overflowing, and the great religious meeting might be said to be under full sway, with several conversions the second day.

Rev. Mr. Hanes has been in the evangelical field seventeen years, and his success has been remarkable. He preached short, simple, godly sermons, and his earnest method and deep sincerity impress all who hear him. He is more like Moody than any of the latter-day evangelists—just a preacher of the old-style religion, which wears better and stays longer than much of the new-fangled sermons one hears.

The services at Shiloh will continue till Sunday night, or longer, if interest warrants. The sermons, the singing and the hearty welcome extended visitors, will more than repay a trip to the famous old camp ground.

The program calls for three sermons daily—11 a. m., 3 p. m., and 7:30 p. m. Men's prayer meeting in the grove, at 9 a. m.; ladies' prayer meeting in the church, at 9 a. m.; general prayer meeting in tabernacle at 5 p. m.

A day spent at Shiloh revives one's spirits, invigorates his religious views, and makes him feel like a new person. It is worth a trial and will pay for the effort.—Clarion-Ledger, Aug. 19.

The Centenary has been a great school of missions for the church. It has inspired us, informed us, enlarged our vision, and trained our leaders to see the importance of educating our constituency in world affairs.

Great as have been the Centenary years that have passed into history, still greater years are ahead of us.

THE LATEST FROM MARGARET WILLIAMSON UNION HOSPITAL IN SHANGHAI.

Miss Janet Miller writes enthusiastically of this new work:

"The hospital is wonderful! As I see the needs for the future it is for enlarged quarters for our maternity department. We have no emergency rooms, and emergency cases are frequently brought in when there are no empty beds. We have no choice but to take these cases, as long as we have a roof over our heads, for they are usually women who have suffered the most appalling maltreatment at the hands of superstitious, ignorant midwives. Often they have been in labor for days, enduring unspeakable tortures. There have been times when there were no vacant beds, and after being delivered these patients have had to stay on the delivery table until some other patient could be taken home in the ambulance, often days before she should have gone, to make room for the emergency case. We have many requests for private rooms. If we had numbers of five-dollar-a-day private rooms they would easily support an enlarged maternity department. I do not tell you of the horrors which Chinese women often suffer in childbirth. It just seems too ghastly to be true. But I do want to say that a great lying-in hospital, large enough to accommodate all who want to come, would be the greatest medical contribution which could be made to the women of China. We would like to have these women come into the hospital two weeks before their expected date and, if all goes well, to go home on the tenth day after. Many of these women bring attendants with them. They and these attendants have long hours to listen to personal Christian teaching. In medical and surgical wards the patients are often too ill to listen to the message. In maternity we have our best opportunity.

"This has been a wonderful, record-breaking week. We have had four sets of twins in ten days! When they begin coming two at a time it is rather a large order for us."

"WHO MISUNDERSTANDS, AND WHO IS MISLED?" THE QUESTION ANSWERED.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

Under the caption, "Who Misunderstands, and Who Is Misled?" our church press recently carried an article from the pen of the leading advocate of a divided Methodism. Since the question has been asked, I am happy to have the opportunity of giving the answer.

I.

It would seem to the average Methodist that the men who drew the plan of unification are somewhat more likely to understand it than those who made no contribution toward framing it.

I ask the gentle reader to consider this question: Who is most likely to misunderstand and mislead, the men who have given years of thought and many prayers to the solution of the problem of unification or one who is not only opposed to this plan but who has opposed every suggested plan and who is known to be opposed to the very principle of unification? The reader will not find it difficult to answer this question.

Here are the names of the men representing the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who took part in making the plan:

Four bishops: Edwin D. Mouzon, W. F. McMurry, John M. Moore, and James Cannon, Jr.

Nine ministers: Paul H. Linn, F. P. Culver, H. H. Sherman, D. H. Aston, Stonewall Anderson, N. M. Watson, W. E. Arnold, T. D. Ellis, and L. B. Eirod.

Seven laymen: John S. Candler, H. H. White, J. H. Reynolds, H. N. Snyder, R. S. Hyer, W. H. Stockham, and R. E. Blackwell.

To say the least, these are men of fair average intelligence. The plan now before the church is a Southern plan. The very idea about which it is built is a Southern idea. The essential features of the plan were suggested by our Southern commissioners. With all due consideration to others, we ourselves were doing the leading; we were not led at all. And now comes our critic and says in effect: "Brethren, you misunderstand your own plan. Listen to me and I will show you what your plan means."

I do not have the remotest idea that the church will believe that the men whose names are given above were all blindfolded when they sat about the table with other commissioners and that we do not even know what we did when we drew up the plan of unification. "Who misunderstand, and who is misled?" Well, whosoever misunderstands, the commissioners do not; and whosoever misleads, we do not believe that these commissioners mislead who have been prayerfully listening for the voice of God in the life of the world to-day.

II.

The effort is made to create the impression that there is difference of opinion between Northern leaders and Southern leaders touching the meaning and implications of the plan of unification.

There is no shadow of disagreement. We understand one another perfectly. We were of one mind when we jointly prepared the plan which we have laid before the church and which now gives every promise of being the plan which will heal the breech which has shamed Methodism so long. Shortly after the plan had been agreed upon, a brief exposition of it was given to the Methodist press signed by the bishops acting under instructions. That exposition is here given:

The salient features of the plan seem to us to be the following:

1. The plan which our Commission recommends safeguards all local interests and traditions which are held dear in the two jurisdictions. "Every vote in the General Conference shall be by jurisdictions and shall require the accepted majority vote of each jurisdiction to be effective." Which is to say that we are to enter upon an arrangement in which no measure can be passed touching the work within the bounds of either jurisdiction without the accepted majority vote of the jurisdiction concerned.

2. This plan gives due regard to the rights and preferences of church members living on the border where the two jurisdictions work side by side. Church membership is a sacred thing, and we recognize it as such. Arrangements are to be made for the transfer of members, preachers, churches, pastoral charges, districts, Annual Conferences, Mission Conferences, and Missions from one jurisdiction to the other; but "no transfer shall be made without the consent of the member, preacher, church, pastoral charge, district, Annual Conference, Mission Conference, or Mission that it is proposed to transfer." It is understood that in case of such transfer the initial movement shall be made by the party or parties chiefly concerned—that is to say, we do not believe that union can be forced. We therefore give our people and our organizations time and opportunity to grow together, and we believe that under this plan such growing together will immediately begin to take place. This provision amply protects minorities in each jurisdiction and is an example of that trust in each other without which real union cannot exist and increase.

3. It removes at once the cause of competition and overlapping on the border, and it does this for the following reasons:

(1) While we enter upon this plan of co-operation and union with the two jurisdictions standing just as they are in the United States of America, nevertheless the two churches are "united in one church," having one name, one General Conference, and one connectional "organization and administration throughout the world." This fact alone will silently work in the minds of our people, taking away the impulse and desire for the continuation of churches which overlap and the establishing of new organizations which conflict one with the other.

(2) The proposed plan gives to the General Conference the power "to govern any and all enterprises and activities which may be agreed upon as being of a connectional character." While the determination of what enterprises and activities are, as a matter of fact, of a connectional character is left to the decision of the General Conference, it will be immediately evident that the evangelization of needy fields here in America, both in our cities and in our rural districts, does constitute an enterprise which is connectional in character. The suggested plan, then, will give to each jurisdiction the opportunity of studying in association with the other the entire field. Together the two jurisdictions will address themselves to the one task of giving the gospel to the lost in the home field.

(3) The plan which we recommend associates together for counsel and co-operation the administrative officers of the two jurisdictions. "Immediately after the union shall have been consummated the bishops shall meet and organize as one body and shall arrange for the superintendence of the work of the church." And not only so, but the plan draws together all other administrative officers for counsel and co-operation.

4. One of the most important features of our plan of unification is that it looks to the immediate organization of the work of the united church outside the United States so as to consummate the unity of Episcopal Methodism in foreign lands. Nothing is more to be desired than that a united Methodism without competition the one jurisdiction with the other and without waste of men and money should be able to deliver its full strength upon the world in the interest of human salvation. This important aspect of our proposed plan must immediately commend it to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ and pray daily for the coming of his kingdom.

Signed: William F. McDowell, William F. Anderson, Edwin H. Hughes, Francis J. McConnell, and Wilbur P. Thirkield, bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Edwin D. Mouzon, John M. Moore, William F. McMurry, and James Cannon, Jr., bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. (For the Joint Commission on Unification.)

III.

By the recital of certain facts and by quotations from various sources which show the status of the colored man in the Northern Church at the present time, the effort is made to prove that exactly this will be the status of the colored man in the Southern Jurisdiction of the United Church.

A student of logic could not desire to find a more beautiful instance of non sequitur. It simply does not follow. The conclusion reached has no connection with the premises laid down. The place of the Negro in the Northern Church at the present time is one thing. The relation of the Negro to the Southern Jurisdiction of the united church is another and a different thing.

What the advocate of disunion does show may be summed up thus:

1. The Northern Church now has two colored bishops.

2. When they were elected they were escorted to the platform and seated with other bishops.

3. These Negro bishops are "legal bishops of the church."

4. At the recent session of the General Conference of the Methodist Church one of these bishops presided. (it is not mentioned, however, that this took place when the colored fraternal delegates were presented to the Conference. A very appropriate thing, one would think.)

5. That the General Conference adopted resolutions protesting against the mistreatment of colored people by white as contrary to the teachings of Jesus. ("Colored people in all parts of the world," let it be observed, and this, of course, means Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, the people of India, as well as Negroes.)

6. That Bishop McDowell objected to the plan of unification which the Joint Commission presented four years ago without their approval and without recommendation, his objection arising from the fear that the church might be "sectionalized" and "racialized." (It should be remembered that almost without exception in our own church the men who oppose the present plan opposed the plan that Bishop McDowell objected to.)

7. That Dr. Claudius B. Spencer has said that "it is rather an exaggregation" to say "that a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Jurisdiction (Jurisdiction No. 1) will be cast aside because of his color." (Nobody ever imagined that he would be. We leave our Northern brethren to do as they may please with their colored membership.)

The above seven points my distinguished colleague clearly establishes. But to what purpose?

"THEY ARE NOT VALIANT FOR THE TRUTH."

By Bishop Warren A. Candler

King Solomon has the credit of being the wisest man that ever lived; and one of his most valuable exhortations is, "Buy the truth and sell it not." (Proverbs 23:23.)

The implications underlying this saying of the wise man are that the truth can not be had for nothing; that to acquire it one may well afford to give anything; and that once possessed it should not be sold at any price whatsoever. And this means that it is a thing of priceless worth. And such, indeed, it is. It is more than light to the eye and food for the body.

Nevertheless there come periods in the history of men when they seem to hold the truth very cheap. In such dull, stupid, dead times they refuse to endure any discomfort or inconvenience to obtain it, or to turn away from any self-sacrifice to defend it.

The imperious demands of fleshly appetites and inordinate desires for baser things exclude all proper and just appreciation of the worth of truth and set an exorbitant value upon carnal gratifications. If that which is false seems to be more effective than truth for serving the sordid ends of selfishness, the false is called the true and the true is denounced as the false. Thus all spiritual values are confused and "the moral currency is debased" during such eras of decay and degeneration.

To the great grief of the prophet Jeremiah, such a time came to his people in his day, and he lamented most bitterly the corrupting voluptuousness through which their indulgence in vice and falsehood became wanton while their interest in virtue and truth became languid. In agonizing distress he cried out: "Oh, that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people! Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of warfaring men that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men. And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies, but they are not as valiant for the truth upon the earth." (Isaiah 9, 1-3).

In our day there are prevalent somewhat similar conditions. In our own country, and throughout Christendom, there is a conspicuous want of confident belief of the truth and courageous defense of it. Indeed, by a certain class of writers on theological subjects it seems to be assumed that definite truth is unattainable, unimportant, and non-essential.

The chief exponent of this vogue was Albrecht Ritschl, a German theologian of the nineteenth century, who died in Gottingen, March 20, 1889. Many have both imbibed and perverted his teachings, drawing inferences and proclaiming propositions, which they imagine are corrolaries of his principles, but which most probably he would reject, if he were living now and heard them stated.

Ritschlianism rejects the inerrancy of the Holy Scriptures and all things supernatural. It makes little of logic, and rests its system, if system it may be called, on "judgment values." An exemplification of its position is found in an utterance of a leading American Ritschlian who is reported as saying with reference to a definite belief in God: "We do not know that there is a God. But if there be no God, then there is no moral system in the universe. That is a horrible condition, and to avoid it we make a venture, and we postulate there is a God. This venture is our faith, and this postulate is our God."

From such statements philosophic scepticism, as well as theological doubt, exudes like ink from the tail of the cuttle-fish. According to this view, God, Christ, salvation and eternal life are not really matters of knowledge, and any sort of belief concerning them arises as a sort of religious fog or mist from one's own "judgment values."

Of course, definite truth can be neither clear nor dear to a man who holds such views. He would probably share the spirit of Pilate's contemptuous question when the Roman Governor said sneeringly to Jesus, "What is truth?" (John 18:38).

Many of the men who have been dislodged from all settled convictions of truth by the speculative theories of Ritschl, place all authority in religion in their own feelings, experience, and intuitions. They magnify feeling and minify truth. They are fond of affirming that religion is not a creed, but a life, as if there were an irreconciliable conflict between what a man believes and what he is—a most absurd notion truly.

They deprecate all discussion of theological questions as being un-Christian and unfriendly to peace—becoming advocates of a specious pacifism with which nevertheless much of their own aggressive talk is in conflict. They do not wish to be disturbed by controversy, and covet for themselves the privilege of pouring out for themselves a sort of theological monologue, while all who oppose their teaching keep silent before them. If they had lived in the days of St. Paul, they would have deprecated, and suppressed, if possible, his great polemical epistles. In fact, they generally deprecate Paul and what they call "Paulinism."

Of course, such men can not be "valiant for the truth;" for they do not value it enough to seek it or contend for it.

A strange feature of their case is that they dote on seminaries, colleges, and universities. This is quite strange; in fact, it is quite paradoxical with reference to their position. For what is the use of institutions of learning if definite truth is unattainable, is quite inferior to feelings, and may be even antagonistic to religious experience and Christian life? Efforts at any sort of education are something worse than vain, if truth be so uncertain, and possibly so injurious to Christian life. Why teach anything if the highest and most indispensable truth—the truth about God—cannot be known with certainty, or, if known, is nearly, or quite, worthless?

The great schools of which history takes account sprang from definite religious convictions and were designed to defend and propagate the principles of their founders.

Such were the schools of the prophets in the days of Elijah, which probably the brave and uncompromising Tishbite set up and supervised (II Kings 2:1-15). They were not designed to serve the ends of a concordat between the Baalism of the court of Ahab and Jezebel and the religion of Jehovah which Israel had received through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; but were intended rather to prepare men to carry on the conflict of pure faith with the foul cult of the daughter of Ethbaal.

Such also were the schools of the fathers of early Christianity; and such was St. Andrew's in Scotland and Oxford University in England.

Oxford University is a rich collection of great colleges, every one of which rests on foundations laid to promote the most definite religious beliefs; and they have served well the high purpose of their founders and promoters. What would Great Britain be to-day, if these institutions had not been established in faith?

The assumption that theological pacifism promotes progress is contradicted flatly by all history. The record of human advancement is made up of the epic annals of the valiant knighthood of the defenders of the faith, who lived, and contended, and died for the truth.

Such an one was Paul, without whose militant devotion to "Jesus and the resurrection," a truculent Judaism and a persecuting paganism would have crushed Christianity in the first century. Wherever he went, he went to war, and knew that his going meant conflicts. At Ephesus, where he spent more than two years, during and by which long ministry "all they that dwelt in Asia, heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks" (Acts 19:10), he fought with beast-like opposition (1 Corinthians 15:32). There, for the truth as it is in Jesus, he was "pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired even of life" (II Corinthians 1:8). The churches in Asia were the trophies of his suffering and conquering faith—especially the church at Ephesus. To that church, which he won by standing in jeopardy every hour, he wrote a letter in which he called with a bugle call the Ephesian Christians to heroic warfare, saying, "take unto you the whole armor of God," have your feet "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," gird your loins "about with truth," and take "the shield of faith," and "the helmet of salvation," and "the sword of the spirit which is the word of God."

Gamaliel was a pacifist (Acts 5:35-39); but such was not Paul, his nobler pupil. And this martial apostle did more for mankind than all the lazy and languid Gamaliels that ever lived on the earth, whether in the first or the twentieth century, or any other century. When he came to die he came with the unterrified faith of "a good soldiers of Jesus Christ" (II Timothy 2:3), triumphantly exclaiming, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (II Timothy 4:7). Against such an one no prophet of God could bring the accusation of not being "valiant for the truth."

Our befogged times need more Pauls and fewer Gamaliels, Ritschls and Ritschlians. We need more soldiers of the cross and fewer sorry sentimentalists.

"The Son of God goes forth to war,
A Kingly crown to gain;
His blood-red banner streams afar:
Who follows in his train?

"A glorious band, the chosen few,
On whom the Spirit came:
Twelve valiant saints they knew
And mocked the cross and flame.

"They climbed the steep ascent of heaven
Through peril, toil, and pain:
O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in their train."

THE THIRD ANNUAL CONFERENCE IN BELGIUM.

By W. C. Cowart, Superintendent Methodist Mission in Belgium.

The session of the third Annual Conference of the Methodist Mission in Belgium was held from July 26 to Aug. 3 in the American Church in Brussels.

The opening sermon was preached at 11 a. m., Sunday, July 27, by Dr. E. H. Rawlings. He sounded the note of world service in his message. At 8 o'clock Sunday evening Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, the presiding officer of the Conference, gave a very effective sermon on the spirit and power of Christian unity. The Holy Communion was observed at the close of the worship. A large congregation was present and participated in this beautiful and impressive sacrament.

During the Conference Dr. Rawlings gave three evening addresses on the "Methods, Mission and Message of Methodism." He was gladly heard, and met with encouraging responso by the members and friends of the mission.

Bishop Beauchamp gave several splendid addresses to the members of the Conference. He has been ideutified with all the work of our church since we entered Europe, and knows better the conditions we face in Europe than any leader in the church. To him in large measure is dne the splendid property the church owns in Belgium, as well as to an unusually strong group of native workers now at work in Methodism in Belgium.

The morning aud afternoon sessions were devoted to business. Complete reports were presented by each worker, including pastors, evangelists, local preachers and colporteurs. The bishop heard each report and gave due encouragement to all.

Two years ago at the first annual session the presiding bishop received the first members into the Methodist Church in Belgium. In so strong a Catholic country the Protestant message cannot expect a mass movement to turn to Christ.

One year ago, the second session of the Mission Conference, the reports gave four organized churches and one hundred and three full members, with one hundred and thirty-one members on trial.

At the present session we are rejoiced to report seven new churches organized during the year, two hundred new members added to the church, with more than one hundred members on trial.

It may be of interest to know the location of the new churches:

French-speaking congregation at Antwerp, Flemish-speaking congregation at Antwerp, French-speaking congregation at Brussels, Flemish-speaking congregation at Brussels, Flemish-speaking congregation at Malines, Flemish-speaking congregation at Vewylghem, French-speaking congregation at Ypres.

The four other congregations are the American in Brussels, Less Marionniers (French) in Brussels, French-speaking at Dunkirke (France), French at Hersthal (Liege).

An excellent report was made hy Mlle. Mattele, directress of the orphanage. Forty-six hoys and girls are cared for by this institution. The directress has developed a remarkable spirit in the home, and is due much credit for her lahors.

The girls' school, Les Marrloners, located in Brussels, enrolled 104 pupils last session. Miss Eisabeth Dean, the directress, made a good report, indicating her interest in making the school an increasing influence for Christ in Belgium. A new building, including adequate classrooms and gymnasium, is now being erected. We hope to occupy this not later than December. When completed we shall have a magnificent school property in one of the most heautiful sections of the city.

The mission is very fortunate in the arrival of Miss Dorothy Beauchamp, who will have charge of the office at headquarters in Brussels. She has been associated with the Centenary campaign in Nashville since its beginning.

Dr. D. A. Sloan, who has given faithful service to the church since the Mission Board began work in Europe, returns home in September. He will be greatly missed by all in the mission. The hest wishes of every worker will follow him in his labors.

Both Bishop Beauchamp and Dr. E. H. Rawlings express confidence in the future of Methodism in Belgium.

The vigorous evangelistic campaign carried on in the churches and in the open air is meeting with encouraging results. Two large tents are used for revival meetings during the summer months. Large crowds attend the preaching of the word wherever these tents are set up.

Again, we entertain great hope for the future through our school of religion. Here in Brussels we have the training school for the workers. Last session there were seven students enrolled. This session we expect to have ten young men as students. They will give three days a week to classroom study, the remainder in pastorate or as colporteurs. We have a graduato in Emory University, a young man who went from Brussels in 1921. He will return in a few months to assist in the training of future leaders of the church in Belgium.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

What is small? what is large? Is the what is what among the scientists. Some things propagated as science tax my credulity, others my capacity for belief. Size apparently counts for little. A macrocosm or a microcosm, an atom or a planetary system, are constructed on a like pattern—so we are told. Again it is said that the energy locked up in an atom could run all the machinery in America. That is if men could ever release it. I am holding statements like these in solution. It is neither acredo nor a non credo. I am waiting at my end of the "phone" for a fulier message. And I rather think I shall continue waiting for an answer to some of these wonders, until I drop the receiver and go on farther to a land of clearer vision and fuller knowledge. Quality counts for more in nature than quantity. An ant is wiser than a grasshopper, and a bee more prudent and providential than an ox. The greater may include the less, the shell the kernel, the casket the jewel, the house the man—but the true worth is within. Spirit, thought, life, are neither ponderable nor measureable. Yet these are powers that weigh and measure all else. The unit in arithmetic, the point in geometry are the hases by which men measure stellar distances and weigh suns and planets. Science has its pantheism. All is force, cries one, all is matter, says another, all is spirit, echoes a third. Over the ages, clear, full, confident, sweet as the skylark's carol out of heaven's blue comes the voice of the Master—"I am the way, the truth, the life." Herein is true science, the small, the great, the weak, the strong, the wise, the simple, for he is and ever shall be, all in all. Browning, having waded through a deep sea of doubt and grappled with some of the great questions of life, says finally, "Here stands the Christ," when he had reached the shining shore of faith.

It is so easy to be ignorant. Ignorance is static, non-progressive, negative. Knowledge, its attainment and possession, requires study, self-denial, labor, for knowledge is active, alert, progressive. We learn to live by living, to preach by preaching, to learn by learning, to pray hy praying. Like the stone of the old maxim, just remain still, and the moss will grow and you will get greener and grayer as the days go hy. You shall surely gather no polish. Happy indeed is the boy or girl with an impressionable, receptive mind. The glory and wealth of life are theirs for the taking. One is to he pitied who is physically lazy, yet I prefer this form of inertia to mental torpor and stupidity. The reason some children seem lazy is because they are storing up thought matter for future use. Give me the dreamer every time instead of the fidgets. The latter run over more than they pick up. I wonder sometimes how rich this old world would he if so many thinking, dreaming boys had not been sat upon and all their plans crushed hy inferior superiors. Gray, in his sublime Elegy, spoke not in vain of "village Hampdens" and "guiltless Cromwells." Dream on, son, and soon the world will see your dream envisoned and expressed in startling discoveries from God's great storehouse of hidden wealth. There are still vast treasures in ocean, air and earth to he brought forth. What we know now of these things add mightily to human comfort and commerce, and yet are only a promise and a prophecy of the unknown and unseen. Well, I am glad I helong to this great human family of explorers and discoverers. In some hright clime when our wings are longer and stouter grown, we shall know all abont Mars, and his sixty-five million miles will only be a morning walk to enfranchised, liberated soul. The consummate glory of life is the faith that teaches that "I shall know even as also I am known."

THE BIRTH OF A SERMON.

By Rev. W. R. Lott.

Despite the oft-heard expression that people do not think of the sermon as they once did, with deep interest and semi-reverence, it still remains true that the life of the church is kept burning by sermons. Sermons, to be truly sermons, burn and set fire to all the prepared wood of the church. To do this they must come up out of the deep of flaming spirits. They are not declamations, neither are they orations. They are not essays or treatises on religious topics. Sermons are alive, for they are not made but born.

A sermon is born of the Spirit. When the sermonizer divorces himself or his message from the Holy Ghost the message dies. The Holy Ghost has a called man, he with his wisdom impresses his messenger to proclaim the truth. It is not the man's message, but God's message to the people. A sermon cannot be brought to life and made to live unless it be born of the Spirit.

Again we can truthfully say it is born of the mind of the man. There is no such thing as an extemporaneous sermon, for into every sermon, if the man is true, goes all that he has learned in the years past. All of the mind must be used in every effort; not all the stored facts, but all the developed processes of reason, memory, imagination—all must labor to produce this vital message if men are to live under it.

It has been said that a church can grow preachers of the kind and temper it desires; and who can deny that evident fact? The church gives birth to sermons; just the kind of sermons it wants; however, not every time the kind it needs. Sermons are horn of the hearts of the people, for they inspire, they uplift, they hearten, they quicken, they keep burning that fire in the heart of the preacher. A cold church produces cold sermons; a warm church produces warm sermons—life-giving sermons. What preacher but has had the experience of having a good sermon in material, study, and desire to deliver with effect to fall on seemingly dead and cold hearts? The people had not labored.

The heart-throbs of the man of God bring into life the living message. The experience of the men and women of Holy Writ comes pressing upon him for deliverance, and at the same time he is filled with every-day experiences which also are so vital to all he has to say. He reads; he meditates; he prays; he thinks of the needs of the people—probably here is a young man or woman needing inspiration. He can picture coming in to hear the sermon the aged, the infirm, and there he sees right before him the little children, who see more than they hear. All these things are on his heart. He longs to do good. He knows the sermon must be alive and also that he must make it live. He is also conscious of the fact that he cannot inspire more spiritual life than he possesses. His people will grow as he grows—they glow as he glows. The hour comes with its tremendous responsibility, and the sermon is delivered. It can never he repeated. It is alive. It has been born through interest and agony of Spirit, mind, hearer and heart.

OUR SOUTHLAND.

By Willie C. Page.

The fierce white sun, the dazzling heat;
The fragrance of jessamine, drowsing sweet;
Rolling meadows spread with daisies white;
Green fields that wave in the golden light;
By the lakeside the lilies nod and dream;
The glint and glimmer of silent streams.

Like silvery bells the thrush notes fall;
Through the rustling fields winds laugh and call;
Soft song of the birds from leafy dell—
Peace and contentment o'er the landscape dwell;
Beauty, bright skies, the fields with life astir;
In our loved Southland, God is always near.

"WHO MISUNDERSTANDS, AND WHO IS MISLED?" THE QUESTION ANSWERED.

Everybody knew these things already. And everybody who has given a moment's thought to the plan of unification knows that in the Northern Jurisdiction (Jurisdiction No. 1 of the united church) the status of colored bishops and colored members will remain precisely as it now is. But when it is argued that we shall have our white churches in the South invaded by colored people and we shall have colored bishops presiding over white Conferences in the South, we reply: "Not so fast, dear brother. There is no connection under heaven between the facts you have given and the conclusion you have reached." The consummate merit of our plan is exactly this, that it avoids completely the complicated question of the place of the Negro in the church by protecting at every point our Southern ideals and leaving our Northern brethren with their colored membership to work out their own problems.

A reported conversation between Dr. Downey and Dr. Lamar is given into which is read the conclusion that Dr. Downey expects Negro bishops to preside over white Conferences. Now, if casual conversations are of importance, I also will report a conversation. A few weeks after the adjournment of the Des Moines General Conference I met on the train in Oklahoma a minister of the Northern Church who holds a more influential office than does Dr. Downey. When the election of two Negro bishops was mentioned, I said: "You will pardon me, but I have been amused at what you did at Des Moines. You seemed to have the impression that you were abolishing the color line, when as a matter of fact you drew it more plainly than ever and came practically to the Southern position." This distinguished minister replied: "That is exactly what we did." And of course that is what they did when they elected on a ballot on which the name of no white man could be written two Negro bishops to preside exclusively over Negro Conferences.

One may read into a casual conversation what meaning one may choose. But since it has been said, "Dr. Downey was chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy, and Dr. Downey ought to know, and doubtless does know, the meaning and purpose of the report" which provided for the election of two colored general superintendents on a separate ballot, I give the official statement made by Dr. Downey on the floor of the General Conference when presenting that report. If the truth is what is wanted, here is the truth. If facts count for anything, then here are the facts. I quote verbatim from the Daily Advocate:

> We all perfectly well know that there are certain social customs that make it utterly impossible for a white general superintendent to give our brothers of color the sort of superintendency that is best adapted to stir their imagination and to stimulate their zeal to the point of highest efficiency. They cannot go and sit with them in their social gatherings. They cannot sit with them as they gather about their banquet tables as our white bishops do with us when we are putting over some great program and want to accomplish something for the kingdom of God. Our colored brethren and our white superintendents thoroughly understand that to do anything of that sort would be to destroy the very thing they desire to accomplish. And, therefore, we need these colored general superintendents, that they may among their own people give them the inspiration and the leadership, the social standing, if you will, among themselves and among Methodist Episcopalians of the same color but of a little different denominational name. They need a bishop of their own color, that they may stand face to face with those denominations bearing our generic name.

Here follows that part of the plan of unification dealing with the bishops:

> ARTICLE VI.—BISHOPS.
>
> The bishops of the two churches as at present constituted shall be bishops of the united church without further action.
> Immediately after the union shall have been consummated the bishops shall meet and organize as one body, and shall arrange for the superintendence of the work of the church.
> A bishop may be assigned to administer in any part of the church, provided that when he is assigned to administer within the jurisdiction other than that by which he was elected it shall be with the consent of the majority of the bishops of the jurisdiction involved.

Let it be noted in passing that in making reference to this section of the plan our critic leaves out entirely the third paragraph. It would not have done to call attention to that third paragraph. That would have run counter to the fears and fancies that have been read into our plan. This third paragraph makes it perfectly plain that no white bishop from Jurisdiction No. 1 can ever preside over Southern Conferences except "with the consent of the majority of the bishops of the jurisdiction involved." What now becomes of the contention that colored bishops under our plan may preside over white Conferences in the South?

Once more let me quote from our critic: "Can any sane man mistake what the Northern General Conference at Springfield, and especially its ninety Negro delegates, understood and intended by adopting the proposed plan of unification with its provision that all the bishops now in office, including Negro bishops, are to be 'bishops of the whole church?'". Well, evidently a "sane man" can make that mistake, for that most serious mistake has been made by the writer of the article under review. But permit me to say frankly that to raise a question as to the sanity of men who differ with one is hardly a parliamentary thing to do.

Under the plan of unification there will be something not altogether different from a modified diocesan episcopacy. The Northern Diocese will be the Northern Jurisdiction; the Southern Diocese will be the Southern Jurisdiction. And within the Northern Jurisdiction there will be the colored Annual Conferences over which the colored bishops will have the right to preside. Each jurisdiction will elect its own bishops.

What the plan does provide is that the bishops shall be "bishops of the united church"—bishops, that is to say, belonging to the united church and serving the united church where and how the united church may determine "subject to the limitations and restrictions of the constitution." With the growth of the united church we may expect before many years to have Chinese bishops elected to serve the Chinese, Brazilian bishops to serve in Brazil, European bishops to serve in Europe, as well as colored bishops to serve among colored people in this country and Africa—all "bishops of the united church."

Do not our people know that the Northern Methodist Church does not have mixed Annual Conferences? They have white Annual Conferences and colored Annual Conferences. The color line runs everywhere throughout their church. In Chattanooga, for instance, they have white churches and colored churches, and the white churches are in one Annual Conference and the colored churches in another. And this same thing is found all over the United States. There are certain things that do not have to be written into constitutions to be authoritative. Bishop Hoss used to say that "God Almighty has drawn the color line in indelible ink." The best colored people know this and insist on it just as much as the best white people. There is never any danger of "social equality" on the upper levels of life; the tragic danger is always on the lower levels, and here it is the white man that is to be condemned.

It is to be regretted that all this talk about "the nigger in the woodpile" has been dragged into a discussion which ought to be conducted on a loftier level. The writer has supposed that the best people in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas had heard the politicians bring the "nigger" into their discussions long enough to have grown a little weary of this kind of thing.

IV.

What we ought to do is to ask in the presence of God, What should united Methodism do to save the Negro providentially here in America?

This important aspect of the matter seems to have been entirely overlooked. It is a matter of common knowledge, admitted by all parties, that the highest type of Negro, the Negro most free from vice and crime and most truly religious, is found in the Colored Methodist Church with which Southern Methodism has historic connection and among the colored membership of the Northern Methodist Church. That was a remarkable statement made by Judge John S. Candler that, while as many as ten thousand Negroes had come before him for trial, not one of them was an official member of the Colored Methodist Church or of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Similar testimony we have often heard from others. Let us thank God that our labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

Such fraternal and religious ties as we now have with colored people ought to be strengthened, not loosened.

It is pretty well known that the Roman Catholic Church would be willing to invest millions of dollars for the chance of gathering into its membership three hundred and fifty thousand colored people. If the Roman Catholic Church had three hundred and fifty thousand Negro members, its power would be tremendously increased in America. In the Southern Messenger of March 6, 1924, there is an appeal signed by Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, Archbishop of Philadelphia; Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, and Patrick J. Hayes, Archbishop of New York, from which I quote:

> During the past year over five hundred thousand Negroes forsook their abodes and occupations in thirteen Southern States and traveled northward. This fact makes the Negro question country-wide, and the church must decide on the proper handling of the situation. From a temporal standpoint Catholics should realize that it will pay them to treat the colored man in a Christian manner. The Negro is increasing rapidly in numbers, and he is making considerable progress in every trade and profession. It may be that he will hold the balance of power in the future. We should use every individual and collective effort to draw the Negro toward the church, and when persecutions arise we may have him for our friend.

Comment on the motives herein revealed is unnecessary. What I wish to emphasize is that we Methodists have such an obligation and such an opportunity as no other Protestant denomination has. To ignore it, to throw it away, would be a sin against God and man.

But it is objected: If we go into this union, our bishops will have to sit in conference with two colored bishops, and colored preachers may be members of important connectional boards. Well, what of it? Something worse than that will happen if we drift farther and farther apart.

It seems to be forgotten that we are doing a limited amount of work with colored people at the present time. Some months ago in the interest of educational work among colored people there was held in the Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn., a joint meeting of the College of Bishops of our Church and the bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

Upon this question of white folks being mixed up with Negroes in church councils we let Dr. T. D. Ellis, a Georgian and the Secretary of our Board of Church Extension, say a word or two:

> The work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, among the Negroes is through the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. I am a member of the Board of Trustees of Paine College, at Augusta, Ga., a school supported by our church for Negroes. Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, of our church, is president of the board, and Bishop Williams, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, is the vice president. The board is composed of an equal number of white and Negro men and an equal number of white women and Negro women. At the meetings of the Board of Trustees the white men and the white women meet with the Negroes. Whenever Bishop Darlington desires to make a speech, Bishop Williams will preside. Now, in all good conscience, is it any worse for the bishops to meet in counsel with two Negro bishops who are limited in their work to Negro Conferences than for Mrs. James H. McCoy and Mrs. Luke Johnson, white women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to meet as members of the Board of Trustees of Paine's College? I think Mrs. McCoy and Mrs. Johnson will tell you that in such meetings Southern ideals and traditions were not violated and that the Negroes showed them the utmost respect and listened profoundly to what they had to say. Does not consistency demand that we should see things as they are and not conjure up racial prejudice?

It would seem from what certain opponents of unification have to say that they wish to have no dealings in religious matters with colored people. They deal with them in their homes as cooks and as nurses for their children; they deal with them on the farm as they make the cotton crop for them; they deal with them waiting on them as doctors and working for them as lawyers. In every other way they deal with them. But in religion they would say to them: "You must have nothing to do with us, and we will have nothing to do with you." If some one suggests that I am exaggerating the actual situation, let me ask: "As a matter of fact, what does the reader of this article have to do in a religious way with the colored people with whom he has business dealings?"

There have been serious difficulties between the two races in this country. Riots have sometimes broken out to the shame of our Christian civilization. In many parts of the South interracial committees have accomplished an immense amount of good. The best colored men and the best white men have sat down and made a study of difficulties that have arisen. In South Carolina, in Georgia, in Alabama, in Mississippi, in Louisiana, and in Arkansas unmeasurable good has been accomplished by these friendly conferences. Might not similar good be accomplished if Methodist bishops had a chance to discuss church affairs with colored bishops once a year? Would anything but good come out of a fraternal conference in important committees with the best men in the Colored Methodist Church and the Northern Methodist Church? For one I should welcome the opportunity. Our Christian women of the Woman's Council are already doing a notable work in friendly counsel with colored women. May Heaven's blessings rest upon them more and more!

V.

Our plan of unification is in reality a plan of unification by co-operation. And it will work.

What the plan really does is to take the two churches just as they now are and arrange a practical method of co-operation. The Southern Church remains intact. The Northern Church stands just as it is. But the plan makes it possible to co-operate at many points.

Concerning the place of the Negro in the united church, we leave the Northern brethren to deal with him just as they may please, while we of the South will deal with him just as seems to us wisest and most Christian. The plan specifically provides for this. Once more let me say:

> One of the finest things about our present plan of unification is that it completely avoids the difficult question of the colored man in the church by leaving us to deal with it as we please and leaving our Northern brethren to deal with it as they think best. The effort to lug in the question of social equality with Negroes by the ears is completely out of order and out of place.

But we all can co-operate to do what Methodism ought to do for the salvation of the colored people in our midst.

This plan forces nothing. It offers a great opportunity. It gives a long-suffering people a chance to get together. We will co-operate on the mission field; we will co-operate in city and in country. We will release millions of money and thousands of men for the work of building up the Church of God. My honored colleague says that the friends of unification are "urging the preachers and people of our church to accept a confessedly imperfect plan which they assure us will bring peace and prosperity to American Methodism." Well, we could hardly be immodest enough to claim that the work of our hearts and minds was "perfect." What we do claim for it is that it will do the work. it will unify American Methodism. And we can't shake off the conviction that this is the principal objection to our Plan.

As a matter of fact, it is already at work. All along the border, where the two Methodisms work side by side, a new spirit of fraternity has sprung up. Methodists in the border Conferences are already planning to get together. This is not surmise; this is an exact recital of what is now going on. Thank God, a tide of brotherliness has arisen which cannot now be turned back! Unification is already at the door in many of our towns and cities. Take the city of Chattanooga, for instance, where the forever memorable session of the General Conference was held. Immediately after the adjournment of the Conference the men of our Centenary Church and the men of the First Methodist Episcopal Church met together in a fraternal banquet. Since then the two congregations have been worshiping together. I could name churches within the bounds of the Hoiston Conference that have delayed building enterprises waiting for the coming of union so as to be saved the expense and shame of building Methodist altar over against Methodist altar. And news comes from various parts of the church of Methodist congregations getting ready for the new and happier relationship.

VI.

Men who oppose unification will not be permitted to do with our plan what Senator Lodge and others did with the League of Nations.

Woodrow Wilson declared on his last fatal speaking tour that to reject the League of Nations would "break the heart of the world." But men of great ability like Senator Lodge would have none of the League. Day and night the whole scheme was subjected to criticism. Every part of it was made to appear objectionable. The very idea was denounced as un-American. Men of great learning proved to the satisfaction of many that the League of Nations could not possibly prove a success. The Senate rejected the treaty, and the "heart of the world was broken." Concerning this, the New York Times had the following to say in a recent editorial:

> Events have a way of confuting prophets. The League of Nations, even without the aid and comfort of the United States, has done more good work than its friends would have thought possible, and has displayed scarcely any of the weakness which its enemies predicted for it. The flowing tide is with the League. Politicians may come and go, elections may be decided one way or the other, but the great trend of the civilized world goes on unaffected. It is, as Mr. John W. Davis said, in the direction of the belief that the League of Nations "is destined more and more to become the bulwark of peace and order to mankind."

And now able and distinguished men are trying to do with the plan of unification just what Senator Lodge did with the League of Nations. They will have none of the plan of unification. It is evil, only evil, and that continually. And so they continually attack the plan from every possible angle, expecting to arouse the fears and suspicions of our good Methodists in the South.

But they will not succeed, and for two reasons:

First, they are attacking the plan of unification at too many points. The entire plan is had, so they contend. Every article in it has some hidden danger lurking beneath it. If the enemies of unification had centered their attack on one or two points and had been able to make out a case, they would have had greater influence on the men of the church who do their own thinking. But they have pursued a policy which will defeat itself. The church will hardly believe that the four bishops, nine ministers, and seven laymen whose names are mentioned at the beginning of this communication are just leading a "children's crusade" as we have been told. We were instructed to do a certain thing; we did that very thing and not another; we know fully what the plan does, and we heartily recommend it to the church.

The second reason why the critics of the plan of unification will not succed as did the critics of the League of Nations is that when Woodrow Wilson laid the treaty before the Senate the tide of Christian idealism which had lifted all America during the World War was rapidly flowing out. Selfish human nature had reasserted itself, and America was tired of doing great and heroic things. And so the treaty was defeated. And so confusion followed. But the tide has turned. Even now, as the Times says, "the flowing tide is with the League. Politicians may come and go, elections may be decided one way or the other, but the great trend of the civilized world goes on unaffected." This is one reason why we did not succeed better with the scheme which our Joint Commission developed without being able to advise its adoption four years ago. The tide of idealism was flowing out. But the tide has turned. America has recovered to a large degree her own true spirit which for the moment she had lost. And America is once more taking her place of leadership among the nations. And now the flowing tide is with unification. Objectors may come and critics may go, but the trend of Christianity toward a true spirit of unity goes on unaffected. And who can doubt that it is the Spirit of the living God moving in Methodism to-day making toward the answering of Christ's high-priestly prayer, that we may all be one, that the world may know that the Father has sent him?

In conclusion, let me make the words of Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, my own:

> The past is dead. Let it bury its dead, its hopes, and its aspirations. Before you lies the future, a future full of golden promise, a future of expanding national glory before which all the world shall stand amazed. Let me beseech you to lay aside all rancor, all bitter sectional feeling, and take your place in the ranks of those who will bring about a consummation devoutly to be wished—a reunited country.

And since there cannot be a reunited country in the deepest sense of these words where divided spiritual forces are keeping old wounds open, let me beseech all Methodists to lay aside all rancor, all bitter sectional feeling, and take their place in the ranks of those who will bring about a consummation devoutly to be wished—a reunited Methodism.

A CORRECTION—THE CAMP GROUND—DR. CARLEY AND "REFERENDUM."

By Payton A. Sowell.

In the article, "Seashore Camp Meeting," the printer has me to say, "The tent-owners pay rental on twenty-four acres," when I said—at least in my mind I said,—"on about two and one-half acres." The village "of cottages" occupies only about that number of acres.

But—I am delighted, most of all, at the "Editorial", which so systematically and generously advocates the reference of the "present plan" to the "adult" members of the church, to know their preferences.

I have always known Dr. Carley's heart is at the right place.

And, so far as I know, Dr. Carley is the only advocate for the "present plan" that is "democratic" enough to submit it to the people.

I am in favor of submitting the matter to the members 21 years of age and upwards. This vote is not in any sense "the official vote" to settle the course of action.

But it is justifiable information; information from the people who built our churches, and support our preachers.

It is almost equivalent to the "action of the Pope"—to decline submitting it to the 2,000,000 members.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

SOON THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE MINUTES WILL SHOW WHO'S WHO IN THE SPECIAL EFFORT.

The Board of Finance will furnish the official copy or Statistical Table Number 4 for publication in the Annual Conferenee Minutes. This table will show the quota for every charge and the amount paid on same for the first year. So it will happen that the record of every charge in the Special Effort for the first year will be preserved in the reeords for all time. If any pastor's eharge fails to do anything the first year, that pastor, when superannuated, can read the 1924 Minutes of his Annual Conferenee and see what he failed to do for superannuates when he had a chanee. Watch out for Statistical Table Number 4—it will have a tale to tell!

IF CONGO BELGE MISSION CAN—YOU CAN.

I have just recevied from C. T. Schaedel, superintendent of Congo Belge Mission, Africa, a total of $190 for Superannuate Endowment. This amount represents contributions for the purpose stated as a result of the Special Effort among the missionaries in this Mission to assist the great cause. I do not know when anything has affected me so deeply as this splendid response of the men and women who are in service in this far-away Mission field. The $190 referred to in the foregoing added to former contributions from this Mission makes a total of $315 that Congo Belge Mission now has to its credit in the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment.

I should think that the foregoing would shame every eharge in the chureh that is neglecting this cause. It may be admitted that some charges are faced by serious difficulties, but is it possible for any charge in the home land to be hindered as much in this matter as is our Congo Mission? I pray that this good news from far-away Africa will be to every charge at home a real inspiration to do its duty by the Forgotten Man.

EVEN TO OUR WIDEST BORDERS THEY ARE DOING IT.

I have just received a letter from Brother D. A. Sloan, of our Methodist Mission in Belgium. He stated as follows: "Enclosed find New York draft for $55.93, the same being an amount which has been contributed from our various plaees of work in Belgium, as a special offering towards the Superannuate Endowment Fund. This seems to be a small amount when converted into dollars, but in Belgian francs it represents a liberal donation."

And so it happens that out of the very heart of troubled and war-torn Europe comes from the unfortunate people a practical expression of their interest in the Forgotten Man. Does not this good news stir you? If you have been silent and inaetive on this subjeet, can you go on being so when such things are happening? Will you permit the outpost missions of the ehureh to do such things while you at home in the midst of peace and comfort fail to lift a hand in behalf of the cause?

THIS PREACHER WILL BE VERY HAPPY AT CONFERENCE.

The Leitchfield eharge, Elizabethtown District, Louisville Conferenee, has paid its entire quota for the five years in full. The amount is $1,700, a few dollars in excess of the minimum expected. Rev. W. C. Christy is the pastor. This energetie pastor has a right to go to Conferenee with his chest out. He has accomplished a very creditabie thing for the superannuates. His name will go down in the history of the church as being one of the very first to pay a five-year quota in one year.

A STORY OF LOVING REMEMBRANCES.

When the superannuates were active in service they reeeived many "poundings"—with apples, potatoes, turnips and beans. Now in their infirmities of old age they are being "pounded" again, but this time it is with dollars of the realm. Behold how the charges are taking part in this good work, as evidenced in the following which have paid one-fifth or more of their total Special Effort quota:

Harrisonville, Southwest Missouri, Kansas City, Rev. J. H. Sneed, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,170; amount remitted, $546.50.

Clinton, Southwest Missouri, Sedalia, Rev. J. W. Smith, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,016; amount remitted, $429.50.

Miakka, Florida, Tampa, Rev. J. C. West, pastor; total assumed quota, $710; amount remitted, $143.25.

Harrodsburg, Kentueky, Danville, Rev. F. B. Jones, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,000; amount remitted, $605.25.

Pioneer Memorial (Oakland), Paeifie, San Francisco, Rev. A. T. O'Rear, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,000; amount remitted, $1,062.27.

Montgomery, Western Virginia, Charieston, Rev. J. L. Vinson, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,250; amount remitted, $711.

Santa Fe, Tennessee, Columbia, Rev. J. B. Estes, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,144; amount remitted, $330.45.

Pulaski, Holston, Radford, Rev. D. P. Hurley, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,750; amount remitted, $550.

Walsenburg, Denver, Denver, Durango, Rev. John Cox, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,390; amount remitted, $297.

Blairsville, Illinois, Murphysboro, Rev. O. A. Sweckard, pastor; total assumed quota, $700; amount remitted, $141.50.

Gorham, Illinois, Murphysboro, Rev. Curwen Henley, pastor; total assumed quota, $500; amount remitted, $100.

Second Chureh (Maysville), Kentucky, Maysville, Rev. W. M. Williams, pastor; total assumed quota, $566; amount remitted, $112.40.

McKendree Church (Nashville), Tennessee, Nashville, Rev. H. B. Trimble, pastor; total assumed quota, $5,034; amount remitted, $2,196.79.

Lewisburg, Louisville, Owensboro, Rev. Virgil Elgin, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,333; amount remitted, $267.

Groveland and Mascotte, Florida, Orlando, Rev. H. Dutill, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,043; amount remitted, $408.75.

Felicity, Louisiana, New Orleans, Rev. H. T. Carley, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,695; amount remitted, $523.95.

Chillicothe, Missouri, Chillieothe, Rev. F. P. Hanes, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,500; amount remitted, $669.40.

Norborne Station, Missouri, Richmond, Rev. J. N. Boyd, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,016; amount remitted, $429.03.

East Dinwiddie, Virginia, Petersburg, Rev. H. T. Todd, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,670; amount remitted, $377.35.

Enterprise, Western Virginia, Fairmont, Rev. J. B. F. Yoak, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,907; amount remitted, $604.50.

Montgomery, Tennessee, Clarksville, Rev. Omar Charles, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,350; amount remitted, $390.

Leitchfield, Louisville, Elizabethtown, Rev. W. C. Christie, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,700; amount remitted, $1,700.

Sarasota Mission, Fiorida, Tampa, Rev. W. B. Tresea, pastor; total assumed quota, $250; amount remitted, $72.25.

Georgetown, Kentucky, Covington, Rev. B. O. Beck, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,978; amount remitted, $400.

Germantown, Kentueky, Maysville, Rev. J. M. Mathews, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,350; amount remitted, $350.

Marshall, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. J. E. Alexander, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,775; amount remitted, $1,325.

St. Paul (Springfield), Southwest Missouri, Springfield, Rev. J. W. Pearson, pastor; total assumed quota, $10,000; amount remitted, $2,000.

Kennekeet, North Carolina, Elizabeth City, Rev. C. A. Johnson, pastor; total assumed quota, $770; amount remitted, $157.10.

Forest City, Missouri, St. Joseph, Rev. J. L. Taylor, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,332; amount remitted, $284.

St. Paul's (Denver), Denver, Denver, Durango, Rev. T. S. Wheeler, pastor; total assumed quota, $2.420; amount remitted, $535.

Natalbany, Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Rev. B. W. Waltman, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,253; amount remitted, $325.

Buchanan Street (Nashville), Tennessee, Nashville, Rev. O. B. Johnson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,046; amount remitted, $301.

Park Street (Atlanta), North Georgia, South Atlanta, Rev. C. M. Meeks, pastor; total assumed quota, $4,020; amount remitted, $1,516.42.

"HE NEVER KNOWS WHEN HE'S LICKED."

That is what a prominent man once said about a young preacher, and remarked further that this quaiity of character would make the preacher a great success. And it did. Deliver us from the quitter! Nothing is so wretehedly pitiful as a man without any backbone, that is, one who cannot stand up and fight when a struggle is on. Some men are like that.

But O the joy of a hard hitter! The man who grits his teeth and doubles his fists over a difficult task, is going to get ahead with the job if something doesn't pull loose. Sueh a man as this is the one needed for such a time as this—that is, when we are after Speeial Effort quotas in the midst of a field overgrown with all kinds of quotas. Come on, you red-blooded fighters! Get your quotas and pay them to the General Board before the meeting of your Annual Conference. Then you can sit in your piaces in the Conferenee room and smile, smile, smile. And the old worn-out boys will do some smilin', too!

Centro Cristiano, Chihuahua, Mexico, has drawn the bulk of its eqnipment, repairs, and running expenses from the Centenary for the past four years—$23,288.

A WONDERFUL WORLD.

A little more praise and a little less blame,
A little more virtue, a little less shame,
A little more thought for the other man's rights
A little less self in our chase for delights.
A little more loving, a little less hate,
Are all that is needed to make the world great.
A little more boosting, a little less jeering,
A little more trusting, a little less fearing,
A little more patience in trouble and pain,
A little less willing at times to complain.
A little more kindness worked into the strife,
Are all that is needed to glorify life.
A little more honor, a little less greed,
A little more service, a little less creed,
A little more courage, when pathways are rough,
A little more action, a little less bluff,
A little more kindness by you and by me,
And, O, what a wonderful world it would be.

HOW MRS. RUSSELL KILLED A BEAR.

By Frances M. Fox.

All bears are not good. There was at least one bad bear in the world, and this story is about him. It is a true story, too. The Honorable Frank White, now treasurer of the United States, tells it to his baby granddaughter, Elizabeth, when she sits upon his knee. Mr. White was well acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Russell, and they were the first who told him the story about their fine bearskin rug, when they all lived away out west.

In the beginning, and this was long, long ago, Mr. and Mrs. Russell lived on a farm in northern New York. They lived in a new part of the country near big woods.

One day Mr. Russell went away to town and left Mrs. Russell alone on the farm. Mrs. Russell wasn't lonely a bit, because she had so much to do. Once as she tidied the living room, she looked out of the window and saw a big animal walking along the road.

"I swan," said Mrs. Russell, "but that is a big dog! I don't know when I ever saw such a big dog before."

After that she almost forgot the dog. She swept the living room and did the dusting, and then went in the kitchen to do the work there. Again she looked out of the window, and again she saw the big dog; he was coming toward the house. Even then Mrs. Russell didn't think much about the dog. She washed the breakfast dishes and sang little snatches of song as she worked.

Mrs. Russell was either churning butter or doing something else when she heard an animal stepping around and stepping around close beside the house. She looked out, and even then she didn't know it was a bear that had come to call. She saw an animal, but still thought it was a big dog.

Suddenly the animal walked to the window and looked in.

"I swan!" exclaimed Mrs. Russell in great surprise, "it is a bear."

It was a bear and a bad bear at that. The bear lifted his huge head and sniffed the air. Maybe he smelled something good that Mrs. Russell was cooking on the stove.

For a few seconds the bear looked at Mrs. Russell, and Mrs. Russell looked at the bear. She didn't invite him in; neither did she say anything to hurt his feelings. Mrs. Russell was glad, though, when the bear turned from the window and walked away. He was an unusually big bear, and he didn't look pleasant; but he might have been a good bear all the same. He at least had better manners than Goldilocks when she called at the three bears' house, because he didn't try to lift the latch and walk in.

In a few minutes Mrs. Russell was singing again. She didn't sing long, though, because she soon heard one of her little pigs squealing down by the barn.

"I swan, that bear is after my pigs!" exclaimed Mrs. Russell. Oh, but she was angry. She had believed that the bear was a good bear and that he would walk back to the woods without doing any harm.

When she heard her little pig squealing Mrs. Russell wished that Mr. Russell had stayed at home that day. The next minute the hens cackled in a loud, scared fashion, the old rooster said things, and the little chickens, they cried.

"Some one ought to kill that bear!" she said as she looked straight at the cat. The cat paid no attention; she walked away with her tail in the air.

Just then the pigs squealed again, and the chickens begged for help. Then said Mrs. Russell: "I shall have to kill that bear myself!" And down she ran to the barn.

She ran to the barn as fast as she could go. Then she looked for the bear. That bad bear was standing by the pig pen with his paw through a small hole in the fence. That bad bear had caught one of Mrs. Russell's little pigs; but that didn't do him any good.

The hole in the fence was too small for the big bear to get through, and it was so small the bear couldn't pull the little pig through so he could eat him up. The bear hung on, and the little pig squealed and squealed and tried to get away. It was Mrs. Russell's prettiest, cleanest pig, with the curliest tail, and it made her so very angry to see her little pig in trouble she forgot to be afraid of the bear.

In the barn Mrs. Russell found an ax. Then straight she went after that bear. She walked up behind him, and the only reason he didn't hear her was because the pigs and the chickens were making such an uproar.

Mrs. Russell straightway gave that old bear one hard whack—bang! on the top of his head with the ax, and that was the end of him. He never knew what happened. He didn't even have time to have a headache.

The little pig was glad when the big bear suddenly let go. Mrs. Russel was glad, too.

"I guess you will never scare my pigs and chickens again," she said to the bear. Then back to the kitchen she went and finished her work as if nothing had happened.

When Mr. Russell came home Mrs. Russell said: "There have been great doings on this farm since you went away this morning. I killed a bear!"

"You killed a bear?" Mr. Russell repeated. He thought she was joking.

"If you do not believe it, you go down to the barn and see!" she told him.

Mr. Russell didn't believe it, so down he went to the barn to see what he could see. When he came back to the house he said to Mrs. Russell:

"That is a big bear! How did you do it?"

She told him; then Mr. Russell went to the barn and skinned the bear. He scrubbed and scrubbed the skin with ashes, and then he covered it with saltpeter. He did this to make the skin clean and soft so Mrs. Russell could have a fur rug made of her bearskin. It was a huge bear with a perfect fur coat, and that fur coat did make a rich, warm rug.

Visitors always admired the rug. Whenever a visiting stranger said to him: "That is a fine fur rug you have, Mr. Russell; where did you get it?" Mr. Russell used to answer:

"It is a fine bearskin, Mrs. Russell and I killed the bear!"—The Continent.

"JUST IMAGINE."

On his return to Serbia a young native of that country who had been in America eleven years told his countrymen of many wonderful things, says Scribner's Magazine. When he told the simple peasants about the harvester which can cut, bind, and load the seasoned wheat all at the same time with nothing but a few stupid horses to drag it along, they could hardly believe it.

After awhile the young man's store of information became exhausted, and he had less and less to say; but the wise men of his native village of Idvor urged him on. They met his apologies with the statement that Peasant Ghiga never left Idvor in all his life until one day he went to a neighboring village about ten miles away and saw the county fair. He returned to Idvor on the same day, and for six weeks he never ceased talking about the things he saw at the county fair.

"Just imagine," said the priest, who was in the group, "how much he would have had to say if he had been nine years in great America!"

God is not far away, the infinite Goodness is not far off, but near us: . . . the evening shade, the guarded sleep, the morning resurrection, every bounty that falls from heaven, every bounty that springs from earth, every loving heart that blesses us, every sacred example that wins us, all these are the revelation, the manifested love of the One, all-holy, all-perfect, whom to know is life.—Dr. Dewey.

North Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, Rev. J. W. Dorman.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. H. N. Brown, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, honored the Advocate office with a call on Saturday of last week.

Dr. Theodore Copeland writes that he has recently held a great meeting at Texhoma, Okla. Dr. Copeland's home address is 3710 Euclid Ave., Dallas, Texas.

Rev. J. L. Frazier is completing his fourth year on the Springfield charge, Baton Rouge District. He is building, largely with his own labor, a fine church at Springfield.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Gulfport, Miss., passed through New Orleans on Monday of this week en route to Bogalusa, La., where he was to assist the pastor, Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, in a meeting.

Rev. Dan Kelly will assist Rev. R. T. Ware in a revival meeting at Vivian, La., beginning on Oct. 19. The work at Vivian is in good shape, large congregations attending the services of the church.

Plans are being perfected to overhaul and enlarge the parsonage at Crenshaw, Miss., making it one of the nicest parsonage homes in the North Mississippi Conference. The church at Sledge, Miss., is also being repainted.

The editor of the Advocate is greatly indebted to Dr. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, this city, for his kindness in rendering editorial assistance during the short vacation he recently had in Eiiisville, Miss.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference met with Bishop Sam R. Hay at Lake Charles on Wednesday of this week. A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Conference Board of Education was also heid at the same time and place.

On Thursday, Sept. 25, the formal opening of the one hundredth session of Centenary College, Shreveport, La., wiil be held. A great program is being prepared for the occasion, and President Sexton is expecting a great attendance of alumni and former students.

The Protestant churches of Ei Paso, Tex., have invited the William B. Hogg evangelistic party to hold a union meeting in El Paso before entering upon their general evangelistic work. From El Paso the party will go to Las Cruces, and from there to Hazlehurst, Miss.

Miss Beurah Northington, second daughter of Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Northington, Crenshaw, Miss., has recently returned home from the Lucy Brinkley Hospitai, Memphis, Tenn., where she underwent an operation for appendicitis. We are giad to learn that the operation was entirely successful.

Rev. F. L. Applewhite, Jackson, Miss., is the reporter of church news for the Jackson District, and it was he who wrote the "Jackson District Notes" which appeared in last week's Advocate. Unfortunately, Brother Applewhite's name was not signed to the manuscript, and it faiied, therefore, to appear with the article.

The Business Manager of the Advocate has received a letter from Kiimichaei, Miss., with $2 enciosed, asking for the renewai of subscription to the Advocate. The letter, however, is unsigned, and it is impossible to give proper credit without the name. The letter is dated Sept. 1. Will the writer piease give us his (or her) name?

Miss Nattye Beli, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Beil, of Braxton, Miss., and Mr. Herbert Kay McLure, of Ruston, La., were married at the Methodist church, Braxton, Miss., at noon on Sunday, Aug. 31, Rev. W. H. Lane, of Purvis, Miss., an uncle of the bride, officiating. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

A recent survey of the theological seminaries of America shows that there are approximately 9,000 students enroiled. The survey brings out the fact, however, that many of the so-called seminaries have very low standards of admission, and that many of the students have very littie previous preparation for the work upon which they have entered.

Rev. John L. Sutton, superintendent of the Mississippi Children's Home Finding Society, Jackson, Miss., was in New Orieans one day last week and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. Brother Sutton is always glad to fiil the pulpits of the brethren, either to represent his work or to preach, and he will cheerfuiiy respond to any request for his services.

Rev. C. A. Northington, of the Crenshaw and Sledge charge, North Mississippi Conference, has just closed a fine meeting at Siedge, where he was assisted by Rev. W. A. Wilson, Conference evangelist. There were fourteen accessions to the church and a laymen's league was organized as a result of the meeting. The music during the meeting was directed by Mrs. Brock, of Holland, Miss.

Brother J. C. Cavett, superintendent of the Galloway Memorial Sunday School, Jackson, Miss., requests the pastors and Sunday school superintendents of our patronizing Conferences to notify him, Mrs. C. A. Bowen, or Mr. W. E. Morse of any young peopie or any members of their churches that are moving to Jackson. Upon receipt of the desired information, the newcomers will be looked up and given a cordial welcome to the city.

Rev. L. W. Cain, our pastor at Frankiinton, La., writes as foliows: "The Rev. John W. Robertson, evangeiist of Memphis, Tenn., conducted our meeting this year. His preaching greatiy pieased the people. The spacious auditorium of the new church was overflowed at nights a good part of the time, and his day congregations were the largest I have seen at any revival in Frankiinton the four years I have lived here. He flayed sin straight and hard from the opening to the closing of the meeting. Many church members promised to do better. He was invited by the board to come back next year. His son, John Cooke, directed the music."

A cordial note from Rev. L. H. Estes invites the editor and the readers of the Advocate to attend the opening of the Methodist Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., on Tuesday, Sept. 16, from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. This magnificent institution, the property of the North Mississippi, the North Arkansas, and the Memphis Conferences, is located at 1265 Union Avenue, Memphis. The building is 235 feet long, 48 feet wide, and four stories high. It is of re-enforced concrete construction, and is fireproof. The exterior is of stone, cream-coiored terra cotta, and red mat brick. The building is 240 feet from the street, in the midst of a grove of stately forest trees. The site embraces a iittie over four acres. A beautiful nurses' home has been erected on the grounds. Young women who desire to take up the nobie calling of a trained nurse should write to the superintendent of nurses for particulars. The hospital has a capacity of 150 beds, and the very latest and very best hospital equipment has been instaiied in every department. The opening of this great institution is an event of unusual interest, and the Methodists of North Mississippi, North Arkansas, and Tennessee are to be congratulated upon the realization of their pians.

A FRIENDLY CRITICISM.

Dear Brother Cariey: Will you aliow a brief criticism of your editorial printed on the front page of your issue of Aug. 28, under the caption, "Let the Church Vote on Unification?" You are usualiy very discreet and cautious in your utterances, and for that reason your words have weight, but human iimitations are such that even an editor's brain does not function accurately when off the track. If you will pardon the temerity of your old preceptor, friend and brother and one who loves you, I will take the iiberty of saying I believe you "switched" when you announced, "It is democratic." The Methodist Church is not a democracy. Our good Bishop Candler at at least two sessions of the Louisiana Conference most emphatically, and I think correctly, stated that our church was not a democracy.

You admit that "the responsibility rests squareiy with the membership, both clerical and lay, of the Annual Conferences." Your admission is both lucid and correct and in accordance with our iaw. You further admit, "According to the provisions of the law of the church, only the members of the Annual Conferences have the right to act officialiy upon a proposed measure of the kind now before us." Right again you are, Brother Carley, but pause just a moment; if "According to the provisions of the law of the church only the members of the Annual Conferences have the right to act officially," by what authority would you submit the matter to a piebiscitum? If only the members of the Annual Conferences have the right to act officially, would not a vote by the membership of the church be a "straw vote?" It seems to me, Brother Carley, your admissions kiil the force of your argument. Your admissions seem to piace you in the predicament of the coon in one of Colonel Daniel Boone's coon stories. The Colonel's faithful dog treed a coon and the Coionel walked up to the tree and said to his dog "What is up here?" The coon repiied: "It's me, but I'm not up here."

The church has the General Conference, a body legally qualified and duly authorized to submit the plan of unification to the several Annual Conferences. It has spoken, and the members of the Annual Conferences are legaily qualified and thoroughly competent to pass on the acceptance or rejection of the pian. We have a law, and what is done must be legally done. Some of us might wish that the law were different and more democratic, but it is not. Who would take the initiative in submitting the pian of a referendum? Who has authority to submit the plan? What would yo do with the Restrictive Rules, which are the bone and marrow of our ecclesiasticism? How long wouid it take and how circuitous would be the route we would be compeiled to journey before we could begin to commence to get ready to make preparation to start to vote? Under your second division you make the qualifications and character of the membership a ground for submission. The writer heartily concurs in all the good things you say about our good people, but he desires to answer with an analogue. There are thousands of men in the United States who are as competent and trustworthy as our President and Senators, yet the treaty-making power is delegated to and lodged in the President and Senate, and even to the exclusion of the House of Representatives, not to make mention of vox populi.

In your third division you say "It is right." If it is right to submit to a referendum, then the church is wrong, for it is episcopal in form and not congregational, and makes no provision for submission to popular vote.

In the fourth division you hold "It is expedient." How can a thing be expedient that is not lawful? Paul said, "all things are lawful but not expedient;" but he never reversed the proposition. As we are not congregational, your contention looks like a "trouble-breeder" and a setter up of hopes and a condition that our economy has made no provision to satisfy. There are other suggestions that I might offer, but if you will admit, as I am sure you will, that we are not a democracy and not congregational, and are episcopal in form, we will rest the matter there.

C. C. MILLER.

Baton Rouge, La.

"LET THE CHURCH VOTE ON UNIFICATION."

Dear Dr. Carley: I like you personally. I read with more or less interest all that emanates from your pen. You have delighted me more than once in the subject matter of your articles. Your evident desire for fair play has impressed me even when I could have wished that you might have pursued a different course. But you have given me the surprise of my young years. You didn't even knock at the door of the "One-gallus Hill-Billy Club"—just rushed in without warning. I vote with both hands to receive you. You now carry the marks of the earth earthy. "The Billies" will always give a welcome to an honest "High-topper." You have arrived. You really favored us before your arrival. The glad hand is extended. The smell of fire will not be wanting in your garments when the green-pea aristocrats get through with you. You know, Doctor, we have them aplenty. You take even a Methodist preacher who never wore a pair of "store socks" until he was a voter, let him get filled with his own importance till he swells like green peas well soaked in water, and he talks mighty hard about the "One-gallus Hill-billy fellows" who "sow dragons teeth" in the name of democracy.

When one of the green pea bunch gets going real good it is as rich as cream a foot thick. I would walk a mile most any time just to see him perform—you can hear him most any distance. When he is in full action he reminds a fellow who knows from experience of a real country boy fighting yellow jackets in his shirt. The boy actually enjoyes it. I know. He will tell you how unutterly awful it is to allow a mere member of the church have a voice in the affairs of the church, even when action is being taken that changes the name and state of the church. My dear Editor, you are in bad. You have crossed the Rubicon. You have lined up with hoi polloi. You have called for cornbread and cabbage at a fashionable dining. Jiggs is no longer the center of attraction. Maggie will get you if you don't mind out. The very idea of an editor of a great church paper advocating a plebiscite. You and I are so nearly of one mind now that there is scarcely scrapping room left. True I am opposed to the "plan." True you are in favor of it. A plan is of small import. It just emphasizes the fact that we are not ready for unification. I am opposed to any plan that fails to grant a plebiscite. I will accept any plan that is acceptable to the rank and file of my people.

I haven't yet reached the high state of exclusiveness that enables me to find brains, vision and loyalty in one class only. I don't believe our bishops have a corner on brains in our church. If they have, our brains are woefully split. The editors of our church papers are not infallible. The Pope of Rome is about the only infallible (?) human being we have knowledge of—and he makes some serious mistakes. To say that all the brains of the church are on either side of this or any other question is boldness unwarranted and assumption unpardonable. Take our College of Bishops, who is so bold as to declare in favor of either side in the matter of brains, vision or leadership? Bishops Candler, Denny and Ainsworth will shiver a lance with Bishops Mouzon, McMurry and Moore anywhere, any hour, on any question, and come away smiling and unruffled. These six leaders are divided as their names indicate. Other members of the cabinet are equally interested but less active.

My personal idea of unification would be considered as far afield as was an article I wrote advocating a plebiscite some years since. Yet I have lived to see many dignitaries and more than one editor advocating that same thing. When we are ready let's strike out the word, "South," take the historic name, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and merge without a solitary condition. If there are things to be done first, let's do them. The minority has no interest that will be permanently preserved by the majority. If we are really one, we have no interests that we desire to safeguard. "We be brethren." If, however, three-fourths of the voters of the Annual Conferences and a majority of the membership of the churches desire to try the present "plan," "Barkis is willing"—but don't ask me to vote for it—there are breakers ahead. I am fighting the present plan with all my heart, and praying every day to be delivered from it. More, I have a growing conviction that it is to meet its Waterloo in 1925. Then it is to be hoped that we will go at this thing right. Heart-healing concessions will have to be made, mutual sacrifices will follow, and the spirit of unification will discover itself in the Spirit of our Lord. We won't want a "plan." We will merge because there will be nothing else to do.

Again giving you the right hand of fellowship with great joy, and the heartiest possible welcome into the ranks of the believers,

Your friend and brother,

JAMES H. FELTS.

Greenville, Miss.

RUSTON DISTRICT NOTES.

The pastor and people of the Arcadia church are looking after every detail of work in order that nothing be overlooked or undone at the close of this Conference year. Rev. H. W. Ledbetter is the popular pastor and is an indefatigable worker. His people gave him a vacation in the summer, but he was back at work before his time was up.

• • •

Rev. David Tarver, a student of Centenary College, who was appointed pastor at Athens circuit during the summer, has such a hold on his work that the people have asked that he continue to fill the pulpit on Sunday during the remainder of the year while carrying on his studies at Centenary.

• • •

The district lay leaders' meeting which was arranged for Prof. G. L. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, by Hon. T. W. Holloman, Conference Lay Leader, and which met at Ruston, was well attended. Nearly all the lay leaders of the district were present, as were many of the pastors. It was a great meeting, with a great address, and is bearing fruit.

• • •

On the 29th of August, Rev. H. W. Jordan and his leading laymen arranged a banquet to discuss the lay activities of the church. Mr. E. M. Decker, district lay leader, was present, and discussed "Stewardship and Tithing." About forty-five of the leading men of the charge were present. The presiding elder had the privilege of being there.

• • •

Mr. G. A. Rathbun, lay leader at Minden, and the pastor, Rev. W. C. Childress, arranged a banquet for the men of the charge, with excellent results. Similar meetings have been and are being held at other charges all over the district.

• • •

Rev. R. T. Pickett, pastor at Bienville, has been in poor health during the summer, but has had good meetings at every church.

• • •

Ringgold circuit is composed of many loyal people. Rev. G. D. Purcell, the pastor, has been busy with his work and has held meetings at three of his churches. At Andrew Chapel he did his own preaching; at Grand Bayou his brother, James Purcell, of the Mississippi Conference, assisted him; Rev. J. F. Dring, of the Sibley circuit, did the preaching at Rocky Mount. He has received quite a number of members during the year.

• • •

At the third quarterly conference of the Simmsboro circuit, Rev. H. J. Boltz and his people seemed very happy. They had had good meetings at each of the churches, and each steward seemed determined on a clean sheet at Conference.

• • •

Rev. N. E. Joyner and the people of Ruston have planned a union tabernacle meeting, to be led by Rev. John E. Brown, general evangelist, and his assistants. A splendid tabernacle has been erected, and the meeting will begin on the 14th of September.

• • •

All the pastors have had good meetings, and each one will report quite an increase in membership. More than 1,000 have been received in the district up to date.

We might say much of the Sunday school work of the district, but I will confine this note to the Men's Bible class only. On the fifth Sunday in August, all the classes of the district sent representatives to the district meeting at Minden. More than 600 men were present. The program had been arranged, with good music, both instrumental and vocal, and fine speeches. The address of the day was delivered by Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, on the "Plan of Unification." Judge White went into details, and in a very clear way laid the plan before us, presenting both sides. A standing vote of thanks was given Judge White.

J. W. LANGLEY was born in Autauga County, Ala., July 5, 1849, and died June 19, 1924. In early life he embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The writer well remembers the happy night when he realized the power of his Lord to save from sin. The writer has been a minister of the gospel more than fifty years, and can truthfully say that the conversion of his brother was one of the brightest he has ever witnessed. We lived as close together perhaps as two brothers ever did in the days of our boy and young manhood. In all those years his walk was so consistent that it ever made us feel that he was the better of the two. His was an active, industrious life. But very little of the results of his toil was spent for his own comfort. Just about the time he reached young manhood mother was left a widow with a large family. He stayed at home, and as a dutiful son did all in his power to make her declining years as comfortable as possible. If brother or sister needed help neither sacrifice nor distance was too great to extend the helping hand. Sympathetic friend of the orphans, he took them under the sheltering protection of his own roof and cared for them until they were able to make their own way. He would discommode himself to accommodate his neighbor. Scrupulously honest in all his dealings with his fellow-men. One of his neighbors, hearing of his death, was heard to say, "No man can say that J. W. Langley ever wronged them out of the worth of a penny." The ideal Christian with him was far above the common walks of men. He believed in the faith once delivered to the saints, the old-time religion. He rests in peace.

His brother,

A. W. LANGLEY.

THE FIRE BROKE OUT!

Dear Mr. Editor: The fires of God's eternal love were rekindled within the hearts of the people of Black Jack community during the past few days as Rev. L. Betterton, of Tremont, Miss., preached for us.

We had a six days' meeting at Black Jack and took in eleven members on profession of faith. About one hundred people reconsecrated their lives to God and about seventeen people said that they would erect family altars.

Brother Betterton had one message, and that was Jesus Christ and him crucified. The people were inspired and uplifted by Brother Betterton's preaching, and they want him to come back and hold another meeting for them.

Yes, the fire broke out and we just let it burn.

Cordially,

WM. L. ROBINSON.

IS THERE A WAY THAT IS BETTER?

By Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr.

The Conference Committee on Evangelism during the past year has been trying to think of some means whereby the work might better be carried on than at the present time. Meeting with the Mission Board, of which we are all a part, early in the year, it seemed to be the consensus of opinion that there should be some way out. There are some charges in the Conference that have been getting $100 or so for a number of years. No one doubts that these preachers who serve these charges need the amount appropriated, and more; but is there any possibility of bettering this condition whereby we might use some of the money for extension of the work, rather than keeping going at starvation wages these old circuits that really are or ought to be self-supporting?

After looking into the matter from almost every angle, it would seem as if there might be one thing that would help, and the more I see of the needs and the opportunities, the more convinced I am that this would help to solve the problem. Something like this: Select the best possible man (or woman), and let there be one or more for each district, who can go to these rural districts, or other places needed, and train our people in evangelistic work, League, Sunday school, daily vacation Bible schools, tithing, etc. If this worker could visit twenty churches each year with some kind of program like this in each district, it would be of untold value, and would develop our country work as nothing else can do.

I have had recent observation of the work of the Presbyterian Church here in Shreveport, which has a young lady who is on the go all the time, and the work of the Presbyterian Church is being carried forward as it has not been done before in the whole of the Red River Presbytery.

She is helping in the establishing of three new churches in and near Shreveport, and going to some old, run-down churches in the country and staying by them till they get on their feet.

I have recently visited and held a meeting at an old country church where we have probably thirty-five young people from 16 to 20, and there is need for leadership in this community that I have seldom seen. These are fine Christian young people, but they do not know how.

I have had two life service volunteers, young ladies, to visit my church and make inspirational talks, that have given my young people a vision that they have not had before. Our Baptist friends are holding B. Y. P. U. and Sunday school institutes, Bible schools, and evangelistic campaigns everywhere. We have a better organization than anybody else on earth; can we not invest more of our missionary, Sunday school, League, and other kind of workers and evangelists in some work of this kind, and make it pay in greater returns for the kingdom than we have ever received before or than in any other way? I believe we have the workers; I believe that the work will pay in greater efficiency, and mean the salvation of our country churches in some instances; and I believe we can have the money, for we seem to get nowhere much under present conditions, and most folk do not mind paying for something when they can get something. I believe that it will mean more for our Methodism than anything that we can do just now.

Brethren, if you have anything better to offer, let us have it.

FROM ELLISVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have had the last of our meetings for the year, and feel that much has been accomplished by these services. Brother J. H. Jolly did the preaching at Moselle; Brother W. H. Lewis, at Ellisville; Brother W. T. Griffin, at Hinton, and Brother H. J. Maddox, at Mount Zion, with one sermon at the latter by the presiding elder, Brother Graves, and two by Brother T. J. Halfacre. The service rendered by these brethren was of the highest type and greatly appreciated by the congregations. Taken as a whole, I believe that I have had the best help this year of any year in the ministry. Accessions to the church have been few, but this has been due to lack of preparation and personal work on the part of pastor and people.

The work of the circuit in general prospers, especially among the young people, and our Epworth Leagues, two of them organized since the Assembly, are very active. We are a long way from our financial goals, but will, by diligent effort, be able to report our Conference collections and Superannuate Endowment fund for the first year paid in full at the Annual Conference.

Sincerely,

J. B. CAIN.

UNIFICATION.

By Rev. P. H. Fontaine.

Dear Brother Carley: I have just read in the Christian Advocate (Nashville) an extract from a very interesting article by Bishop Scott, in which he suggests a third jurisdictional conference.

Now, I have been advocating a somewhat similar, but more comprehensive plan, and it is a good time to consider it; for the present plan, so far as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is concerned, is as dead as Hector, and if you doubt it, just wait until the vote is cast to decide it. My plan is to have a confederation composed of all the Methodist churches that wish to join, on the order of our National Government. The United States Senate represented by a general conference composed of an equal number of delegates from every church, and these delegates to be divided equally between clerical and lay. Each church would have its separate polity as at present.

May God direct us.

NUXATED IRON

Helps make rich, red blood and revitalize weak nerves

A CAUSE OF WOMEN'S ILLS

WOMEN OFTEN THINK THEY HAVE HEART TROUBLE, INDIGESTION, NERVOUS PROSTRATION, ETC., WHEN IT'S SIMPLY IRON STARVATION OF THE BLOOD.

Many women believe they are weak and nervous as a result of age, worry and overwork; they think that their disturbed digestion, headaches, heart palpitation, shortness of breath, pains across the back, etc., are due to some serious disease instead of the real cause—iron starvation of the blood. This is proven by the fact that when many of these same women take organic iron for awhile all their alarming symptoms quickly disappear and they become strong, robust and healthy. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living cells and tissue. Without it nothing you eat does you the proper amount of good—you do not get the strength out of it.

If you are not strong and well do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration, but take some organic iron—Nuxated Iron—at once. But be sure it's organic iron and not metallic iron which people usually take and which is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. Organic NUXATED IRON is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples and it often increases the bodily and mental vigor of weak, worn out women in two weeks' time.

Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "Nuxated" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Virginia Thomas, Elementary Superintendent.

In the Elementary work, we are looking toward Children's Week. This is a very important week in our calendar. One of the greatest problems in our work is to get the cooperation of the home. The observance of this week will help materially in overcoming this problem. Parents will help us when they understand what we are trying to do for their children. The topics this year are of special interest and importance. Training in worship is doubtless the most neglected task of the Sunday school, and the most difficult. Our topics this year are "Children's Worship in the Sunday School," and "Home Atmosphere." Now is the time to begin your preparation for the observance of this week; committees need to be appointed, arrangements must be made, conditions should be studied so as to know just what is the most important "Forward Step" needed. Write Virginia Thomas, Tupelo, Miss., for materials which will help you in getting ready for this very important week. We want to have at least fifty schools to observe this week. Won't you have your school be one of the fifty?

Our Conference year is drawing near a close, another year's work is almost over. If your Elementary departments have adopted a standard and some of the points have been met, will you not write me to come check up your school, so that we may know what has been done and what needs to be done?

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

The recent Standard Training School at Amite was the sixth school the General and Conference Boards have put on in our State during 1924. The enrollment of this school was larger than last year. The following preachers were in attendance at the Amite school: Rev. H. N. Brown, presiding elder; J. E. Selfe, Hammond; A. J. Coburn, Kentwood; B. H. Andrews, Amite; B. W. Waltman, Natalbany; J. W. Booth, Ponchatoula, and Jay Coburn, Pine Grove.

The dates for the coming Standard Training School are: Alexandria District, Sept. 29-Oct. 4; Minden School, Oct. 5-10; Shreveport District, Oct. 12-17; New Orleans District, Oct. 19-25.

Rev. O. W. Bradley, Educational District of the Alexandria Standard Training School, which has the honor of issuing the largest number of credits in any school in the State, has written a personal letter to each of the pastors in the district, offering free entertainment to all pastors who will take a credit in this school. Mr. T. W. Holloman, superintendent of the Alexandria Sunday school, will teach a course on the text, "The Methodist Church and Its Work," at this school, and will teach a course in the Shreveport Standard Training School, "The Organization and Administration of the Sunday School."

Mr. L. F. Sensabaugh, Superintendent of Teacher Training of the General Board, Nashville, Tenn., is on the faculty of the New Orleans Training School.

Our Elementary Superintendent, Mrs. R. C. Culpepper, with her six District Elementary Superintendents, is hard at work in promoting Children's Week observance in the local Sunday schools. Mrs. R. H. Harper, chairman of our Conference Elementary Council, is anxious that the leaders in Elementary work hold a State-wide council some time during this fall. Definite information will be given out later.

The monthly report of the Conference Superintendent shows that he has traveled since last Annual Conference 20,189 miles, reaching 17,810 people. He has visited 44 Sunday schools in session, held 91 group conferences and 455 individual conferences on Sunday school work. To do this he has been out of the office 184 days.

The Conference Minutes show that we have 333 Sunday schools, and we all know it is the duty of each school to observe Sunday School Day and send in an offering to the Conference treasurer. The treasurer reports only 52 schools which have sent in offerings up to date.

On the last day of the Houma Standard Training School, many of the students gave a personal testimony as to what the school had meant to them. We quote from one of the pupils who attended this school:

"The Training School has been a mountain-top experience to me. It has encouraged my purpose in life, strengthened my faith, and instilled a greater love in my heart for the masses who can only be reached through and by our great Sunday school organization co-operating in all of its departments with the church."

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

ANOTHER WESLEY BIBLE CLASS MEETING.

On the fifth Sunday in August, at Minden, La., there was gathered together one of the finest bodies of men that have ever blessed that city. I have never met a more enthusiastic body of Methodist men. They are full of pep, they want to see things happen, and if secular matters are left out of the way, they will make it happen. These men are getting the work of the church on hearts, and have a desire to make the church the center of attraction. There were hundreds of them who came miles to learn how to make the Bible class in their church a power. They are seekers after knowledge. I trust at the next meeting a program will be worked out that will be of interst in the local church.

Judge White made a great speech, and it was educational, but I heard a great statesman say, "Be careful not to pass on a case until all of the evidence is given." I am sure that in so far as he sees (and he may see all the way) that the case is clear, but I want to hear more evidence. I am for unification if it is right, and I am praying that we are right in this great move.

I don't think that the time is ripe for us to give to the Bible classes the responsibility of the church finances (I am speaking of the Ruston District). We are too young in the work. It is not the policy of our church to place a great responsibility like that upon a child, and the Bible class work in this district is in its infancy. If the leaders of this movement don't watch, they will stunt the growth of the work by overloading while young.

I think that it would be a better policy to have these gatherings for the instruction of Bible class workers in that particular work. It would be better, it sems to me, to have each class to report its work as to method of teaching, social and vocational life; and by this the smaller churches can see the value of organized work. I am convinced that the only way that the country is behind the city in church work, is the proper organization; then it is up to the Bible class workers to put into effect the value of systematic church work.

Brethren, I urge you who are in the lead in this great work, not to place anything upon this body of men until you have them better organized. Why not let men like Brother Brown put spice and pepper in the movement until it gets going; keep out the idea that your motive is to get "money." If the church will get salvation, the finances will care for themselves. I never have to send a steward to see a man that has salvation. Let's make the Bible class movement a power to save men, and when this is done, all the financial troubles will disappear.

J. F. DRING.

A CALL TO OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL FORCES.

By E. B. Chappell, D.D.

At its last annual meeting, April 16, the General Sunday School Board issued a call to the Sunday school forces of the church to unite in a church-wide effort to increase our Sunday school enrollment and the number of our Sunday schools.

In his report to the Board, the General Secretary called attention to the fact that the primary emphasis of the Board in recent years has been the improving of the quality of our Sunday school work, developing a worthy program of religious education, and training leadership through which to make this program effective. It was pointed out that a great success has attended this effort and, therefore, that the time has plainly come when, while carrying forward its educational program, the Board ought to give increased emphasis to reaching the unreached throughout all our borders.

Ten years ago at the beginning of the rapid expansion of our Sunday school work under the enlarged Sunday School Board, it was definitely determined to give first attention to the development of a great program of religious education in the Sunday school. Those who are familiar with what has taken place know how marvelously the Board has succeeded, and will recognize the wisdom of the policy that has been followed.

While there has been a steady growth of Sunday school membership and an ever increasing number of members coming into the church from the Sunday school, at the same time we cannot overlook the fact that there are hundreds of thousands of our proper constituency who are outside the Sunday schools and who are growing up in a spiritual destitution. The Sunday school membership does not yet equal the church membership, though it has been steadily gaining upon it. There are areas in our territory with no Sunday schools and no Sunday school buildings, and there are probably yet a larger number of locations in which the present Sunday school buildings are not adequate to take care of those who ought to attend. The Board therefore feels that there is every reason why the Sunday school forces throughout the church should from this time forth have their attention called to our inescapable responsibility of providing adequate religious instruction and training for that entire body of people for whom our Methodism is responsible.

Accordingly, plans are being projected under the direction of the Board for a church-wide study of the whole problem of reaching the unreached. Surveys will be conducted and the effort will be made to ascertain the extent to which we are failing to reach our people with the Sunday school and to devise the necessary plans for bringing these into the Sunday schools.

This involves a study of the capacity of present buildings and the location and erection of new buildings. It is at once a campaign of intelligent increase in Sunday school enrollment and of improvement and enlargement of Sunday school buildings and a campaign of Sunday school extension providing for the survey of unoccupied areas the organizing of new Sunday schools.

In other words, our program in the past has been primarily one of an intensive nature designed to improve the quality of religious instruction and training. Henceforth it must also make adequate provision for a great extension policy.

In calling the church to this forward move for the Sunday school extension, the Board does so with the conviction that the Sunday school program of to-day is more worthy of being carried to the people than ever before and with the confidence that there never was at any time a larger number of people in any church intelligently prepared to carry on the work of the Sunday school and to bring it within the reach of all the people than are to be found in our own church to-day.

Our Conference Boards and Conference leaders, our pastors, our Sunday school officers and teachers everywhere are called upon to join in this effort to carry the gospel through the Sunday school to the many thousands now unreached.

VACATION DAYS.

The undersigned has had a very refreshing vacation of about two weeks, and comes back to his work with renewed vigor. As a good start on his vacation he assisted Rev. M. A. Burns in a meeting at Soule Chapel, one of the historic churches of Noxubee County, Miss. For well nigh a hundred years the people of that community have gatherd there from time to time to call upon God. He has never failed them. From this meeting the writer went back to the familiar scenes of a more recent pastorate to find everything going right along. Rev. J. H. Felts is completing a full quadrennium as presiding elder in that territory, and is beginning to wonder where he will be another year. Some other people are wondering, too. One thing is certain, he will move. Brother Broyles was taking his vacation, and his people taking theirs. I had to go to the third church before I found a preacher at home. At night Brother Felts preached a stroug sermon on David. It was good to greet the friends there who for five years toiled with us day and night for the upbuilding of the kingdom.

Following this little visit with Greenville friends, Mrs. Lewis and I had a delightful outing at Muscle Shoals. The Wilson Dam is a wonder. Seventeen million dollars is being spent there on the most colossal dam in the world. The Shoals are the Niagara of the South. The only pathetic thing I saw on that trip was the nitrate plant. The government spent $69,000,000 there during the war, and the whole plant, except the big power house, is standing still. War is an expensive luxury—it is bad from nearly every viewpoint. One of the worst things about war is its politics. Why can't something be done with that great plant that will make the money invested there yield a reasonable income?

Had good crowds last Sunday after being away for two Sundays. Conference will soon be here, and we are tightening our grip for the uphill pull which always comes just before Conference. The outlook is fine here. We hope to have everything in apple pie order for Conference.

E. S. LEWIS.

Columbus, Miss.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

ADVERTISING THE AUXILIARY.

It was seeing a placard poster on a country roadside, advertising a missionary meeting, that led Robert Moffat to become a missionary. As he read the announcement of the meeting there came to him memories of the missionary stories that his mother used to tell him, and he asked himself the question: "Why should not I be a missionary?" The answer was a life spent in Africa.

This fact alone has made me an enthusiast on advertising our missionary meetings. I use posters, the blackboard and the secular press. The posters can be hung in the vestibule or in other conspicuous places where they will attract attention. We can make many kinds of posters—calendar posters, motto posters, topic posters, or posters inviting members to the study circle and advertising meetings or entertainments. What we learn through the sense of sight make a more lasting impression than what we hear. I use the blackboard constantly for a few terse sentences conveying information calculated to arouse interest or to excite inquiry about meetings of the auxiliary, Week of Prayer, entertainments, election of officers, or any other missionary news. The items should always be newsy and brief.

We must be missionary boosters. The men who lead the procession in the commercial life of American cities and towns are the men who never hide their light, who are the largest advertisers, who are before the people constantly with the bargains which they have to offer, and who know the value of publicity. Why, then, do missionary women linger where the moss grows, when it comes to advertising? Why cling to the antiquated ideas of the oxcart period? This is the age of the publicity movement in the avenues of human endeavor. It is the age of printers' ink and progress and of wise men who read the signs of the times and keep in advance of their customers. I am sure that we as missionary workers do not properly advertise our goods.

Some of you will say: "All that takes time." I know from experience that it does take time, but it pays. It takes work, and one doing this advertising will ever get knocks and discouragements. But what of that? The philosophy of life is like a bicycle. It goes well on the level and downhill and over good roads, but with the uphill and mud one must needs get off and push. We are at the pushing time in our publicity work in the missionary society. We need more women to do publicity work. Any one can use the blackboard, or make a poster. These latter can be gotten up at a very small expense by means of a piece of cardboard or cloth, paste, pictures, and a few colored crayons. We should advertise constantly in the daily or weekly press. It is advisable to use the same space all the time. No charge is made for such items. The news should not be given over the telephone, but should be written out plainly and sent direct to the editor.

Such a missionary advertiser is the bearer of good news. She stands at the gate to announce the victories won. She catches the shouts of triumph all along the line and sends them out to the rest of the army. She cheers with the news of the forward movement everywhere.

"The constant drip of water wears away the hardest stone;
The constant gnaw of Towser masticates the hardest bone;
The constant wooing lover carries off the blushing maid;
And the constant advertiser always gets the trade."

YOUTH

THE REVOLT of YOUTH

By STANLEY HIGH

"This book sheds a ray of light on the chaos of the present day. The youth are in revolt. They propose not again to be used as cannon fodder. Theirs now to reason why. It is one of the most enlightening, encouraging and hopeful books that has come to this reviewer's desk for a long time."

CHRIST AND THE PROBLEMS OF YOUTH

By JOHN M. VERSTEEG

More and more Youth is becoming an urgent subject of discussion and consideration. This volume is "an essay on the problems of youth rather than a catalog of them." The Presbyterian Advance says that "terse meaty sentences, scintillating and suggestive, abound in this book."

Activity at Sibley, La.

Dear Sisters: I am a subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and enjoy news from the different societies, so thought you would like to hear from us.

We were organized last November with nine members and now have twenty. We are carrying every department of an adult auxiliary. We are trying hard to do the things that are ours to do. We meet every Wednesday afternoon at the church except on the second Wednesday, when we have our mission study in the different homes.

The officers have co-operated with me in trying to make our society one of the best. There are opportunities for a great work here, and as this is our first year in the missionary work we are informing ourselves all we can so we can do greater work.

We have just finished "Woman and Missions," and found it a wonderful book. We are planning to take up a Home Mission book right away.

Through our Social Service Department we have visited and helped the sick and have learned a great deal about child welfare.

I ask your prayers that we may have a real wide-awake society.

Best wishes to all the workers of the missionary societies for our Conference.

FROM THE SHILOH CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Please allow us space for a brief report from the Shiloh charge.

Our revival at Johns began the second Sunday in August, and closed with the evening service on Thursday following. Rev. L. E. Alford, presiding elder of the Newton District, did the preaching. I am sure that his coming to this church at this particular time was providential. Had he been here as pastor for an entire year he could not have adapted his messages more perfectly to our present needs.

Brother Alford's sermons are profound, yet characterized by simplicity of statement and directness of spiritual appeal. Also they are practical, strongly Biblical, and are based on the old-fashioned views of Bible authorship and inspiration. I feel that our congregation here has been strenthened and helped in every way both by his presence and his timely messages.

Our annual camp meeting at Shiloh church began on Aug. 16, and closed Aug. 24. The preaching was done by Rev. J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., one of our general evangelists. Few preachers possess in equal measure with Brother Hanes the native attractions of a noble presence, an expressive voice, and a splendid diction. Add to these a mind stored with the best literature, an interest in humanity, and an unfaltering faith in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and it is easy to see why great crowds greet him at every service.

The visible results of these meetings are: A considerable addition to the membership of the church, a number of reclamations, and heightened enthusiasm on the part of the church in the great concerns of the kingdom. The Lord is wonderfully blessing us here, and we have the devil on the run. Pray for us.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The Religious Press, the oldest, the most substantial, the most enduring type of national medium.

Never so potent in its editorial influence—never so efficient a vehicle for a worthy business message as right now.

Never so clean—never so keen—never so alive and responsive to the needs of modern publicity.

The Religious Press neither expects, nor invites, business on any ground other than that it makes good and that it can prove its case.

It has the highest political ideals; it is foremost in promoting good citizenship, education; first in establishing and supporting philantbropy.

The most worth-while portion of the religious element anywhere is that which subscribes to the Religious Press.

Where are the great humanitarian movements orgnaized? Among the home-loving, patriotic people who read the Religious Press.

No other publications are held to so strict an accountability for the class of advertising carried, or for the statements made by the advertisers.—Indian Witness.

Before the Centenary, we had not exceeding $150,000 to spend on home mission enterprises, running from Baltimore, Md., to Butte, Montana, and back to Key West, Fla.; the Centenary, if paid in full, will bring us in about $800,000 a year for five years.

The Centenary money collected for Sue Bennett Memorial School has enabled us to erect a high school building in which there is a beautiful chapel, library, laboratory, high school class rooms, and manual arts department.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE ON KYOTO CIRCUIT.

By Mrs. W. E. Towson.

We are under the greatest obligations to the Centenary for the many good things it did for us, and for those it made possible. Would that it had "carried on" the good begun work to its completion. "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" I have an old Book that I read from every day that has a statement like this: "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." But I did not start out to write about the Centenary, particularly, but of some happenings on the work to which we have been assigned.

One of the good things made possible by the Centenary was a great tent meeting of ten days' duration, held in our side yard, and I wish to tell you of just one result: Toyoshima San is the eldest son of a talented artist of the city, and is himself a student of the Kyoto Art School. He was attracted to the services, and attended very regularly. Following the meetings, he attached himself to our Central Church, finally accepted Christ, and was baptized by the pastor and received into the church. We have been able to keep in touch with him, and I wish to tell you some of the results of this 18-year-old youth's conversion. They remind me of the incidents recorded in John 1:40-45.

A little while after his baptism, his mother, whom he had influenced for Christ, was taken ill and died of that dread disease, typhoid fever, leaving her husband, two sons, a young daughter and 9-months-old baby. The mother died while visiting and nursing her own sick mother and sister. During the father's absence and while caring for the baby, at the place of the mother's death, we had the three children to dinner with us, and the Lord gave us a precious season with these motherless ones.

We have followed that day with prayer and visits, keeping in touch with Toyoshima San as best we could. The other day, he brought a friend to see us. We found that he had not only led this chum of his to Christ, but a young man cousin, both having already received baptism. The record of this dear youth's work for Jesus, within a few months of his own baptism, is as follows: His own mother influenced for Christ, with the blessed hope of seeing her in heaven; two young men reached through his direct, personal work, baptized and now in the church; accompanying his sweet little sister every Sunday to Sunday school and with regular attendance at church. This impresses me as a good record for a young Christian of less than a year's experience.

The other day I called at his house to inquire about the little sister, who is ill in a hospital, and to send her some flowers and other remembrances. I had a happy time talking to Toyoshima San and his father, who rather opposes his son's being a Christian. I stayed so long, I forgot myself, and had to go home in the dark. I was received most cordially, and the Holy Spirit gave me wonderful liberty in speaking to the father about his spiritual interests, and in seeking to remove his prejudices to Christianity. I have faith to believe that he will yet be reached for Christ, and be added to the list of Christians in that home. Please pray that it may be so, and that the younger brother, also, may be reached.

BEFORE TWINS WERE BORN

Was Very Miserable. Felt Lots Better After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wyocena, Wisconsin.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my twins were born because my sister used it and recommended it to me. I was so I could scarcely go about my daily work I was in such misery. But after I began taking the second bottle I was feeling lots better. I took three bottles and a half before I was confined and finished the bottle while I was in bed. I got up feeling fine and have taken care of the twins alone ever since. I recommend the Vegetable Compound highly and will sing its praises in the future."—Mrs. IDA GEBHARTZ, Wyocena, Wis.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many mothers are left in a weakened and run-down condition after child-birth, and for such mothers the care of the baby is well-nigh impossible. Not only is it hard for the mother, but the child itself will indirectly suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother both before and after child-birth. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It can be taken in safety by nursing mothers

AGAINST UNIFICATION.

Dear Dr. Carley: Since sending you my little note of June 5, I have been very busy reading, watching, and listening to every move relative to the so-called plan of unification of our church with the Northern church.

I have found many things that surprise and stir my very soul, and I am preparing a series of articles giving twelve reasons why I am opposed to unification. I hope to get these articles before the church during the next twelve months, and I am persuaded that I have education and common sense and religion enough to deal with this matter in a cold fact, common sense, non-offensive way. Some of my reasons for being opposed to this so-called plan I have not seen mentioned in any of our papers as yet.

I noticed in the New York Advocate of Aug. 14 an article written by Rev. John S. Chadwick, presiding elder of Roanoke District, of the North Alabama Conference, that surprised me perhaps more than anything I have yet seen. I know nothing about the Civil War except what I get from history and what my precious mother told me, but I am wondering what Robert E. Lee or General Forrest would have thought if one of their men had crossed the line and posted or tried to post the Union Army as to their movements, and this is exactly what I understand Brother Chadwick has tried to do, as will be seen from the following quotation:

"The Methodist Episcopal Church can help much in carrying to a successful issue the union movement—and will help much. We are counting on an overwhelming vote for union in your Annual Conferences; and since many of these will be held in advance of the meetings of our Annual Conferences, the effect of such majorities will be wholesome. And every anti-union statement and every anti-Southern statement by any of your leaders will be used to strengthen anti-union and anti-Northern sentiment down this way."

Judging from his article one would think that we had about as well quit and say let them have it; but listen, Doctor, he will be the most disappointed man in the South when the last vote of our Annual Conferences in 1925 is counted. For I will tell you, from what I know myself, the Southern Methodist Church will not submit to this plan. Of course we do not expect to get the help of the high critics nor materialistic ideal fellows nor modernists, but thank God they are not in the majority by a long jump.

Sincerely yours,

S. Q. BASS, Local Elder.

Epworth League

REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE,

Second Epworth League Assembly, Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark.

We, your Committee on Resolutions, beg leave to submit the following report:

1. Whereas, the second Western Epworth League Assembly, Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., has been a great success in every respect, and has exceeded the highest expectations of all who were interested; and,

Whereas, we wish to express our heartiest appreciation to those who have made large contributions toward the happiness of all in attendance, we wish to mention the following:

First—The Rev. Ralph E. Nollner, dean of the Assembly, who has so ably managed the entire workings of the Assembly, even to the minutest detail, and to whom much credit is due for its success.

Second—The faculty and platform speakers, who have rendered inestimable service, in the classrooms, on the playgrounds, and at the Assembly hours and Vesper services.

Third—Superintendent J. L. Bond and the entire management and helpers for their untiring efforts in providing comfortable quarters, wholesome food, and courtesies of every kind.

Fourth—The General and Conference organs for publicity in advertising the Assembly; the newspapers for carrying articles regarding the Assembly, and our own "Sequawker" and the untiring efforts of its editor-in-chief, the Rev. Byron Harwell, and his helpers.

Fifth—The Rev. Mr. Wade and the Leaguers of Fayetteville, who have shown a great spirit of loyalty in making ours a pleasant visit in their city.

Sixth—Barr's Band of Fayetteville, and the Stuttgart Band for their excellent concerts.

2. Whereas, the new Epworth League building has been so valuable to all Assemblies and conferences held at Mount Sequoyah this season; and,

Whereas, it is imperative that this building be completed and paid for, or else remain a reproach on all Leaguers west of the Mississippi River.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That the month of September be designated as the time when we shall pay the remainder of our assessments, and have this money in the hand of the treasurer by Sept. 30, 1924.

Second—That the names of those chapters paying their assessment in full be placed on a tablet which will occupy a place in the hall of the new building.

Third—That each of the twelve participating conferences appropriate the sum of $50 for the purpose of beautifying the grounds around the new building.

Fourth—That this Assembly requests the return of the Rev. Ralph E. Nollner for the dean of the Assembly to be held in 1925.

Respectfully submitted,

W. W. HOLMES, Chairman.
FRED ROEBUCK, Secretary.

FROM BIENVILLE CHARGE.

The work of the brethren who helped us in meetings this summer deserves favorable mention—Revs. R. T. Ware, J. F. Dring, P. W. Wyman, J. M. Boykin and O. E. Sanden.

Most gracious revivals were those conducted by Dring at Bear Creek, and Sanden at Burk Place.

All were delighted with Wyman at Strange. We had to close too soon there on account of other meetings. We can heartily commend him and Sanden as evangelists. Their addresses are Wisner, La., and De Ridder, La., respectively. Ware and Boykin did faithful work, with good results. We report fifty-four accessions to the church.

The pastor was down and out during the month of July; but by the help of the good Lord these brethren put the work over, and that is wonderful.

R. T. PICKETT.

FROM THE SIBLEY CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: If you will permit, I will give a short report of the work here. The Sibley charge is one of the many country charges of the Louisiana Conference with its difficulties and advantages. The meeting at Sibley church was held in the month of June, a union meeting with the Baptist pastor and myself. It was a splendid meeting, with six additions to the Methodist church and one to the Baptist church.

I held my own meeting at Mims, with eleven additions.

Rev. Henry T. Young, of De Ridder, La., assisted me at Pine Grove, and a splendid revival was the result. Henry is a good preacher, and does good work. Harold, his son, was with him, and rendered good service with his trombone.

Rev. Dan F. Anders was with me in the fourth meeting on the charge, and did some good work. In these two meetings we added thirty-five members.

Rev. G. D. Purcell assisted me in my last meting on the charge, with good results, fifteen members being added. Brother Purcell is a good preacher, and does effective work.

Altogether, I feel that the Sibley charge is in good shape—four Sunday schools running well, one that is alive, but not running fast; one Epworth League doing fine work; one Woman's Missionary Society doing good work; a recently organized Wesley Bible class, with all the members of that church (men) as members.

I have assisted in three meetings outside of this charge this summer, and the Lord abundantly blessed in each of them. Forty-two members were added in the three meetings. I was with Pickette at Bear Creek; eighteen were added there. It was a great revival, with the old-time grove meeting and shouting in the camp. I was with Purcell at Jamestown, seven were added there. This is a mission point, and I think that it would be well to consider a missionary appropriation for that place. The membership is small and the possibilities are great. I was with Purcell at Rocky Mount. This was a great meeting, with seventeen additions, and the church wonderfully strengthened.

This has been the most fruitful year of my ministry, and I trust that I may be of more use to the church and instrumental in leading many souls to God. Brethren, pray for me.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A CENTURY OLD—CENTENARY COLLEGE.

On Sept. 25, Centenary College, Shreveport, La., will enter upon the work of its one hundredth session. This is a momentous event in the history of Christian education, not only in Louisiana, but in the nation—for it is not often that we are called upon to note such a significant happening. A hundred years of Christian education by an institution owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—what an achievement and what a record of faithful service through the vicissitudes of time!

As is altogether fitting, preparations are being made to celebrate in an adequate way this significant event. President Sexton has sent out a call for a full attendance of the alumni and former students of the institution on this historic occasion; representatives of other educational institutions in this section have been invited; all the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference, the members of the Board of Education, and other interested and loyal preachers and laymen are expected to be present; a program of compelling interest, including addresses by Bishop Sam R. Hay, Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, and others, has been prepared. Louisiana in particular, and the nation in general will be given the opportunity to become familiar with a history that is thrilling, heroic, tragic, glorious—and an opportunity such as has rarely confronted those who are interested in the making of men and the establishment of a civilization that will bless humanity for ages to come.

Another century of success to Centenary College!

CONFERENCE TIME NEAR.

The North Mississippi Conference will convene at West Point, Miss., Oct. 29, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth presiding; the Mississippi Conference will convene at Canton, Miss., Nov. 5, Bishop Ainsworth presiding; the Louisiana Conference will convene at Crowley, La., Nov. 19, Bishop Sam R. Hay presiding. The recitation of these dates brings forcibly to mind the fact that within a few weeks the work of the Conference year will have come to a close and reports as to progress will be in order. Fortunate the preacher and happy the people to whom Bishop Ainsworth's expressive phrase, "level columns," can be applied. A full financial report is not necessarily the true measure of a successful year's work—but in most cases where a good year's work has been done tho financial obligations of the church have been met in full. The recital on the Conference floor of gracious revivals and a large ingathering is inspiring; but when that recital is followed by the statement that the pastor's salary and the collections for the benevolences are considerably behind, there is just a little wonder as to how these things can be. There is still time to do great things by earnest determination and hard work.

GOLDEN RULE SUNDAY.

The observance of any one Sunday as International Golden Rule Sunday, as is planned for Dec. 7, 1924, is, to the minds of some people, a work of supererogation. Ought not every Sunday—in fact, ought not every day—to be marked by manifestations of the Golden Rule? Of course the answer is, "Yes;" but the Golden Rule needs practical application, in order that it may become a rule of life rather than an unused theory. The designation of Sunday, Dec. 7, as "International Golden Rule Sunday," with the relief of the orphans in Bible lands as the specific application of the Rule, will not only sharpen our minds with reference to the general principles of the beautiful maxim of the Master, but will also give us the opportunity to put into practice what we are accustomed to preach. It is a beautiful, a Christian thing, to save the lives of the sons and daughters of other nations made orphans by war, persecution, famine, and disaster.

A STRANGE SATE OF AFFAIRS.

The sentence to life imprisonment of the two youthful Chicago murderers, wealthy, of high social position, college graduates, after their plea of guilty, on the ground maintained by their counsel that they were not insane but mentally diseased, has brought about a strange state of affairs, it seems to us, in the administration of justice to criminals. The case presents no difficulties to those who are definitely and conscientiously opposed to the infliction of capital punishment on any grounds; but the law of Illinois provides for the infliction of such punishment. The defendants in this case, through their attorneys, entered a plea of guilty to a crime for which capital punishment is provided, admitted that the circumstances of the crime were substantially correct as published by the newspapers; yet the plea was made by counsel, and sustained by the judge, that the mental state of the defendants was such, short of insanity, as to justify a penalty less than death. The atrocity of the crime itself was alleged as proof of a diseased mentality. The only conclusion we can draw from the decision is that the principle has been established in criminal jurisprudence that the more atrocious the crime, the less likely it is that full criminal responsibility has been incurred. We shudder to think of what the application of this principle will mean to the administration of justice throughout the land.

THE COST OF CHURCH PAPERS.

One of the unsolved problems of the church is the circulation and maintenance of its periodical literature. Perhaps the papers of the M. E. Church, South, are as well established and as well supported as those of any other church; yet, as is well known to those who have to do with their management, there is a constant struggle to "make ends meet." In this connection, that we may not feel that ours is a peculiar situation, we take the following from a recent issue of the Central Christian Advocate, published at Kansas City, Mo., one of the best known and most widely circulated organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"The church has not taken kindly to the mounting deficits in the Advocates, and the late General Conference crystallized that feeling into mandatory instructions. This is not to be wondered at, since the total deficit for the quadrennium had mounted to $522,252.47.

"The deficits in the Epworth Herald ($101,598.90), the Methodist Review ($28,615.12), the Christian Apologist ($45,135.86), brought this deficit up to $697,602.35; and on top of that, the subsidies to our Italian, Swedish, Philippine, Hawaiian, Spanish, etc., foreign languages made the final total deficit $767,346.10, or three-quarters of a million dollars.

"This aggregate seemed staggering. And it is. And were this the beginning and end of the matter, it might bury the Advocates, crushing out of existence the highest type of official church press Christendom has ever exhibited. And it may be done yet.

"But there are two phases of the question to be considered. The first is the temporary nature of this avalanche of costs. During the quadrennium preceding this last quadrennium with which we are now concerned, the Western Christian Advocate, for example, came to General Conference showing a net balance of profit of $7,847.54. But it came up to Springfield showing an increase of cost of $48,498.74; and the Northwestern, which had made a profit of $5,902, had a change of $65,321 to the bad, and came up to Springfield in company with the rest of the family only a little under $60,000 in the red. The New York Advocate went from a deficit of $21,246 in the preceding quadrennium to $132,196 in the last, an increase of $110,949.57. The Central rose from a deficit of $14,000 in 1916-19, to the crushing sum of $101,362 in 1920-23. And yet in all this contrast, the editorial end was kept at the very minimum, the soaring costs appertaining alone to the cost of production. This is temporary. Already the decensus averno is stayed. We look for a better country, not like Abraham when he went forth by faith alone, but like Abraham plus, because the better times are already coming through the front gate."

The editor of the Central, in discussing the situation and endeavoring to find the solution of the difficulties confronting the publications of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says the need is "more subscribers." We agree with him.

FROM THE DECATUR DEN.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

The Memphis Special eastward. Forty miles an hour through the lovely East Tennessee country. I had just had breakfast, and was in my seat reading Bishop Denny's "Minority Report." By the way, whether you are for or against unification, you ought to read this document. No wonder Judge Candler wanted to "drap it" at the General Conference. It is a hot poker for the unificationists. A tap on my shoulder. I looked up, and there stood Bishop Mouzon, the champion of unification on our side. He caught me in the very act of reading Denny's report, which courtesy obliged him to hear at Chattauooga. I invited him to be seated, and then we had a talk that lasted four hours, and made me forget the mountains and the vales of the enchanted land. It takes something very interesting to make me do that. I found Bishop Mouzon a good listener, as well as a good talker. The more I know of some folks the less I like them; the more I know of Mouzon the better I like him. That is a mighty good sign that he is genuine. Much that we talked about was in the freedom of private conversation, and not for publication, of course; but I trust that I do not transgress propriety when I set down a few impressions I got while riding with this bishop. I hope he won't object, but if he does, and will ask my pardon, I'll grant it.

First, Bishop Mouzon has religion. Haven't all bishops got religion? No, sir, some are ecclesiastics. But I mean Bishop Mouzon has what we Methodists call Holy Ghost religion. You can't tell by the way a man preaches whether he has religion or not; but when you talk face to face with him for several hours, and it just leaks out, you know it is in there. Bishop Mouzon, as chairman of our Commission on Unification, is exposed to severe criticism, and the archers have shot at him, and I am afraid some have wounded him through misunderstanding him. He needs a great deal of grace to bear with composure the arrows of criticism. In a certain town where I was pastor once, a near neighbor was the distinguished Confederate General, Stephen D. Lee. In the same town lived a notorious demagogue, who was General Lee's opponent in politics, and bitter and unscrupulous in his manner of opposition. He stooped—no, he did not have to stoop, it was his natural level—to the vilest misrepresentatiou, and his bucket was always full of mud. Yet he posed as a zealous Methodist when the Methodist conference met there; then he was a good Presbyterian when the synod met there; and an enthusiastic Baptist when the convention met. I was sitting with General Lee in the church one morning during the convention, when a man came up, and said: "General Lee, I have glorious news for you this morning." "What is it?" Lee asked in his quiet way. The General was a devout member of the Baptist Church. "So and so," meaning the demagogue, "was at the mourner's bench and professed religion last night. I know you are happy to hear of his conversion." "No," said General Lee, "if that is true, it is sad news to me." The man looked dumbfounded, and said: "General, you astouish me." "Yes," said Lee, "it is sad news; for if that is true, it has bankrupted the grace of God to save him, and the rest of us have no hope!" So while Mouzon, I think, has a good case of religion, let's pray for him. He will need our prayers. When Lee invaded Penusylvania, a committee of Quakers came to General Hill's headquarters, and asked if they would be allowed to use the prayer for the President of the United States in their service within the Confederate lines. "Why, certainly," said General Hill; "do all you can for him. I know of nobody who needs to be prayed for more than the President of the United States." I know of nobody who ueeds to be prayed for more than a Southern Methodist who favors unification. May the Lord opeu their eyes to see the precipice to which they are leading us.

Again, Bishop Mouzon has beeu misunderstood, and, I hope unintentioually, uisrepresented on some points. I myself set him down as a modernist, but he is not. On the coutrary, I found him as sound as a dollar. He may be morc lenieut than I am toward moderuists, for I have very little patience with such foolishness; but he is himself "orthodox." Again, he has been misunderstood as being in favor of unification at auy price. I had him down that way myself. But this free and easy talk with him convinced me that he holds as firmly as I do to our Southern ideals and traditions. The difference between us at this point is that he is willing to trust the Northern Methodists, and I am not. I might be willing to trust the select group they have ou their Commission with whom he hobnobs; but not the Northern General Conference. No, sir! Bishop Mouzou admits that the plan is imperfect and will have to be modified; but he thinks that however it may bc modified to be made workable, our interests will be safeguarded. I don't think so. At any rate, I want to know how it is to be amended before I go into it. Better know some things before it is too late to rectify them if they don't suit. "Ice cold lemonade! Ice cold lemouade! One glass for ten eents. Two glasses for a nickel," cried a boy at a picnic. A man approached and saw two big buckets of ice cold lemonade. "You say this is ten ceuts a glass, and this is two glasses for a nickel? Give me the two glasses." The boy dipped out the refreshing drink, and the man drank the two glasses of lemonade. "Now," he asked, "how is it that you sell two glasses out of this bucket for a nickel, and charge a dime for the other?" "This is the bucket the puppy fell in," said the little fellow. "Ice cold lemonade! Iee cold lemonade!" Bishop Mouzon is calling out: "Unification lemonade! One glass for ten cents. Two glasses for a nickel." I want to know before I deal, which bucket the puppy fell in. I think we had better reject this loose plan because it is loose. If they once get this loose rope over our neck, then will eome the bridle, then the saddle, then the spur. Somebody now will say, "Steel has gone over to Bishop Mouzon's side." No, I haven't. I'm going to fight him to a finish on unification; but I would rather be defeated in a fair fight than to win by unfair methods. Bishop Mouzon is amply able to take care of himself, though a bishop he is unable to correct false statements about himself. I understand that in Africa the only people who use polsoned arrows are the pigmies. Soon after General Lee took charge of the presidency of Washington College, one of the professors spoke in very bitter terms in his presence of Geueral Grant. Contrary to his uniform manner, General Lee showed much feeling, and said with deep earnestness: "Professor, if you ever speak disrespeetfully of General Grant again in my presence, your connection with this institution or mine must end." That is the way brave men contend. Bishop Mouzon takes his position as the appointed leader of the unification movement on our side seriously, and he is a leader to be feared. He is planning, I think, for a general assault all along the line. Be ready for them when they come. Send for the minority report. Bishop McMurry ridicules it, which is a sure sign that he can't answer it. Send for Bishop Candler's leaflets and mine. Load your gun to the muzzle and shoot straight; for it is a life and death issue now, and Southern Methodism expects every man to do his duty in this solemn hour. I'm having a good time, and no reason to want to go, but I love my church so much that I would rather die than see her perish by this policy of peaceful absorption. Strike and strike hard; but don't hit below the belt.

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: I have a feeling that Egypt is a very difficult land for the western mind to interpret, and particularly so at this time when the rabble of the cities seem to be more or less intoxicated on account of their newly achieved freedom from England. Beginning at Kantara, we were greeted with a patriotic chant in Arabic, which we continued to hear until we were well outside the harbor at Alexandria. The immediate occasion for this outburst of patriotic enthusiasm was the shooting of the Premier by an Egyptian student. So far as I could learn, the demonstration was anti-British. If it had been in our own country, I would not hesitate to say that it was an instance of misguided enthusiasm, and calculated in every way to be productive of mischief.

We passed through Goshen at night, and made our first stop at Cairo, the capital of Egypt. In the newer part, Cairo is modern and beautiful. The streets are wide and well paved, and many of the stores would do credit to the cities of our own land. But the old city reflects the Egypt of two thousand years ago. There one finds old and disreputable looking mosques, and all the indications of superstition, poverty, and unproductiveness, and in all the religious rites and symbolims an uncertainty bordering upon hopelessness.

The first place which we visited was the museum. It was much like the Egyptian sections of our own great museums. The difference was that here we found a whole museum devoted to the antiquities of the land. So far as that exhibit was concerned, they were living in the days of ancient Thebes. There was not a thing to help one to believe in the destiny of the Egypt of to-day. There were the treasures from the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, which one could not view without being impressed with the genius and skill of the artisan of ancient Egypt. The couch, the chest, and the throne chair would reflect credit upon the taste and the workmanship of any cabinet-maker to-day.

Our next excursion was to the Pyramids—those mute symbols of immortality which stand upon the border of the desert. No man can reflect upon the cost of these colossal piles without a feeling of admiration for the daring of the builder. But after all, to what purpose was this great sacrifice? The very name of the builder is a legend, while the pyramid remains to proclaim the vanity and the folly of the ancient kings whom the years have caused to be almost wholly forgotten. Near the great Pyramid stands the Sphinx, half-buried in the sand. His Washington-like locks abide, but he speaks no message to the passing throng. The Nile, the Pyramids, the museum, and the obelisk on the site of the ancient city "On," the daughter of whose priest was the wife of Joseph, are the principal attractions of Cairo for the tourist.

Here I left the party with which I had been connected, and struck out alone. My first excursion was to Luxor and the valley of kings. Here in this ancient capital of Egypt is a richness of treasure of which I had not the faintest conception. The tombs of the kings, the Colossi of Thebes, the temples of Karnak and Luxor connected by the avenue of ram-headed sphinxes surpass anything that I had imagined in connection with the antiquities of Egypt. But I shall not go more into detail.

Two things impressed me on this trip. The first was that the real builders of these magnificent tombs and temples lived in mud huts. Thebes in the days of its glory appears to have been a city of mud huts. The other thing that impressed me was that from the very environs of Cairo to Luxor the inhabitants are still living in mud huts. There is nowhere a sign of progress. Their methods of agriculture seem to be as primitive as they were in the days of the Exodus. It would seem to be impossible to be so near to the tides of progress without showing it, but is true.

Of ancient Egypt I would make one observation. By every token it was a land of hungry hearts. The tale is told in all the art and architecture of the land. Along with a portrayal of vindictiveness toward their enemies, and a brutality that chills the blood of the refined, there is the universal and unfailing appeal to Ammon-Ra for immortality. They inscribed it upon every obelisk, it is chiseled upon the ruins of their splendid temples, and it was cut and carved, painted and engraved upon the sarcophagi in which their bones were to rest.

But Egypt is a land that has lost its crown. Whether or not it can ever recover it, is a matter in the keeping of the years to come. But nowhere does one see signs of a renaissance which give promise or even hope for the return of the golden scepter which was broken and lost.

REFERENDUM.

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

A plea for a referendum on the unification question is made by some who oppose the proposed plan; and some who favor the plan have been led by the seeming fairness of the plea to favor it. If I were a Baptist, I might be impressed by this plea; for while the Methodist ecclesiastical polity is as truly democratic as is that of our Baptist brethren, yet, while theirs is a democracy of the referendum type, ours is a democracy of the representative type. In the Methodist Church all legislation is by a General Conference composed of equal numbers of lay and clerical delegates elected by the Annual Conferences—the lay by the lay members of the Annual Conference, and the clerical by the preachers. A referendum, while no more democratic, is not the Methodist way, and would require an act of the General Conference to make it of binding force.

A referendum is not the best way, we Methodists think. In an election for a national president, a great many good citizens do not cast ballots; and I am sure that in many referenda in Baptist churches very many do not vote. If we were to hold a referendum on the unification question, it would be so; for very many of our best members are not greatly concerned about unification. They would quickly and hotly resent any attack on any fundamental Methodist doctrine; but the matter of unification is not of this kind. Where the pastor is intensely interested, either for or against, and talks much and earnestly about it, a majority will probably follow him—otherwise they will remain generally indifferent about it, and in a referendum would vote as they generally do in the church conference, very scatteringly. Nothing can be accomplished by this referendum controversy.

Brother John Smith is opposed to the unification plan, and wants to vote against it. Being an intelligent layman who owns and reads the Discipline of his church, he knows how he can vote and have his vote duly counted. He and his like-minded brother in the church, Walter Jones, talk it over, and one is elected to the district conference—or both. At the Annual Conference of 1925, one vote, at least, against unification is cast. Brother Smith wins and is happy, or loses and is sweetly submissive. He has voted the Methodist way. All of us who vote at all do it that way. I was not a delegate at Chattanooga or at Hot Springs, but I voted through our Mississippi Conference delegates for unification—I did it representatively; and I hope to do it at the Conference of 1925 directly, and when the final vote is counted I shall be happy or sweetly submissive. Being a Methodist and a Christian, I cannot do otherwise. I see no good to come out of an illegal referendum.

The church has already spoken through her only authoritative body. The General Conference asks the church, through her Annual Conferences, to ratify her action. It is very evident that they will do so. Let every Southern Methodist think as he or she is inclined, and say what he or she pleases; but let us "keep sweet," and in the end be happy or sweetly submissive, and dedicate life to a grander Methodism, trusting in the Christ who prayed (John xvii. 20-23) for unification—who still prays as he did (Rom. viii. 34; Heb. vii. 25).

AT THE PRISON CONGRESS IN SALT LAKE CITY.

By Rev. H. S. Johns, Chaplain Louisiana State Penitentiary.

I.

It has been the writer's distinguished honor to represent the Louisiana State Penitentiary and the State of Louisiana, by appointment of the General Manager and Governor, for a number of years, visiting all the prineipal cities of the North and East, but this year the Prison Congress was held in Salt Lake City, Utah, Aug. 15-21.

By appointment of our General Manager, Hon. H. C. Pitcher, and a commission issued by His Excellency, Hon. H. L. Fuqua, Governor, I set out Aug. 11, and by easy stages via St. Louis, Pueblo, Colorado, and thence across the Rocky Mountains, I reached my destination the day of the opening, Aug. 15.

Along the route many things attracted attention. The width of the Mississippi River at St. Louis had long been a disputed matter in conversation with friends. Some said it was as wide there as at New Orleans, others said, half. I found the latter to be more correct. There are four iron and steel bridges across the river there, and they are each of three spans, with the necessary approaches. With 200 feet to the span, one would conclude that the river is only 800 feet wide at extreme high water.

One thing that struck me very forcibly is the fact that the great Eads bridge, built about 1880, is still the same in strength and beauty. It looks as though it could stand an age.

No sign of drought, with which the South and Southwest is suffering, is visible from Cairo up, and on west as far as Pueblo, Colo.

I crossed the State of Missouri from east to west, and that State certainly has a fine crop of corn and other products. Out of Kansas City not much was seen, as darkness set in, and the Pullman sped on through lovely Kansas, as much as I desired to see the State which prohibition has made so famous. Waking up next morning, we were climbing the ridges, gradually working up the eastern slopes of the Rockies. By 10 o'clock the tops of the lower ranges were in sight, then Pike's Peak to the north of Pueblo hove in sight.

Getting out of Pueblo that night, I had the extreme good fortune of passing through the Royal Gorge under a full moon. This narrow "gully" piercing the sides of the Rockies, washed out by the Arkansas River, thousands of years running, glistening in the moonlight, was a scene never to be forgotten. This gorge is fully 1,000 feet deep, and extends for about fifteen miles. Returning, I saw it by daylight when the train stopped, and we all got out and viewed the spectacle.

Passing on the next day, we passed through the Utah desert, climbed the Watsatch range, viewed the coal mines, and descended into the Utah valley (first settled by the Mormons in 1847), all in broad daylight.

The Utah valley may be described as that part of the State of Utah first settled, and is approximately 100 miles long, and from seven to ten miles wide, entirely circled by mountains, with small mountain streams running during most of the year. It runs almost from the southeast to the northwest, and is of surpassing fertility under irrigation. A small stream rises far to the south out of the mountains and runs down the valley, forming a lake some twenty-five miles long, and eight or ten miles wide, then another river rises out of this lake and flows to Great Salt Lake, which is a dead sea and 22% salt.

When Brigham Young, with his first company of Mormons, arrived through one of the canyons and gazed up and down this valley, he exclaimed: "This is the spot. Here we shall found our Zion!"

This was indeed a new Palestine, with its striking resemblance to the Palestine of Bible history.

It was the intention of Brigham Young to name the fresh water lake "Galilee," and the river "Jordan." However, they were so busy that the original name of the lake—Utah survived, but the overflow from the lake to the salt sea was named "River Jordan," by which it is known now.

The altitude of all this section is from 4,000 to 5,000 feet above sea level.

The valley is irrigated by mountain streams and springs running around the shoulders of the hills, and by gravity canals conveyed along and spread out wherever needed. Then the Lake Utah, which is nearly 500 feet above the site of the city, fifty miles away, may be utilized in cases of necessity. Then the canyons are dyked up, and vast reservoirs of water are thus provided. Yet the direct water supply for Salt Lake City is at present greatly menaced, owing to scarcity of rainfall and snows for the past year.

The population at present in the State of Utah is said to be 80% Mormon and the remainder "Gentile." Yet it is related on the authority of the warden of the State Penitentiary (a Gentile) that the Mormons furnish only 20% of the prisoners, and never a bandit or highwayman.

This may be explained by the fact that the Mormons are "highly" religious and instruct their children accordingly. However, the claim is made that the undertow of "Gentile" influence is having its effect. This may be explained by the fact that most of the "Gentile" element are after "business" and not religion.

TO PASTORS AND PARENTS.

Will you please send me the names of any Methodist young ladies who will attend the Mississippi State College for Women this year? Our Central Church is located just across the street from the college, and is fostered by the Mississippi Conferences for the purpose of ministering to the students. I will be glad to be of any service to your young ladies, and our church will be glad to serve them in any way.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

I have just returned from the thirty-third opening of Millsaps College. It was a propitious opening, that, to the writer, was the occasion of feelings of both joy and sorrow. The joy of it lay in the fact of the renewed interest the citizenship of the city of Jackson is showing in this great institution. The sorrow of it lies in the fact that there was brought to the mind of this scribe the consciousness of the fact that practically all those who made the establishing of Millsaps College possible and those who were first connected with the institution have passed into eternity. Thirty-one years ago, this September, I matriculated at Millsaps and began my college career, to which I had been looking forward for years.

Within the past few weeks, Dr. Key, the president of Millsaps, made a timely and great address before one of the organizations of the city of Jackson. In that address he showed, among other things, what Millsaps College should mean to the city of Jackson and how that city can add to the greatness of that institution that is perhaps doing more for the spiritual, moral, and cultural uplift of the citizenship of Jackson than is any other one institution. I am sure that it was as the direct result of that address that the Chamber of Commerce of Jackson undertook the important business of having the students of the college met at the depot in autos and carried out to the campus of the college. At the opening exercises this morning, addresses of welcome were happily made to the student body in behalf of the city of Jackson and all her churches. It makes the heart of an old alumnus of Millsaps glad to see the good people of Jackson showing such a great interest in Millsaps.

As I see it, we Methodists of Mississippi have a great institution in Millsaps College, to which we should all give our financial support and our patronage. I am longing to see the day when the Methodists of Mississippi, as a whole, will show the same interest in Millsaps that was in evidence on the part of the Methodists of Jackson to-day. I am sure we would have to travel many, many miles before we could find a better location, better surroundings, or a better faculty than we have in Millsaps College.

Here's hoping that this session will be the best, so far, in the history of the institution!

J. TILLERY LEWIS.

Sardis, Miss., Sept. 10.

REV. J. H. ROGERS—A MEMOIR.

Rev. John Harbard Rogers was born June 19, 1860, and departed this life at 12:10 a. m., Saturday, July 11, 1924, aged 64 years and 22 days. Funeral services were conducted in the First Methodist Church at Tahlequah, Okla., Sunday, July 12, 1924, by Rev. E. H. Casey, presiding elder of the Muskogee District. Brother Casey was assisted by W. E. Garrison, pastor of the Tahlequah church; W. L. Broome, F. O. Shanks, J. D. Gilliam, J. D. Cunningham, and Brother Williams, pastor of the Christian church at Vian. The body was laid to rest in the Tahlequah cemetery.

Brother Rogers was the third son of G. W. and Martha Rogers. He was a native Mississippian, having been born near Booneville, Miss. He was converted at an early age and united with the Methodist church at Blythe's Chapel, a country church of the early day. He grew to manhood under strong Christian influences, and was licensed to preach in October, 1888. He was admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Confernce at Macon in December, 1891; ordained deacon by Bishop Granberry at Corinth in 1892, and elder by Bishop Key at Aberdeen, December, 1898.

Brother Rogers served the following appointments: 1891 as supply, Iuka circuit; 1892, Corinth circuit; 1893-4, Poplar Creek circuit; 1895, Stewart circuit; 1896-7, Walthall circuit; 1898-99, Elzy circuit; 1900-1, Paris circuit; 1902-3, Pittsboro circuit; 1904-5, Boyle circuit; 1906, Jonestown and Belen; 1907, Longtown. In the fall of 1907 he was transferred to the Oklahoma Conference; 1908, Sallisaw station; 1909, Carter Avenue, Ardmore; 1910, Marietta; 1911, Davis. At the close of the year he was transferred from the West Oklahoma Coufereuce, iuto which he had fallen by the division, to the East Oklahoma Conference. 1912-13, Boswell and Soper; 1914, Checotah; 1915, Roff aud Mill Creek; 1916-17, Chelsea; 1918, Wewoka; 1919, Kingstou; 1920-21, Braggs and Gore; 1922-23-24, Vian.

On Sept. 16, 1880, he was united iu holy wedlock with Miss Willie Alice Ophelia Gresham, of Booneville, Miss. No Methodist preacher was ever blessed with a more heroic, devoted, and self-sacrificiug companion. To this union were born four sons and three daghters. The youngest daughter, Mamie, preceded her father to the better land by ahout nineteen years. The wife and mother, and six children, grown to manhood and womanhood, survive him: Rev. James W. Rogers, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Lake Village, Ark., in the Little Roek Conference; Rev. Ben F. Rogers, student pastor of the State University, Gainesville, Fla., Florida Conference; Charles L. and Fletcher H. Rogers, drnggists of Tahlequah, Okla.; Miss Gertrude, a teacher in the Sapulpa, Okla., high school, and Mrs. Leslie G. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex. Other members of the family surviving him are three brothers and two sisters: Rev. W. F. Rogers, pastor of the Methodist church at Holeomb, Miss., North Mississippi Conference; J. M. Rogers, Booneville, Miss.; J. J. Rogers, Red Bay, Ala.; Mrs. J. D. Chase, Halcut, Miss., and Mrs. Anna Cunningham, of Baldwin, Miss.

Brother Roger's heart was as tender as that of a little child. The current of sympathy that ran through his soul was broad and deep. In him the poor, the widow, the orphan, and the outcast, had a friend; and the discouraged, the afflicted, and the hereaved had a comforter. These elements drew men to him and held them as friends. His soul was transparent. No secret design or unworthy motive was harbored there. No suggestion of hate, no disposition of jealousy, no shadow of suspicion lurked in his breast. Wherever he was sent he went gladly and worked for his church and for his Master. The main secret of his life was his strong faith in God and his rich personal experience. A great and good man has peacefully fallen on sleep. We miss him, but shall see him again

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last."

A LINE OF HISTORY AND EXPERIENCE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF THE UNIFICATIONISTS.

By Rev. H. W. May.

A repetition of history is not an unusual thing. The return of the season and the harvest are not more certain than the return of many things that are governed by the laws of the human mind and human ambition. The man that refuses to be taught hy the history of yesterday and denies the experience of his fellow to-day is not to be followed, hut avoided.

Experience is an invaluable thing. Upon it great emphasis is placed in all forms of business life, and in spiritual things there is nothing that can take its place.

I did not start out to write notes on a prayer meeting talk, hut to relate an experience and to pen a line of history. Some men will understand and be profited thereby. Some will refuse to understand, and try to apologize, by the oft-repeated statement that conditions will remove difficulties, and hring about harmony and brotherly affection, hy reason of association. I cannot believe that magnanimity and brotherly affection can be the product of an association where contention and unlawful invasion have been the ahiding history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now desiring unification. No such union will survive. It means the multiplication of friction.

The want of magnanimity upon the part of the Methodist Episcopal Church, aud its failure to recognize the inheritance and lawful rights of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are facts of history that are well known, and will not be forgotten by many of our long-suffering people. The history of yesterday will be repeated to-day wherever opportunity presents itself, is my candid opinion, based upon former association and transactions with the officials of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Bishop W. A. Candler was in charge of the Louisiana Conference when some of the history I now write was in the making. In 1913 Bishop Mouzon appointed me presiding elder of the Alexandria District to represent him. Said district is situated iu the very heart of Louisiana—the field to which Richmond Nolley was assigned and in which his ashes rest, the land in which his name is more fragrant than the flowers, and sweeter far thau the richest perfume. I found the field white unto the harvest and was casting my sickle in, but to my surprise aud sorrow deep, I received a letter one day from Bishop Candler announcing a complaint that Bishop Thirkield was making of me for disregarding the occupancy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and trespassing upon his field. My surprise was as great as my sorrow was deep, but I went on with my work and cared for our own. I failed then and still fail to understand how a bishop of the church that has its boundaries fixed and the boundaries far removed from the Louisiana territory could make such a complaint as that of trespassing in the very heart center of this good State.

I looked into the history of those sections where the Methodist Episcopal Church was investing funds through its Boards of Missions and Church Extension and discovered that the majority of the people were our Southern people, and many had united with the Methodist Episcopal Church without any knowledge of history, purpose or plan, of the Methodist Episcopal Church to possess the very heart of Louisiana. I found in one of the largest and most rapidly growing towns in that district, namely, Oakdale, that our people some years before my day had raised sufficient funds to build a modest little chapel without knowing until the day of its dedication that it was not to be the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and its affairs administered by our bishops and their representatives. In another district, uamely, the Lake Charles, the following line of history was made: Some of the laymen of the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, discussed and hoped for union of the two Methodist churches, Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The matter was referred to me, the presiding elder of the district at that time, aud I was requested to see the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I saw it and found it to be good, quite as good, if not better property, than ours. Said Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in a few squares of where our Broad Street Church has been doing its work, and doing it well, for more than a half century. My information is that the bishop in charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Louisiana looked into the situation of uniting the two churches, and it is quite reasonable for me to suppose that the question of who is who was asked. The union did not take place. Again when the Noel Memorial Church in Shreveport was passing through a very unpleasant experience as to who would own and control that valuable property, my information is the district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the bishop performed a part in the matter that was calculated to complicate, irritate and prolong the unsatisfactory situation. The donor, the late Mr. Noel, in loyalty to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, finally passed it into our hands, and there it is to-day. The bishop in charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Louisiana in conversation with me claimed magnanimity in this matter of the Noel

Memorial Church and insisted upon my vacating some fruitful territory I was planning to possess as reward for his magnanimity. His magnanimity was a magnanimity seen through magnifying glasses, and his unagnanimous spirit was minimized in my eyes by the stubborn fact of his impossibility to possess said Noel Memorial Church.

If the late Dr. J. M. Henry could speak to us to-day of his experience with the officials of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of New Orleans, the chapter would be complete.

Experience is a valuable asset, and upon it Methodism has placed strong emphasis, and still insists upon experimental values as a stronghold of her testimony. "What we have felt and seen, with confidence we tell and publish to the sons of men the signs infallible."

My good friend, Bishop Monzon, in an argument favoring unification, employed an incident in the life of Charles Lamb to establish a fact he claimed will result in affection by reason of acquaintance and association. My brother Monzon's argument fails when viewed in the light of history and experience. A plan of unification that has, and possibly forever, divided our church in hope and heart beginning with the general superintendents, then elders, pastors, laymen, does not appear to me to be a plan that can possibly bring two large bodies like the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, together in hope, harmony, success and affection. A division of our own household does not prophesy to me a spirit of union with a neighbor. Sentiment is one thing and facts are another. History ignored does not guarantee a harmonious future, but points to an entanglement that will bring regret. A plan that does not provide for the men who pay the bills and hold our property in trust, to express themselves concerning this matter of unification, but alas, denies the right, cannot possibly result harmoniously. Will the brethren favoring unification take these things into consideration and beware of flattering overtures? Will they call to mind the old Italian proverb, which is as follows: "He that caresses thee more than is wont to do has already deceived thee or is about to do so!"

PUT NAMES ON THOSE CHURCHES.

Dear Dr. Carley: Did you ever take a long trip through the country in an automobile? That's my hobby. I generally take my vacation in that way. I can't think of anything better than to tuck my family in a Ford car and get out on the open road. It gives a busy man a fine opportunity to have a real visit with his family and to chum with his children.

This summer we drove through the wonderful Ozarks, covering a distance of a thousand or twelve hundred miles. We passed through many villages, towns and cities, and through great stretches of some of the most beautiful country I ever saw. Our rule of travel was: "Six days going—not too fast—seeing and enjoying everything, keeping our minds and hearts open for the flood-tides of beauty in God's out-of-doors; one day, Sunday, stopping for Sunday school and for the preaching of the Word, for worship with the people of God."

Some time I may have more to say about this wonderful trip. What I want to say now, is this: I had difficulty in finding a Methodist church. I had this difficulty not only in the country, but in the cities as well. Don't understand me to say that there were no Methodist churches along the way I journeyed. There were many, perhaps more than any other church, but they were not named. Many churches I saw had no name, sign or symbol to indicate what kind of churches they were. Some of these churches were in Louisiana. Inquiry revealed the fact that many of the people in the immediate community didn't know the name of the church. Certainly no stranger knew. It seems to me that every Methodist church ought to have its name in a prominent place where every passer-by can see it. When I go traveling, and am a stranger away from home, "Methodist Church" looks mighty good to me.

Tell all the preachers and Methodist folks in Mississippi and Louisiana to put the name on their churches, with the name of the pastor. The sign ought to be attractive—the work well done. It will leave the impression that the folks who worship in this church are proud they are Methodists. I am.

NO TIME FOR JESTING.

By David Rankin Barbee.

At the called General Conference, held in Chattanooga early in July, three members of the Southern Commission on Unification submitted a very able report in which facts of history and irrefutable argument were arrayed to show the utter unwisdom of the proposed plan of unification.

That minority report is a really great document, containing, as it does, a condensation of history which every loyal member of our church should wish to have preserved and defended. That it is unanswerable is attested by the fact that no one has attempted to answer it. Never before, that I am aware of, has such a singular tribute been paid to a report by its opponents.

Recently, however, Bishop W. F. McMurry, whom I have long esteemed and for whom I inherited an affection that is one of the sacred things in a man's life, has published through the papers of the church an article which purports to be a review of the minority report, but which is really a rather unseemly attack upon Bishop Denny, who read the report to the General Conference.

In his article Bishop McMurry does not question a single fact nor refute any part of the argument contained in the minority report. He does little more than print a poor effort at ridiculing one of his colleagues, who is his elder in years, his equal in earnest piety and his superior in those graces of intellect and scholarship which characterize really great men.

Of course, he expresses his dissent from the minority report, and seeks to bolster his position by saying the General Conference agreed with him. But when one remembers who composed that body, and what influences dominated its major faction, its agreement with Bishop McMurry, or Bishop McMurry's agreement with it, signifies very little.

The great history of Southern Methodism which Bishop McMurry seems to wish to ignore and to deprecate is such that the church at large will not agree to have it heclouded or undervalued. It is too sacred to be treated lightly.

To the making of some of that history the honored father of Bishop McMurry contributed no little, and the good bishop will be fortunate if the chapter in his own life which he is now writing by his daily deeds, will be as creditable to him as the record his dear father made is honorable to him.

No man, or church, or nation can afford to ignore or despise the history of the past. And one who thinks lightly of the history made by his ancestors is likely to be disesteemed by his posterity.

Bishop McMurry may have brought himself to think that the history he derides as "dust and ashes" is worthless; but he will find it pulsates with living principles which will never die.

It matters not whether one is, in this controversy, for or against unification, to every loyal, self-respecting Methodist of the South, the minority report is a document to be studied with care and preserved. It is a calm and dignified statement which one may well keep for reference in the years to come as well as for careful consideration in the present. Every adult member of our church should procure a copy and read it and keep it for future use. It is a remarkable paper, pervaded by an elevated spirit which cannot be too highly commended. Certainly it cannot be treated with contempt as Bishop McMurry would have it treated.

In the treatment of such matters the good bishop is quite out of his depth. His penchant is joking, and handling history, so far as my knowledge of him goes, is not his forte. He has many friends throughout Southern Methodism who hang their heads in sorrow over his unseemly and undignified assaults on his colleagues. I number myself among these.

New Orleans, La., Sept. 4, 1924.

MEMBERS VOTED AT ORGANIZATION.

Dr. Carley: Privately, in discussions on "unification," I stated that in 1844-1846 the members voted and instructed the delegates to the Louisville convention, 1846, giving their almost or really unanimous desire for the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Those to whom I spoke doubted the historic correctness of my contention. I ask the privilege of saying through the Advocate (as they are readers of the paper), that if they will read pages 104-107 of "History of the Organization of Methodist Episcopal Church, South," published in 1845 by John B. McFerrin, M. M. Henkle, A. L. P. Green, F. F. Pitts, and John W. Hanner, and also on page 151, those to whom I spoke will realize I spoke advisedly—not at a venture.

The delegates requested all the churches in all the Conferences to vote and advise. And their consent and desire to organize the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, were by an overwhelming majority.

I thank you for your editorial and your "democratic" spirit.

Give direction to the idea—that each Annual Conference of 1924, by resolution, request every pastor in some definite month of 1925—early in the year—take the vote of each church, of all the members from 21 years of age up.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN HE DOES NOT QUIT IN A PINCH!

A real man proves himself in the midst of a struggle. The Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment is a testing period. Preachers who put up their hands in the face of difficulties and say "It can't he done," are not the kind of men our fathers were. The builders of Methodism had the fighting spirit, and they could not he stopped. If their sons will have the same determination for the success of the Superannuate Movement, the ten million endowment fund will be raised.

"'I can't,' is a foolish expression—
'Tis really a coward's confession.
Somehow or other it always comes hack
Stealing the good things we already lack,
Bringing us nothing but trouble and care,
Leaving us hopelessly sunk in despair.
But there's never a day
When the world can say
That a man's not a man if he dare!

"'I will" is a wonderful blessing,
A heart full of courage expressing.
Somehow or other it brings us success,
Fills us with joy that we cannot repress,
Gladdens our friends, makes their burdens more light.
Places a star in our crown ev'ry night.
For there's never a day
When the world can say
That a man's not a man if he'll fight!"

THE TIDE IS SURELY COMING IN.

By the time these lines appear in print the total amount paid on quotas by all the charges will he close to $700,000. This statement is made on the basis of the present daily receipts. If your charge is doing its part in this good work, you have reason to rejoice. But if not, I should think that you would find it very difficult to he comfortable. Some day we will celebrate a notable victory achieved in the Special Effort in behalf of the church's worn-out preachers, and it will be an unhappy day for the preacher who cannot join in the fun because he did not do his part to get the victory.

Come on, everyhody, and let us push the $700,000 total to date up to the million mark! Many charges have in hand Special Effort money, hut are waiting to have more in hand before remitting to the Board. Remit what you have and send the other when you get it. Let us avoid lost motion. We ought to have one million dollars by Oct. 1, 1924.

PUT ON YOUR SPECTACLES AND READ.

Recently the editor of one of the Conference organs urged the people to read this page. He said: "It is not dull stuff. It may carry the facial appearance of dryness, hut as you read your eyes will brighten." Thanks, hrother, even though your compliment carries the "facial appearance" of doubt. THE SUNBEAMS' SONG.

By Margaret E. Sangster, in the Christian Herald.

This is the song that the sunbeams sing,
As they flutter over the street—
"Life for us, is eternal spring,
And the ways of life are sweet;
Where we dwell there are rainbow gleams,
And mists that are fine as lace;
And the rare perfume of a thousand dreams—
And the smiles from each cheery face!"

This is the time the sunbeams hum,
As they sparkle and skip and glow—
"All of the joy of Life's to come,
For we, who are sunbeams, know!!
Don't waste pleasure in dim regret—
Time goes as the sunlight goes,
At the evening time when the grass is wet,
And the night dew lies on the rose!"

This is the prayer that the sunbeams say—
As they pause in some lonely place—
"Life may be splendid and kind and gay,
If folk live by the Father's grace—
God, who has made us of deathless gold—"
(Ah, they sparkle and gleam and glow—)
"Makes happiness for all hearts to hold,
For we, who are sunbeams, know!"

VIRGINIA'S SURPRISE PARTY.

"Deary me! deary me! such a worry as I'm in!" exclaimed Granny Mullen, Virginia, who was crossing the Mullen farmyard, having waded up the brook, paused at the back door, and called out anxiously:

"What kind of trouble is it, granny?"

Startled, the little old lady slammed to her oven door, and came out on to the porch.

"Trouble enough with the children having a party this afternoon and I promising to make the little cakes and the cream puffs. Now the hens have stolen a nest in the haymow, and I'm too stiff-jointed to climb the likes of that."

A party! Virginia loved parties, and she had not been invited to this one. She hadn't lived in the village many weeks, but why should they have left her out? She felt a lump in her throat, and she remembered that she had caught the boys and girls whispering together often that week at school. When they had seen her coming they had run away laughing.

"Well, I'm sorry, but there won't be any party to-day. I can't make little cakes and cream puffs without eggs!" commented Granny Mullen, the cake woman.

All the village came to Granny Mullen to have their wedding cakes and Christmas cakes made, and no one ever thought of having a party without having Granny Mullen making the sweets.

Suddenly Virginia laughed out loud. Why couldn't she climb the haymow and hunt the eggs? But it wasn't her party, and she hadn't been asked. Still, it was too bad to spoil a party just because there weren't any eggs in the pantry when there were plenty in the haymow.

"Give me a basket, granny, and let me climb the haymow." offered Virginia.

"Bless your heart, honey, think you can? I was afraid I couldn't get them till grandpa came home to-night," Granny Mullen answered, taking down from a nail a little red basket.

Virginia, with the basket clutched in her fingers, skipped across the barnyard to the stable. A cackling hen flew out through the open doors as she ran across to the haymow. How would she ever get on top? Her bright eyes searched the dim barn; then catching sight of a ladder half-buried in hay, she saw that it led straight to the top.

Very slowly, one step at a time, for Virginia was not used to ladders and haymows, she crawled up rung upon rung. A little breathless, she dropped into the depths of the sweet-smelling hay. Shaking the hayseed out of her hair, she stumbled forward, searching for nests. Ah! here were two eggs, and here another nest with more, and still another nest, and another. She soon had a dozen—surely enough eggs to make cream puffs for the party. Now she must get down.

Suddenly she leaned over the edge and looked across the barn. She could not climb down the ladder and carry the basket of eggs. She had used both her hands in climbing up. Away in the opposite corner the hay was heaped in a mound on the floor, and built clear to the mow where she stood. What fun it would be to slide down! But the eggs would smash all to pieces.

Perhaps if she packed the soft hay all around them they might not break. So she took them out and, wrapping each, laid them back in the basket. Then she put more hay on top.

Squatting on the edge of the mow, with the basket held firmly in her dimpled hands, she slipped easily over the side. She felt as if she were sinking, sinking; then suddenly she came to a stop. She was on the barn floor and half buried in the mound of hay.

With a funny little shake she scrambled to her feet, and ran out of the barn to the farmhouse. Granny Mullen unpacked the eggs laughing happily.

"Thanks, deary," she exclaimed, "and I hope they give you a good share of the little cakes at the party."

But Virginia could not even smile in response, for she had not been invited to the party.

It was late in the afternoon, as she snuggled up in the crab-apple tree, half asleep, that she heard mother calling excitedly:

"Ginnie, Ginnie, Ginnie, come quick! Somebody is here to see you."

Her eyes all starry, Virginia ran to the garden, and there, all dressed in their Sunday best, romped the boys and girls of the village. They were laughing at her surprised face, and calling for games. Mother was spreading a snowy cloth, under the trees, and a little girl in blue was counting out Granny Mullen's cream puffs.

"Ginnie, Ginnie! did we surprise you?" chorused the children.

Virginia laughed aloud. The party had been for her after all, and just suppose she hadn't hunted the eggs in Granny Mullen' haymow?—Exchange.

HOUSE CAT ADOPTS WILD BOB KITTENS.

Two baby wild bob cats adopted by a blue house cat, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Frank, of 315 South Twenty-first Avenue, Phoenix, Ariz., are thriving in domestic conditions under the nursing care of their foster mother.

The baby wild cats were found by the Frank family one Sunday on an outing in Paradise Valley—about sixteen miles from Phoenix. The eyes of the kittens had not yet opened, and they were brought to the Phoenix home of the family where the house cat, which was nursing two of her own baby kittens, immediately adopted them. The baby wild bob cats are now eight weeks old, play with visitors just as any ordinary house cat does, and are already as large as their nursing mother. The Franks were compelled to dispose of the two little house kittens in order to give the bob kittens enough food. The foster mother fights for her adopted kittens just as if they were her own when a strange dog ventures near.—C. R. Bernetzke in Our Dumb Animals.

THE SEARCH.

"I took a day to search for God,
And found him not. But as I trod
By rocky ledge, through woods untamed,
Just where one scarlet lily flamed,
I saw his footprint in the sod.

"Then suddenly all unaware Far off in the deep shadows, where
A solitary hermit thrush
Sang through the holy twilight hush—
I heard his voice upon the air.

"And even as I marveled how
God gives us heaven here and now—
In a stir of wind that hardly shook
The poplar leaves beside the brook—
His hand was light upon my brow.

"At last with evening as I turned Homeward, and thought what I had learned
And all that there was still to probe—
I caught the glory of his robe
Where the last fires of sunset burned.

"Back to the world with quickening start
I looked and longed for any part
In making saving beauty be . . .
And from that kindling ecstasy
I knew God dwelt within my heart."

Under the energetic leadership of the pastor, Rev. Del Longgrear, the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., has put on a successful campaign to pay the church debt. Congratulations!

The approaching session of the Holston Conference, to convene in Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 1, will mark the centennial of that body. Elaborate preparations are being made to celebrate the event.

Pastor and people are happy at Moss Point, Miss. The Conference year is drawing to a close with everything in good condition, indications pointing to the best report for many years. Rev. J. Early Gray serves the church there.

The death was reported recently of Adam Willis Wagnalls, one of the founders and for many years president of the publishing firm of Funk & Wagnalls Company, at the age of 81. He was at one time a Lutheran minister.

Rev. Julian S. Duncan, formerly of Pickens, Miss., is happily situated in his new field of labor, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and is enjoying the work to which he has been appointed. His address is: Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Caixa Postal 454.

The American Prison Association, which met in Salt Lake City this year, will hold its 1925 meeting in Jackson, Miss. The annual meeting is attended by from 500 to 800 delegates. Rev. Frank Moore, a Methodist preacher, is president of the Association.

Rev. and Mrs. George G. Yeager, of Rose Hill, Miss., announce the marriage of their daughter, Natie Elesta, to Mr. Frederic Amis Russell on Saturday evening, Sept. 6. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

The Methodist parsonage at Horn Lake, Miss., was destroyed by fire about 2 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 5. The pastor, Rev. H. N. McKibben, and his little daughter were occupying the house alone, and they awoke barely in time to save their lives.

Rev. L. W. Cain, our pastor at Franklinton, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Wednesday of last week. He is completing his fourth year in this splendid appointment and reported that the charge is in better financial condition than ever before.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, pastor of the Sherman charge, North Mississippi Conference, requests us to announce that Bishop W. N. Ainsworth will dedicate the Bethel church on Thursday, Sept. 25. Former pastors and presiding elders are invited to be present. The editor of the Advocate appreciates greatly an invitation also to attend.

The newly elected officers of the famous Big Brothers' Class, Greenville, Miss., are: president, Price Massey; vice president, E. H. Cason; secretary, S. T. White; treasurer, Baskin Dottery; editor, Waddy West; assistant editor, Mrs. J. N. Beckwith; teacher, M. E. White; assistant teachers, Judge Percy Bell, Mr. Shields.

Dr. Henry Felgar Brooks, pastor of the Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., has issued an attractive folder giving the program of events, including sermon topics and prayer meeting subjects, from the first Sunday in September to the meeting of the Annual Conference, Nov. 5. The program presents an appealing bill of fare.

Rev. I. H. Sells, our pastor at Harrisville, Miss., requests us to announce that Bishop W. N. Ainsworth will dedicate the new church at Harrisville at 11 o'clock a.m., Sept. 27. A previous statement to the effect that the dedication would take place Sept. 25, was an error. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are able to do so to attend the dedication exercises.

The recent sudden death of Mrs. Lucius Lampton, of Magnolia, Miss., brought great sorrow to a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Her death, following closely upon that of her husband a short time ago, has added heavily to the grief of her family and loved ones. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to those who are in sorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Elmore, of Durant, Miss., celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Sept. 10. Rev. W. P. Barton, long since gone to his reward, officiated at their marriage on Sept. 10, 1874. Mr. Elmore was formerly mayor of Durant, and is an active member of the Methodist Church. The Advocate extends hearty congratulations to the happy "young" couple.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of Laurel, Miss., recently held an excellent revival meeting at the Hebron church, on the Waynesboro charge, Mississippi Conference, which resulted in the addition of six fine young men and women to the membership of the church. The pastor of the charge, Rev. R. A. Sibley, is doing a good work, and is loved by his people.

In the appointments of the Kentucky Conference, recently held, we note the following, of interest to their many Louisiana and Mississippi friends: Dr. U. G. Foote, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, is appointed to Crestwood, in the Shelbyville District; Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, is appointed to Park Church, Lexington, in the Lexington District.

Rev. Jno. L. Sutton, Superintendent of the Mississippi Children's Home Society and a member of the Mississippi Conference, spent last Sunday at Laurel, Miss., with the pastor, Rev. J. R. Jones, and the good people of the First Methodist Church. He was especially impressed with the work of the young people in the church—the Junior and the Senior Epworth Leagues and the Sunday school. Brother Jones is in great favor with the people.

The Bay Springs charge, Mississippi Conference, has had a successful year's work. There have been 132 additions to the church, making a net gain of 113 members. One new church has been organized and building erected, another church has been re-roofed and painted, and extensive improvements have been made on the parsonage. Rev. Paul H. Grice is the pastor of this charge.

Miss Ladye Nelson Boykin, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Boykin, Jonesboro, La., was married to Mr. William Reed Bell, Jr., of Murphysboro, Tenn., at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Sept. 11, in the Methodist church at Jonesboro, the father of the bride officiating. Mrs. Bell is a beautiful and accomplished young woman, a graduate of Mansfield Female College; Mr. Bell is prominent socially and in a business way in Murphysboro, where the young couple will make their home. The Advocate extends all good wishes to these happy young people.

Rev. Henry T. Young, our pastor at De Ridder, La., will enter the general evangelistic work, under appointment by the bishop, after the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference, and will be open for engagements after Dec. 1. Brother Young is chairman of the Committee on Evangelism and Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference, and has been fruitful in evangelistic work. His address for the present is Box 786, De Ridder, La., where those interested may address him.

We take the following interesting item from an exchange: "The Douay version of the Bible, the Catholic version, according to the Boston Transcript, sells to the amount of $40,000 a year. The sales for the Catholic prayer book amount to $2,500,000 a year. As the Roman Church claims 17,000,000 adherents in America, we can guess that many of them do not own a Bible. The difference between the sales of Bibles and prayer books throws light on the religious emphasis of the church."

On Sunday, Sept. 7, a class of 14 were received into the Methodist church at Woodville, Miss., on profession of faith, besides several by certificate. This was partly the result of a revival meeting held in the courthouse, in which the five Protestant denominations of the community united. Other churches also had accessions. Rev. Milligan Earnest, an evangelist of the Church of the Disciples, did the preaching. Rev. H. G. Hawkins, pastor of the Methodist church, was chairman of the revival committee.

It is gratifying to the many friends of Miss Stella McGehee, daughter of Mr. H. B. McGehee, of Woodville, Miss., and granddaughter of the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, to know that she has achieved great success in the field of literature. She is a member of the staff of the Washington Evening Post and allied papers throughout the country, owned by Mr. E. W. Scripps. At present, Miss McGehee, with other members of the staff, is the guest of Mr. Scripps on a cruise in the private yacht, "The Ohio", to the Virgin Islands, the Madeira Islands, Spain, Italy, and Greece.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THAT REFERENDUM.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Of course, that referendum thing can't be done; but I'm for it. The "constitution" is supposed to have determined how the unification vote shall be taken; but what is the constitution between friends? Our representatives have been elected to represent us upon the supposition that they were capable and worthy to do so. But we can easily cast them aside in a matter of this kind. The General Conference has specified the manner of procedure; but why should we obey the General Conference? Let's have the referendum.

With certain provisos! If we are to have a minimum age limit, let us also have a maximum. If that splendid army of young Methodists below the age of twenty-one are to be ruled out, let us rule out those above forty-five! Why refuse suffrage to the "young man in his non-age" and grant it to the "old man in his dotage?"

Again, I am for the referendum on condition that the issue be debated by representative advocates of each side, before every congregation in Southern Methodism. Brother Jernigan of Arkansas had a referendum before a vast throng of forty-one, and it was unanimous against unification. But Brother Jernigan debated both sides himself! I should like to have Bishop Mouzon meet Bishop Candler on the hustings, and Bishop Cannon, Moore, or McMurry meet Bishop Denny, Dr. Carley meet Dr. Meek; and I'd like to "take on" Dr. Sam Steel myself. It would be so easy. Then I should insist that representatives of both sides be present in each congregation on election day—to watch the returns.

Finally, I am for it, provided that the vote of the majority be accepted as decisive. Democracy is majority rule. The only sane reason for demanding majorities of two-thirds and three-fourths of our representatives on a constitutional question is to make sure that the vote really represents the will of a majority of all the people. When the people vote directly, there is no sense in allowing a minority, however large, to thwart the will of the majority. I am confident that if the matter is made clear to all our people, five-sixths of them will vote for unification: but there is no earthly or heavenly reason why a popular election should not be decided by a simple majority.

So, if Methodism wants to "scrap the constitution", ignore the law, make of the General Conference a "forgotten man", and go in for a speech-making, wire-pulling, passion-stirring political campaign; I'm for it—on the above-named conditions. Fortunately, Methodism doesn't!

PLACES FOR GOD.

David was a man who, with all his faults, cared for God. This feeling was not simply a politic solicitude for the rights of Deity but was also a sincere craving for personal fellowship with the Great Spirit who is over all things. In the one hundred and thirty-second Psalm this pious sentiment comes to ardent expression. In the caption to the Psalm found in the King James Version (and these quaint prefaces or summaries are generally worth reading) it is said: "David in his prayer commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark." David vowed that he would not give sleep to his eyes, or slumber to his eyelids—the seeming tautology here has the force of an Hebraic reiteration for emphasis—until he had found a place for the Lord, and a habitation for the mighty God of Jacob.

Many now are the places which different men have sought to find for God. Only the atheist seeks to put Jehovah out of his own universe. All normal natures and healthy minds concede the Deity a function and a species of control in nature and in human affairs. Even primitive men have a vague impression of their Creator, or at any rate of higher spirits, and go about to erect memorial stones, or to establish shrines—high places which in too many instances become low places ethically—in recognition, more or less consciously, of God's right to be there. A place was found for the ark, even if for a long time but a movable habitation, and it was David's son, if not David, who was instrumental in founding a glorious temple, which was then the wonder of all the earth. Jehovah's name was there, and with that, in its time and way, he was much pleased. Other temples came later—and there were also the shadowed shrines of pagan Greece and Rome—but none of these meant so much to God as the magnificent shrine on Mount Zion.

Still God is seeking a place for himself on earth. Once a little Babe sought to find a tiny place in a Judean hamlet, but had to rest beside the beasts of the stall. Later that Babe, grown to man, did not have so much as a rented apartment in Jerusalem, much less in Galilee. Yet there are many particular places all over the world to-day which bear the name of Christian, and serve as the local hostelries of heaven. Some of these are ornate cathedrals, stately Gothic churches, or fine modernized institutional plants, while others are barn-like meeting-houses, crazy shacks, rude conventicles in the forests, or huts by the shores of Pacific atolls. It must be almost with amusement that God regards the awkward attempts of men to worship him, but we are sure it is with an infinite pity that he looks upon the mixture of motives which lead many to dilute genuine worship with tawdry draperies or operatic spasms. But with all this the indispensable requirement is that man should find a place for God in his own soul. The song for the modern David is, "There is room in my heart, Lord Jesus, there is room in my heart for thee!" Our Maker seeks to make a holy place out of a consecrated human will. Are we willing to take him in?—Zion's Herald.

THE PASSION FOR PEACE.

The world is creating a passion for peace. The heat of it can be felt in almost every avenue of life. Men are thinking it, dreaming it, speaking it, writing it, and demanding it. The peoples of the world are tired and sick of the most diabolical thing that preys among men. They have called it "war," and enshrined it with idealism. They have even gone so far as to justify it in the interests of peace. They have sought to turn the greatest war in the history of humanity into being understood as the great, final culminating, clashing, crashing war against war.

This is where we stand to-day. The world must have peace. It has made this decision with much deliberation. It has not deceived itself into believing that all men have become idealists, and that covetousness has forever departed from the ends of the earth. It is not blind to the fact that if a nation is wealthy and has holdings, these will be coveted. It is not blind to the fact that those who have must protect their possessions, for those who have not are prone to rise and seek to take them away.

The thing that the world is sick of is the military spirit, the military attitude, that brazen pomp which once marched among the civilians of some of the nations and with thrown-back shoulders and extended chest, and upturned chin, and curled lip, paraded as though it owned the earth, rattling the saber, caring naught for good will, or peace, or weakness, or consideration. This is the spirit of which the world is tired. It is always against peace. It ever plans war. It promotes conflicts. It builds armies, it constructs navies, it erects powder plants, and fosters deadly explosives. It turns the genius of the race toward the invention of destructive instruments of carnage. It is the great enemy of civilization, culture, and enlightenment. Against this the passion of our souls burns like fire.

In our heated discussions of the subject let us not forget that when in a passion we are not likely to interpret our thought accurately. We have a passion for peace. This must not be made to spend itself with a few flourishes of the pen or a few discussions from the forum. It must be properly interpreted, lest we do the spirit of peace harm, lest we misunderstand our own motives.—Western Christian Advocate.

IT MUST NOT PASS.

Never has there been so much agitation in this country in behalf of peace. The different denominations of Christians have issued definite and emphatic pronouncement against war. In one of the best books of the day Will Irwin, famous war correspondent, shows up the horrors and inconsistencies of the thing. Everywhere, except in the Congress of the United States, the slogan is that of a "Warless World." Mothers are praying for it, churches and religious bodies pass resolutions favoring it and yet war preparations are going on in our country nevertheless.—Baptist and Reflector.

The highest security against temptation lies in the steady development of an affirmative life. The final aim in life is to be something rather than to avoid or to escape something. . . . The best form of defense lies in spiritual attack. If we walk in the grip of some splendid, far-reaching purpose, we shall put down temptation under our feet. We are in the conqueror's path if we walk in the Spirit; we shall then walk secure from attack.—Charles R. Brown.

The Centenary greatly stirred Japanese Methodism, leading to large gifts and a "double-the-membership" campaign.

JESSE T. RIGGAN was born in 1847, in Splung community, Monroe County, Miss., where he lived his entire life of seventy-seven years. He was converted when yet a child, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and ever remained a loyal, consecrated member of the same. Not a more Christian man can be found than Brother Riggan. He was as methodical in church life, home, and community life as the best of men. When a question of any progress came up, all knew where "Uncle Jesse" stood. Yes, true blue, and loyal through and through. He walks no more among men, but the noble Christian life of unselfishness will live in his community and loved ones for generations to come. He fell asleep Aug. 14, 1924. The day following, after the funeral service from the residence, the body was tenderly laid to rest beneath a wilderness of earth's sweetest and loveliest flowers. He leaves to mourn his departure an affectionate wife, five daughters, and three sons. Children cannot more clearly see Jesus through father than could these dear sons and daughters. Yes, we miss him; but, thank God, it is possible for all to go to him. Brother Riggan has gone home to God to receive a robe of righteousness and a crown of life eternal.

His pastor,
WALTER M. HESTER.

In Vaiden, Miss., Tuesday, Aug. 5, 1924, the sweet spirit of MOLLIE FULLILOVE TILLMAN took its flight from earth to heaven. We who are left can but wonder at God's mysterious providence, for the home is no more or longer the same place, and the best, the center of all, is gone. The father is bowed in grief and the children crushed. Another link has bound them to heaven. She lived near or in Vaiden all her life, and all who knew her loved her. She was a devoted member of the Methodist church from girlhood, and loved the Master's service. She was a regular attendant at church, and was faithful to her vows. Her home abounded in hospitality, and her pastor and ministers were ever welcomed and graciously entertained by her. She was a loving wife, a devoted mother, a faithful friend—even servants testified to her kind and gentle ministry. Educated at Brookhaven, Miss., and Jackson, Tenn., two Methodist institutions of learning, she was fitted to grace her home, and to be a worker in her church. She leaves a husband; two sons, Charles, of Vaiden, and T. R. Tillman, of Rochester, New Hampshire; two daughters, Mrs. L. A. Bankston, of Tallulah, La., and Miss Addie B., of Vaiden, and one grandson, Tillman Bankston. She was ill some months, but always patient and uncomplaining. She was resigned to His will, and passed away testifying to His love and mercy. By her life and example all her family and friends look forward to a reunion around the great white throne, where sorrow and partings are no more.

A FRIEND AND OLD SCHOOLMATE.

BROTHER C. S. LAND has been a citizen of Vivian for many years. His life was such that he won to himself friends without number. He was a true believer in holiness and practiced what he preached. He was converted in early manhood, and afterwards his attention was directed to the experience of perfect love, and he earnestly sought and claimed the experience of entire sanctification. He so lived before men that none could doubt the sincerity of his heart. I have never seen a more beautiful life, a holier man than Brother Charley Land. Not only his children, but his neighbors and friends, rise up and call him blessed. His presence was an inspiration to the preacher and congregation. His "Amens" were constantly heard; he was not ashamed for the world to know where he stood. He was never heard to complain one time during his long siege of sickness. In speaking of his death he said: "I have no will in the matter, the Lord's will is my will." I doubt if his closest associates ever discovered the bounds of his patience or the depths of his love. He leaves a wife and five children, two brothers and two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. After services conducted from the Methodist church, by R. T. Ware, I. T. Reams, W. A. Freeman, Mrs. Mary Pardue and several of his lifelong friends spoke words to his memory, and his remains were laid to rest in the Vivian cemetery. May the blessings of God rest upon each bereaved one.

DAVID PARKER TUNNELL, son of Rev. Stephen Tunnell, was born Feb. 7, 1831, and passed to his heavenly reward, May 24, 1924. He was happily married to Mrs. Martha A. Woods. One daughter, Carrie—now Mrs. Robert E. Leech—came to bless their home. For a number of years Uncle Parker, as he was familiarly known, made his home with his daughter in Texarkana, Tex. Though the greater part of his life was spent in the Piney Grove community, Lowndes County, Miss., he did not complain that it seemed best for him to spend the closing days of his life in the Lone Star State. Out in the Piney Grove community his name is still like the aroma of sweet perfume. No man ever more thoroughly stamped his name upon a community than Uncle Parker did upon this community. He joined the Christian church in Columbus, Miss., in 1878, under the ministry of Rev. Knowles Shaw. Nearly all of Uncle Parker's relatives were Methodists, and the Piney Grove church always received his cordial and faithful support through all the years just as though he was the main member. His home was a haven of rest for the poor, tired pilgrim, and his heart was large enough to hold a generous feeling for every good cause that appealed for aid. His sky was clear, there was no fear. He met his Pilot face to face, and all was well.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God, in his all-wise providence, has seen fit to take from our midst MRS. C. R. THOMPSON, who died at her home in Olive Branch, Miss., and was buried in the Blocker cemetery from the Methodist church in which she was a member; and,

Whereas, in her death this society and church have lost a member who will be greatly missed, for never did a servant of the Lord work more gladly in his vineyard—nothing was too difficult if the Master needed her; and,

Whereas, God alone knows of the many acts of kindness she performed throughout her beautiful, noble life; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the world was made better and brighter because of the influence of this sweet, pure life.

2. That we extend our most sincere sympathy to the bereaved loved ones and commend them to the care of him "who doeth all things well."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy placed in the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Signed by: Mrs. R. M. Silvertooth, Mrs. W. R. Dye, Mrs. F. A. Schwam, committee.

Adopted: Mrs. W. T. Woods.

IN MEMORIAM.

Three thousand years ago when Abner, who had espoused the cause of Saul, was slain in battle, King David, though an enemy to this man, asked this question: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

When, on April 24, 1924, the angel of death knocked at the home of J. A. Allman, and the soul of the wife and mother was wafted into the presence of its Maker, a similar question was asked, not by one man alone, but by each and every individual who knew and loved this good woman, "Know ye not that a Christian mother has gone to abide in the presence of God forever?"

MRS. LISSA HAVENS ALLMAN was born at Vancleave, Miss., Sept. 29, 1873, the eldest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Havens. Her father's home was a house of prayer, and her beautiful Christian life was, after all, but a natural outgrowth of this Christian environment.

In 1903 she was united in marriage to Mr. J. A. Allman. Four children blessed this union. One of these, Jessie, preceded the mother to the Glory World. Mrs. Allman united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and remained a consistent member until her death. Her religion was the religion of service, and service cheerfully rendered. She was broad in her sympathies, tender in her affections, true in her devotion, and was always ready to do her full part, and do it well. Though she fell when her friends seemed to need her most and when able to serve those friends best, let us remember the Lord doeth all things well, and that she is now clothed in immaculate glory, awaiting the coming of those who were near and dear to her.

May the Divine Master comfort the bereaved ones and may this sorrow bring them into closer touch with him, "whom to know aright is life eternal."

FROM FRANKLINTON, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: It was truly a great pleasure to have as guest in our home two or three days last week our good friend of many years, the Rev. James H. Felts, of the North Mississippi Conference, and presiding elder of the Greenville District. He is too richly endowed with special gifts not to be used when available. Taking advantage of his visit, I used him two nights, to the delight and profit of my people. They will not soon forget his characteristic sermon-lecture, "Seeing Things," and sermon, "Puncturing the Gas Bag." This is his twelfth year on districts in his Conference. He has a wonderful vocabulary, carries his audience, eagerly listening, with him, and is a profound exponent of the Word.

CONFERENCE ON TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE AT MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

By A. C. Millar.

The Conference, at Mount Sequoyah, near Fayetteville, Ark., under the direction of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service, concluded its sessions Monday, Aug. 4, 1924.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., chairman; Dr. J. H. Light, Secretary; Mrs. W. A. Newell, Dr. Comer M. Woodward, Dr. R. L. Russell, and Mr. G. L. Morelock, of the Commission, were present.

As it was a delegated conference, the number in attendance was not large, but a fine group of earnest men and women were present. Their regular and enthusiastic attendance at every session, morning, afternoon and evening, attested their interest and gave every promise of intelligent and helpful leadership in those Conferences and churches from which they came.

The program, under the direction of Dr. Woodward, of Southern Methodist University, focalized around the Christian Home, and included such topics as, Founding, Maintenance, Perpetuity, and Disintegration of the Home, and embraced the Care of Children, the Education of Children and Young People in Sex Relations, Proper Training for Home Partnership, Care of Delinquent and Underdeveloped Children and Youth, and Protection of Children from Commercialized Toil and from Commercialized Amusement. The program further included a Study of Race Relations, particularly in our part of our country, the Enemies of the Home, with special reference to prohibition and its foes, Religion in the Home, and the Scriptural Basis and Spiritual Connotations of Temperance and Social Service.

The corps of speakers, each an expert in his special subject, included: Mrs. W. A. Newell, superintendent of Temperance and Social Service of the Woman's Council; Dr. J. W. Edson, educational associate of the American Social Hygiene Association; Bishop James Cannon, Jr.; Dr. J. S. Seneker, professor of Religious Education, School of Theology, S. M. U.; Dr. H. I. Gosline, director of Child Guidance Clinic, Dallas; Dr. George B. Mangold, director Missouri School of Social Economy, St. Louis; Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, superintendent Girls' Training School, Gainesville, Tex.; Dr. W. W. Alexander, secretary Inter-racial Commission. All of these gave wise and helpful addresses. Dr. Light, in his illuminating expositions of Scripture and application to present-day problems, rendered a very distinct service by showing that God deals not merely with the individual but with society, and that we have a genuinely social gospel to proclaim. Dr. Light's messages were of peculiar value to the preacher in helping him to orient himself in our complex civilization. The practical messages of all the speakers were fully appreciated, and the audience now realize as never before that our Commission on Temperance and Social Service is meeting a real need.

The following excerpt from a report in the Texas Christian Advocate by its gifted editor, Dr. P. E. Riley, who was present, gives a fair idea of the work of the Commission: "It is not unlikely that to the majority of people the idea back of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service is a bit hazy. The cause of temperance has so long and so prominently been before the eye of the public that it is not improbable that to most folks it would seem that the full force of the Commission is being delivered at that point. Just here the Commission is rendering a great service, and in this one particular it is doubtful if there is any one man who is doing more than Bishop James Cannon, Jr. He is chairman of the World League Against Alcohol, and is rendering distinguished service in that capacity as well as in many other ways. As one of the speakers on the program, in making reference to Bishop Cannon's large service, said: 'It is doubtful if there is a man in America—unless it be John R. Mott—who is chairman of so many executive committees of the great interdenominational movements as is Bishop Cannon.' . . . In addition to the large contribution which the Conference is making to the cause of temperance and prohibition as just indicated, the whole program of social service has to do with things which lie at the very roots of our civilization. The home, the child, its welfare, education, equipment and preparation for life—in short, all the social and economic problems which enter into our life as organized and carried on are brought into review in such a conference, and those plans and programs which have proved most helpful in the solution are brought forward. In a word, from a superficial observation it would seem that the whole purpose of social service is to preserve what is best in our civilization and to bring in a more Christian social and industrial order. The individualistic gospel has been preached heretofore almost solely—and as a matter of fact it is the essential fundamental—but we have missed a large and highly important phase of the gospel if we neglect the social gospel. It, too, deserves to be preached, and when preached and practiced results of the finest sort obtain. There should be no confusion of these two phases of the gospel. An undue emphasis on the processes and results of the social gospel is likely to create the impression that God is left out of the account. But when it is remembered that He is the starting point in the whole matter, and that following every truly great revival of religion have come social reforms, it is quite evident that the preaching of the social gospel will be attended with gracious results. At least these are the impressions coming to one who sat faithfully through the days of the session of the Conference, and it is his opinion that the holding of this Conference on Temperance and Social Service will be the beginning of an epoch in this section."

The Conference adopted the following resolutions:

"We congratulate the Methodist people of this part of the church on the splendid achievement and still larger promises involved in this bold adventure in religious inspiration and training for Christian leadership inaugurated here on this beautiful mountain summit, and expect from it an increasing contribution to the progress of the kingdom of our Lord here, and whithersoever its expanding influence may be felt, and that we greatly appreciate the courtesies extended and the comforts provided by the management during our stay.

"2. That we urge our people everywhere, by personal influence and their votes, to stand boldly for every

SUFFERED MANY YEARS WITH FEMALE TROUBLE

PE-RU-NA LIKE A GIFT FROM HEAVEN

Mrs. Katie Scheffel, R. F. D. No. 5. Lowell, Ohio

"I have been suffering for years with female trouble. Was operated on five years ago. It relieved me some but I did not regain my strength. Two years later was taken sick and bedfast several months. I treated a long while without much relief. I was discouraged, my mind affected, so nervous I could neither eat or sleep and unable to do anything.

We tried several doctors but one after another gave up my case as hopeless. Finally a good friend advised me to try Pe-ru-na. I did. It relieved me almost immediately. Your medical department said I was suffering from chronic catarrh of the system. I began taking your medicine in March, 1914, and continued until August. I took ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and three bottles of Man-a-lin and felt like a new person. Your medicine seemed like a gift from Heaven. It was like coming from darkness into light.

We have used your medicine since for coughs, colds and grip with good results. We will always keep it on hand. I weigh twenty-five pounds more than I ever did, eat and sleep well and can do a good day's work. Everybody says I look fine. Even the doctors are surprised. I cannot thank you enough and will always recommend Pe-ru--na to sufferers from catarrh."

MRS. KATIE SCHEFFEL.
R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, O.

Mrs. Scheffel is only one of many thousand women in the world, who owe their present health to Pe-ru-na. The record of this medicine is a proud one as Pe-ru-na has held the confidence of both sexes for fifty years or more.

If your trouble is due to a catarrhal inflammation in any organ or part of the body, do like Mrs. Scheffel. Try Pe-ru-na. Insist upon having the original and reliable remedy for catarrhal conditions. You won't be sorry.

Well Known Hospital Physician Says These Are Some of the Danger Signals of Exhausted Nerve Force—What To Do

One of the most terrible of all human ailments is exhausted nerve force. It weakens all the vital organs of the body and as a result all kinds of alarming symptoms may appear. Some people get nervous indigestion, pains over the eyes, in the heart, and across the small of the back; in others the first symptoms are mental instead of physical—sleeplessness, worry over trifles, or inability to concentrate on your work.

The nervous mother is upset by her children, squabbles with her husband, has frequent fits of the "blues" and bursts into tears over the smallest troubles. In such cases it is worse than useless to waste time taking stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs; the starving nerve cells must have nerve food which is supplied by the blood. Any physician will tell you that if the blood supply were cut off from any nerve in your body that the nerve would die.

If you have any of the symptoms of nerve force exhaustion, you should at once take steps to enrich your blood. This can be quickly and most effectively accomplished by the free use of Nuxated Iron, which not only increases the activity of the blood making organs, but feeds true red blood food directly to the blood itself and thereby helps to create millions of new red blood cells.

The discovery of organic iron as contained in Nuxated Iron is one of the most valuable red blood making scientific discoveries since the creation of modern medical science, and its effect in helping to create new nerve force and revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerve cells is sometimes most amazing.

Try Nuxated Iron for two weeks and if at the end of that time you have not obtained all and even greater benefits than you expect, the manufacturers will promptly refund your money.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE TEACHER TRAINING ITEMS.

Number of credits issued in 1921, 78; in 1922, 254; in 1923, 640; in 1924, 728 up to date.

There are still four more of our largest Standard Training Schools to be held in 1924.

The records show diplomas this year have been issued to the following persons:

George A. Wilson, Sam Carter, Consuelo Martinez, Minnie Moseley, David Billeiter, Corene McCormack, Nancy Jane Matthews, H. P. Wall, M. A. Walsworth, Mrs. O. L. Tucker, Rev. H. L. Johns.

Several of our workers have been awarded the blue seal this year. Rev. H. L. Johns has been awarded the gold seal recently, which gives us three Sunday school workers in Louisiana with the gold seals, Miss Cora Perkins, formerly of New Orleans, and Mrs. F. L. Alstyne, of New Orleans, being the other two.

At the end of the fourth session of the New Orleans Standard Training School, Oct. 19-25, we prophesy there will be a large number of our Sunday school workers who will be awarded the gold seal.

Rev. B. H. Andrews, the Educational Director of the Amite Standard Training School, writes: "We closed out our school on last Friday night with fifty-nine certificates awarded, and three trying for office credit. The enrollment and general morale of the school were splendid. The attendance was off about twenty-five or more. I feel that another year it will be much better attended." The above school issued six credits to preachers in this district, which is about the same number receiving credits at the Houma Standard Training School.

The Alexandria School will no doubt have the largest number of ministers enrolled. Already there are nine who are planning to attend the school. Most of the preachers attending the Alexandria School will take the course, "The Methodist Church and Its Work."

Rev. W. C. Childress, the Educational Director of the Minden Standard Training School, Oct. 5-10, writes: "The bulletins are in the press and will send you one when I get them. Have also ordered the books. We want to make it a great school." The instructors of this school are as follows:

Bible, Rev. R. H. Wynn; "The Sunday School," Prof. D. B. Rawlins; "Principles of Teaching," Mrs. J. M. Henry; "Pupil Study," Prof. J. E. Stephens, of Grenada College.

The Shreveport Standard Training School, Oct. 19-25, should have the largest class of Sunday school superintendents ever taught in Louisiana Methodism. The Board of Managers of this school have secured one of the outstanding Sunday school superintendents of Louisiana, Hon. T. W. Holloman, of Alexandria, who has been superintendent for twenty-three years. He has taught this course in two former Standard Training Schools. I hope the slogan of this school will be, "Every Superintendent in the Shreveport District in the School of 1924."

Conference Superintendent.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Where are the three schools in the Conference that are ambitious enough to work under the "A" type of the Program of Work? Let us see if we have three buildings in the Conference that are adequate for doing the highest class of religious education. Write me if you care to undertake this project. It may be easier to do a big task than it is to do a lesser one.

During the next six weeks a greater part of the time will be devoted to the checking up of those schools that are using the "B" or "C" type of program. I know of nothing we need to do that will be of more help in forming Christian character and of building the kingdom than this of enlarging and intensifying our work.

The following letter, with the omission of place and names, may be of interest to many who like the perfectly natural and sincere:

"Dear Brother Gladney: Please send me examination questions on 'Organization and Administration of the Sunday School.' What are the names of the other books that belong to this course? I wish you could visit my class now. The children have improved wonderfully. The membership has grown so I think I'll have to get me a helper. Eight or nine of them have gotten Bibles and have learned all the books of the New Testament, the Beatitudes and several more passages. Most of them joined the church during the meeting. We have begun our screens, but don't have them ready for use yet. Our superintendent doesn't give us any encouragement, but with Brother Pastor's help I think we'll get the chains. Visit us again some time. Your visit meant lots to some of us. Thank you for the questions and any other information you can give us. I have the book borrowed and thought I'd take the exam while I have it.

"YOUR FRIEND."

The first week in the month I had the pleasure of teaching in a Standard Training School held at the Seashore Camp Ground for the benefit of the schools on the Gulf Coast. The school was inaugurated by Rev. O. S. Lewis, pastor at Biloxi, and Miss Laura White, one of the noble women of the Biloxi church. Brother John Chambers, Conference Superintendent of Sunday Schools of the Mississippi Conference, did the work of two men to make things go. Here is one man with a burning zeal for the coming of the Kingdom of God. This coast section is the beauty spot of the State. It is largely controlled by the Roman Catholics. The Baptists are erecting a large and modern building as a nucleus for their growing work. When one looks around and sees what other churches are doing and what the devil has already done, he cannot help but wonder what has become of the wise and heroic leadership of Methodism. The opportunity that challenges our church to-day will soon slip beyond our reach and we shall have to retire from the most beautiful section of our State. Sound religious education may not be the only thing that is needed to win and hold this coast country for our church, but I am sure we need to do vastly more of this kind of evangelizing than is being done at present. John Chambers and his co-workers have planted the seed that will surely bring forth an abundant harvest. But good men, true men, men of God, why don't you help these fellows train your leaders so they can be used of God more effectively in establishing the kingdom more fully on the Gulf Coast?

In Japan, at the beginnig of the Centenary period, there were seven missionaries; to-day there are fifteen.

REVIEW AND EXPOSITOR.

ADVENTURES IN EVANGELISM

By EDMUND THICKSTUN

Since Harold Begbie's "Twice-Born Men," no volume of stories of the power of the Gospel in the lives of men has appeared of such absorbing interest as this. There are some stories in the book that ought to be added to the repertoire of all those who strive to the saving power of Christ. Evangelists, evangelistic pastors, and all personal workers will welcome this contribution to the subject which lies so close to the heart of evangelical Christianity and will read it through at one sitting, so absorbing is the interest and so delightful the style.—Review and Expositor.

FROM THE MENDENHALL AND D'LO CHARGE.

This charge is having a good year, and will make a creditable showing at Conference. All services of the churches are well attended. The two Sunday schools, under the efficient leadership of Prof. M. Ball and C. D. King, are doing good work. One of the outstanding features of the charge is the prayer meeting. In addition to the two mid-week prayer meetings, we have five prayer league meetings each Sunday afternoon, which have been in operation for over two years with unabated interest. At Mendenhall, Brother H. O. Middleton has charge of the men and Sister Middleton the women. The average attendance of men is about thirty-five; the women not quite so many. At D'Lo, Brother C. D. King has charge, with an average of over one hundred in attendance; the women about half as many. The boys are in charge of C. Thompson, with an attendance of about eighteen. These leagues let nothing interfere with the prayer service, but go out at other times and hold services in the towns and country places. These leagues are undenominational, but loyal to the church.

Two revival services have been held on the charge this year. The meeting at D'Lo was held in July, and, at the request of the church, was conducted by the pastor. Sixteen united with the church—two by letter and fourteen by vows. The church rallied to aid the pastor, and was much blessed by so doing.

We have just closed a ten days' meeting at Mendenhall. Rev. Earl B. Moll and Rev. W. H. Bering, as singer, conducted the services. Brother Moll preached the old-time doctrine of repentance and faith with Holy Spirit power. And as a result, the altar of the church was crowded from time to time with people seeking to get right with God. Many persons in the churches of the town knew the joy of salvation for the first time, while others who had wandered away returned. Nineteen united with the church—one by letter and eighteen by vows.

The pastor will commence a meeting in the country, Sept. 7, after which he will give his time to the closing up of the year's work and prepare for Conference.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

New Orleans Public Service,
INCORPORATED

FROM HORN LAKE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I had planned to report the meetings on my charge, but ere I got it off, we were overtaken by fire, and lost everything, and have been so upset since that time that I have neglected to write.

The Horn Lake parsonage burned the 5th inst., about two o'clock in the morning. My baby girl, 11 years of age, and myself were at home alone, and the house was practically ready to fall when we awoke, and made our narrow escape.

Now the meetings: I was assisted at Horn Lake by Rev. A. C. McCorkle. He did some splendid preaching, and was loved by everybody. Brother E. M. Shaw was with me at Endora, and his preaching was greatly appreciated. Brother C. L. Rogers helped me at Hines' Chapel, and endeared himself to the people with his splendid expositions of the word of God. Last, Brother E. Nash Broyles was with me at Poplar Corner, and kept the congregation charmed for almost two weeks. The results were that we had 24 accessions to the church, and the church is in much better shape than when we began.

I am apprehensive that the loss by fire will make the financial report on assessments shy, but we will do our best. H. N. McKibben, P. C.

SOME SUPERLATIVES OF PEARL RIVER AVENUE REVIVAL.

1. The largest crowds two Sunday nights that any one remembers ever to have seen at the church.
2. The largest day crowds came regularly that have been noticed in the history of the church.
3. The largest financial contribution of any meeting ever held in the church.
4. Three of the largest contributors were converts of the meeting—joining the church on profession of faith.
5. The largest number of accessions to the church during any revival in the history of the present pastorate.
6. The clearest and most ringing testimonies I ever heard all the way through the series of testimony meetings.
7. The happiest and most hilarious crowd during the collection the last Sunday morning of the meeting the writer ever saw.
8. The heartiest and most Christ-like co-operation on the part of the East McComb Baptist Church this pastor ever saw, both by pastor and people.
9. The happiest and most earnest crowd of men gathered in the after-meetings each night for testimony, suggestion, and prayer I ever saw for the meetings to continue two weeks.
10. The largest attendance at Sunday school the last day of the revival in the history of the church.
11. The best attended prayer meetings with the ladies, young people, and children, prior to each evening service, of any meeting I have ever been in.
12. The best behavior, as a whole, of any meeting ever held in the church—thanks to those who do nothing else but behave, and for Officer J. P. Clark, who was constantly and faithfully on the job.
13. The largest average attendance upon all the services that any one remembers, and this attendance with a meeting at Summit and Pisgah the first week, and the tent meeting in South McComb beginning a week before ours started and running until ours closed. But the Pearl River Avenue meeting date had been changed twice because of other meetings in town, and the last date was set two months before any of the above mentioned meetings were.
14. At this writing, as I think of the meeting and what God did for us and what he is going to continue to do, surely, this is the happiest pastor in town. The conversions were so bright! Men's faces shone with a heavenly luster as they told about their conversion. Others gave glowing testimonies of receiving the baptism with the Holy Spirit. Many were marvelously revived as the refreshing showers came from the presence of the Lord. I covet everybody's prayers.

In holy love,

J. A. WELLS.

FROM HAZLEHURST, MISS.

My Dear Dr. Carley: My good people gave me a vacation, and gave me the privilege of selecting the time to take it. August, I spent holding meetings with the pastors of Homewood, Wesson, at Beauregard, and Matthew's Chapel, on the Bayou Pierre charge.

I found many royal-hearted people in the bounds of the Homewood charge, and with them and their wide-awake pastor and his most accomplished wife, I spent two weeks of service that I have some reason to believe contributed to the good of the kingdom. Brother Cooper stands in high favor with his people, and has found a warm place in their hearts, and is rendering a great service for the kingdom. The friends I made there will remain as an asset of real riches in the years to come.

Purcell stands at the top with his royal-hearted flock, and the attendance at Beauregard gave evidence that he has his hands on the situation. They brag of having a preacher second to none, and, aided by his most accomplished wife, the work at Wesson is in as fine a condition as could be with material conditions a little low.

A week with the Matthews Chapel folks gave me a good chance to help Brother Beasley out, and add several fine young people to the church. I found these people a royal-hearted and delightful community to labor with.

Last Sunday was the first for the fall season. We had fine congregations at the morning and evening services, and received three fine young people into the church. We had a most helpful communion service at 11 a. m.

While the heat was somewhat oppressive, I feel as if I spent a more profitable vacation than if I had gone off to some place, rested, slept, "lazed around," and spent the means necessary to have lived for nothing.

Our community is looking forward to the time, in next month, when we are to have Brother Hogg with us. You know this town claims Brother Hogg as their boy, and this is done regardless of denomination. His mother lives with his sister in this town, and we hope to have the greatest meeting in the history of Copiah County.

Our church was thrown into a deep shadow Tuesday at the death of Sister Jennie Newton, one of God's elect. Her life at Barlow for many years was an increasing benediction of love and power to old Rehoboth church, and since she moved to this town her light has shined in every department of the church and community life. Assisted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, of Main Street, Hattiesburg; Brother Fred Sartin, pastor of the Barlow charge, and Dr. S. C. Caldwell, pastor of the Presbyterian church here, and Rev. F. A. Grimes, superannuate preacher, who lives in this town, and a lifetime friend of Sister Newton, we laid her to rest beside her husband yesterday at 11 a. m. in the Rehoboth churchyard.

BIBLES PUT IN JAIL AT RAYMOND, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: An unusual service was witnessed by local court house officials and others, Tuesday, Aug. 19, at 4 p. m. The occasion was the presentation of Bibles and Red Letter Testaments, to be placed in the various cells of the jail here, by the Junior Bible Circle.

This is an organization of the younger boys and girls of the community for Christian training and service, and is made up of all denominations.

The following program was rendered:

1. Song, "Junior Bible Circle."
2. Prayer, by Rev. H. N. Alexander.
3. Talk, by Rev. S. C. Rushing.
4. Presentation of the Bibles and Testaments on behalf of the Circle by Mr. Alexander.
5. Response, by Mr. Robert Russell, who, with Mr. Ben Broom, received the Bibles for the jail.
6. Placing the books in the cells by the young people.
7. Closing prayer by Mr. Rushing.
8. Song, "Win Them One by One," by the Circle.

This Circle was organized something like a year ago by Brother E. B. Moll and his singer, Brother Mangum.

I am snre they will be glad to know that although they have passed on, as the "ships that pass in the night," their work is living and growing.

There are about twenty-six young people in this organization, besides some "big" brothers and sisters who uphold and encourage them.

MISS MAMIE DIETRICH.

AN OPEN DOOR.

The life that is lived in steady contemplation of God is not only firm and roomy, but is characterized hy daily enlargement. Every day the Lord opens doors to the consecrated life. Words that hitherto had no meaning throw open their doors and unveil their wealth. Promises, that have hitherto been under lock and key, fling their doors ajar and invite us to partake of their treasure. We don't know just where we shall find the open door. Sometimes a lowly service confronts us. We discharge the humble task, and in the act of obedience we find we have passed through an open door into an enlarged concepton of "the inheritance of the saints in light." In the old castle at Edinburg the way to the crown jewels leads through a very humble doorway and through a very dingy and circuitous passage. The humble doorway of common duties is frequently the way to the room where God keeps his jewels. The Lord is ever giving us new opportunities, fresh chances, that day by day we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of him. It is his will that we should grow daily in finer discernment, richer affection and more hrilliant hope.—Selected.

Neutralizes Uric Acid!

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. In order to be cured of rheumatism it is necessary to neutralize this acid. RENWAR is a scientific combination of salts prepared to neutralize the uric acid in the blood. There is nothing in Renwar to injure the stomach or affect the heart. It acts solely upon uric acid, completely eliminating it from the blood and thereby relieving your rheumatism. It is harmless but effective. Positively guaranteed by money-back offer. It is a godsend to sufferers from rheumatism. Renwar also corrects constipation. Mr. J. M. Willis of the Nashville Railway and Light Company says, "I must say that Renwar far surpassed my expectations, for it gave me almost immediate relief; too much can not be spoken in behalf of 'Renwar' for rheumatism." Sold by druggists, price 50 cents, or by mail from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

HAD TO LET HOUSEWORK GO

So Ill Husband had to do the Work. Completely Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

South Bend, Indiana.—"I was all rundown, tired out, and had pains in my back and bearing-down pains. I was so sore I could hardly drag myself around and was not able to do a bit of housework. My husband worked all day in the shop, and then came home and helped me at night. The doctors said I had female weakness, and there was no help but to be operated upon, and of course that would cost us a great deal. My husband heard about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at the factory and one night he stopped at the drug store and bought me a bottle of it. I had begun to think there was no help for me, but I took three bottles of it and now I feel like myself once more. The price for three bottles wasn't so much as the doctor had charged. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough."—Mrs. DORA OSBORNE, 430 Sherman Avenue, South Bend, Ind.

Women troubled with female weakness should give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial—now. For sale by druggists everywhere.

GROUP DISTRICT MEETING FOR THE VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

For the convenience of the delegates in different parts of the district, there will be held "Group District meetings" of the Woman's Missionary Society, of the same character, at Natchez, Sept. 16, and Vicksburg, Sept. 19.

Lunch will be served at the respective churches at noon. The afternoon session will begin at 1:30, at which time different phases of the work will be discussed by the delegates from the several auxiliaries in the district.

The evening session will begin at 7:30 o'clock. Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, Conference president, and Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, cultivation secretary, from Nashville, will have charge of the services at this hour.

Each auxiliary is urged to send delegates to these meetings, as this is an opportunity that none should miss.

Send names of delegates to the Natchez meeting to Mrs. R. E. Bost, Natchez, Miss., and the Vicksburg meeting to Mrs. G. P. Fant, 2309 Washington Street, Vicksburg, Miss.

MRS. T. B. COTTRELL,
District Secretary, Woman's Missionary Society, Vicksburg District.

ACTIVITIES AT MERRYVILLE, LA.

Rev. Henry T. Young, evangelist, of De Ridder, La., ably assisted by the local pastor, Rev. S. D. Howard, is conducting a revival meeting at the Methodist church. The meeting is starting with much interest, and very good crowds.

Mrs. D. W. Smith has again taken full charge of the Young People's Missionary Society, Mrs. G. W. Norwood resigning. Their social meeting for the month of August was very charming, and about sixty young people were present. Messrs. Luther Newton and Millard Bell were hosts, and the party took place at Anacoca Beach. Barbecue refreshments were served.

The Woman's Missionary Society held their regular social meeting for August on Thursday afternoon, with a very good crowd in attendance. Mrs. V. H. Fuller gave a very interesting stewardship program. Sandwiches and iced tea were served at the church.

The regular business and program meeting was held Monday, Mrs. J. N. Dees, president, again acting. Mrs. Dees has been absent for several weeks on account of her husband's severe illness. Thirty-nine visits were reported by the visiting committee, and various other visits and supplies. Those participating in the program were Mrs. I. J. Smith, Mrs. V. H. Fuller, Mrs. J. M. Grady, Mrs. G. W. Norwood, Mrs. John Zom. Mrs. J. B. Sanders gave interesting excerpts from the Bulletin. Mrs. G. B. Smith resigned as Superintendent of Publicity, and Mrs. Mary Roberts was elected in her place. The next study taken up to be "Ming Kwong—City of the Morning Light," by Mary Ninde Gamewell, which book is proving a very delightful study of China.

FROM MYRTLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have had a splendid year on the Myrtle charge.

We had an unusually good meeting at this place. We used the district tent and had Rev. W. M. McIntosh to do the preaching. He gave us fine sermons throughout the eleven days he was with us.

About twenty new members were added to our church, seven to the Baptist church, and quite a number of family altars were pledged. Mrs. McIntosh did a great work among the young people, and Mr. Homan, the singer, added a great deal to the meeting in leading the song services.

We have held several other good meetings on the charge, and have added forty-nine members to our church during the year.

On last Friday Brother Randolph held our fourth quarterly conference. This conference was well attended, and finances are in very good condition.

Resolutions were offerd by the conference commending Brother Randolph's spendid work on the district during the past four years. Our people love him and appreciate thoroughly the fine service he has rendered to the church in the capacity of presiding elder.

The Myrlte people are a good people to live among, and we feel it has been in many ways an unusually good year, and that God has wonderfully blessed our efforts in his cause.

J. L. NABORS, P. C.

If we remembered the kindnesses that came our way as long as we remember wounds we would have less wounds.—Exchange.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CLASS.

By Arthur H. Van Voris, in the Christian Herald.

Some two years ago there came to our town Mr. Hawkins, a bright young college man, who was to hold the position of sales and efficiency engineer in a local manufacturing plant, and it wasn't long before plans were under way for the organization of a real men's class in our Sunday school.

It was Mr. Hawkins' idea to organize the class as though it were a manufacting plant, for here was something which most young men would be interested in, just at that age when many of them were starting their business careers. He drew up his working plan on large sheets of drafting paper which, when pasted together, made a chart some four feet square. On it was laid out the entire working organization.

Some of the officers, which were plotted in black show-card ink on this sheet were: President, vice president, secretary, treasurer, sales manager, advertising manager, works manager, floor superintendent, efficiency engineer, shipping clerk, file clerk, and so on down the list.

We next worked out a letter which was sent to each prospective member on the Thursday before the opening Sunday. This letter explained in brief our idea and plans for the new class, and assigned a position to each young man.

Our work that evening brought very ample rewards the following Sunday morning, for we not only had each position covered, but some fellows had brought a room-mate or a friend, and we started out with a fine working basis for the class.

A part of each session was given over to this management business and discussion, and the rest to the study of a special series of lessons which Mr. Hawkins worked out each week. I remember that we started with Bible heroes and occasionally we were able to bring in a development right along the line of our organization—for instance, it was shown how Paul was one of the greatest salesmen the world has ever known.

To insure a regular attendance, each class or organization position meant a weekly duty to perform, a report to make, or something of the sort, and at the end of each month promotions and bonuses were distributed. Records were kept on this large drafting paper each Sunday, and it was extremely worth while to see the interest those boys had in watching the perfect attendance marks grow in length along the individual attendance line on that sheet. They actually seemed jealous of them.

The novelty of the plan appealed to them, and there were times when we had at least twice as many members as we could possibly invent reasonable positions for in the organization.

Four thousand six hundred and thirty-seven dollars (Centenary) has been sent for the equipment of Colleglo Americano, Porto Aelgre, Brazil.

The Centenary has collected and paid out $18,751,830 as of Nov. 30, 1923.

MALARIA CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES.

"The present general campaign against malaria in the Southern States of the United States may be said to have started in 1917, in and about the many army camps scattered from Maryland to Texas. Naturally the work inside the camps was done by the army, and that in the environs by the United States Public Health Service, which enlisted, so far as possible, the assistance of the State and the local communities. With the close of the war this particular effort stopped. As a war measure it had been carried out regardless of expense; the cost was invariably high, and sometimes where the camps, for strategic reasons, were located in regions where the control problem was especially difficult, it was very high. The hesitation of smaller and poorer communities to undertake the work was easily understood.

"Previous reports have told of the pioneer work of the International Health Board in malaria control, beginning in 1916. By a series of demonstrations, it was able to show that malaria control need not be expensive, but that an average community can virtually rid itself of the infection at a per capita cost of from $0.45 to $1 a year, provided a careful preliminary survey is made to define the particular local problem. When adequate control measures have once been established they can be maintained from year to year at a much lower per capita cost. The results of the demonstrations were brought to the attention of State health authorities, and an ever-increasing number of projects have been undertaken by the community or county, the State, the United States Public Health Service, and the International Health Board.

"For malaria prevention, as for public health work in general, the county is a better administrative unit than the town, since county organization makes for greater stability and continuity of effort. During the past year the Board's work has been carried out on a county basis. Wherever possible the control campaign is directed by the county health officer, with the advice and assistance of the State health officer and his staff. During the year, seventeen new counties undertook anti-malaria campaigns in addition to those previously organized."—Bulletin, Rockefeller Foundation.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

MISCELLANEOUS REFLECTIONS CONCERNING UNIFICATION.

1. A good many readers of the church press are becoming somewhat fatigued with the voluminous discussions that are going on in practically all the papers, if we may judge hy expressions that have come to us from various sources. The weariness is not confined either to the pros or the antis, hut is more or less general. The feeling seems to be that there are other matters of vital importance that are not being given as much attention as they deserve. We confess we are somewhat in sympathy with this general feeling; hut we have not the slightest disposition to curtail discussion of the most momentous issue that has confronted the church in its whole history. So long as the discussion is carried on within proper limits hy those of our own constituency, we will endeavor to find space for their contrihutions. We make no engagements concerning articles originating outside our patronizing territory.

2. We deprecate what seems to he a growing tendency to inject harsh personalities into the discussion of unification. This tendency is manifesting itself, we fear, on hoth sides of the controversy. The question has come to us in such way—through action of succeeding General Conferences and of succeeding Commissions on Unification—as to make it a question of policy and not of persons. The merits and demerits of the plan itself are the things to be discussed—not the personality of those advocating or opposing it. It is as clear as anything can be that equally good men and women are to be found on hoth sides. There are extremists on both sides, too. But the mere fact that a man favors the plan is no sign that he is radical, unsafe, disloyal, any more than the fact that a man opposes it is proof that he is reactionary, narrow-minded, prejudiced. The calling of harsh names, the impugning of motives, the reflecting upon the sincerity of an opponent or the calling in question his sanity, has never been considered a high form of argument. Abuse never defeated a good measure or carried a had one.

3. A good deal has been made of the fact that the pending plan of unification does not propose a name for the united church or submit a complete constitution, and this has been used by its opponents as an argument against its adoption. This line of reasoning appears to us to have little weight. We dare say many a firm has been formally organized, many a corporation legally constituted, only after the contracting parties had gone carefully over what was to be included in the articles of agreement, the selection of the exact firm or corporation name and the drawing up of the binding articles being left to a subsequent but definitely fixed time when all these matters were to he attended to. The pending plan definitely enumerates the conditions upon which unification shall take place and provides that the Joint General Conference shall put into effect "the provisions of the plan of unification agreed upon." The Revolutionary War was fought and won and the Articles of Confederation were in effect before the Constitution of the United States was formulated and adopted, or even before the name of the new nation was agreed upon.

4. Some objection has been made to the powers of the Judicial Council as provided for in the pending plan of unification. It must he admitted that the Council is given great power—hut it would he a useless hody without it. If there is to be any authoritative review of the acts of the General Conference or of either Jurisdictional Conference or of the Connectional Boards, that review must he made by a hody fully empowered. The united church, however, is protected against tyranny of the Council hy the provision that it shall be composed of an equal number of members elected by each Jurisdictional Conference; hy the provision that it can review the acts of the General Conference or of the Jurisdictional Conferences or of the Connectional Boards only upon appeal of one-fifth of the members of those bodies or upon the appeal of a majority of the bishops; by the provision that its right to act on its own motion is made subject to such rules and regulations as may be determined by the General Conference; and by the provision that all its decisions shall be made by a majority of the total membership of the Council. If the united church is to have a "Supreme Court" at all, we cannot conceive of a better arrangement than the one proposed.

5. A few people, more or less, seem to fear that the adoption of the pending plan of unification will result in the immediate and widespread dissemination of doctrines that are contrary to our established and existing standards of doctrine. This fear is based upon the assertion that heresy is widely prevalent in the Methodist Episcopal Church—an assertion unsubstantiated by any concrete charge and conviction so far as we know—and the assertion that Jurisdiction No. 2 would become infected with the unorthodox teaching. This fear does poor justice to the fixed faith of the Methodism of the South, and it leaves out of account the First Restrictive Rule—"The General Conference shall not revoke, alter or change our Articles of Religion or establish any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine." Under the pending plan, the doctrinal integrity of Jurisdiction No. 2 will be as well protected as is the doctrinal integrity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

6. The Negro question seems to be the most disturbing element in the discussion of the pending plan of unification. Many of those who oppose the adoption of the plan do so on the express ground that it does not protect the South in its well-considered, long-established, and definitely-settled attitude on the relations of the two races. It is our firm conviction that the plan does not disturb this attitude. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a white man's church, and Jurisdiction No. 2, as provided for in the plan, will remain a white man's church. No power on earth can make it otherwise. If the plan itself provided otherwise, and if by any possible stretch of the imagination it could he conceived of as having been adopted by both churches, still Jurisdiction No. 2 would he a white man's church. Plan or no plan, there will be no social intermingling of Southern white people with Negroes, either in the church or any other sphere. The Southern white people know this, the Negroes know it, and the Methodist Episcopal Church knows it. In the united church, Jurisdiction No. 1 may adopt what attitude it pleases; it will not affect or disturb Jurisdiction No. 2. But the plan itself recognizes, and provides for the maintenance of this attitude. The method by which the Negro is excluded from Jurisdiction No. 2 is legal, specific, and unmistakable. It was so understood and so accepted by all who had to do with the making of the plan. The Negro is not mentioned by name, to be sure; but so far as we recall, the Negro is not mentioned by name in the Constitutions of Louisiana and Mississippi—but by these Constitutions he is legally, specifically, and unmistakably excluded from participating in State political activities. The two Negro bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be bishops of the united church—under the limitations of paragraph 3 of Article VI. Indeed, all the bishops of the united church are affected by that limitation, so that it is not a subterfuge, nor is it discriminatory.

The meeting of the bishops, including the two Negro bishops, to organize and to arrange for the superintendence of the work after the union shall have been consummated, does not in any sense mean a meeting upon terms of social equality. It is a business meeting pure and simple—not a social gathering. To be sure, it is composed of Christian gentlemen, who will comply with all the requirements of Christian courtesy, but it is a business meeting nevertheless. It is no unheard-of thing for white men and Negroes to meet together in a business way in the very heart of

LETTER FROM BISHOP DENNY.

My Dear Brother: Enclosed is an address delivered hy Bishop A. W. Wilson to the Joint Commission on Methodist Federation in Chattanooga, Tenn., in May, 1911. A few copies of this address were printed for the use of the members of the Commission on Unification, which met in Baltimore in Decemher, 1916; hut the address has never, to my knowledge, been published. The Chattanooga Suggestions, those to which Bishop Wilson referred, can he found in the 1914 Journal of our Gencral Conference. Those Suggestions differed widely from the pending plan of unification in many points, especially in that all overlapping of the several Regional Conferences therein provided for was excluded, and also in that there were to he no Negro hishops bearing definite relation to the work of white people.

A month after the death of Bishop Wilson, Bishop Hoss, in the meeting of the Commission in Baltimore, paid a tender tribute to Bishop Wilson. Bishop Cranston, chairman of the Methodist Episcopal Commission, then said: "I am glad that Bishop Hoss has taken the time he has occupied in speaking. It reminds me of the day in Chattanooga when Bishop Wilson, overcome by his infirmities, was ahout to leave us. As he stood leaning on his cane he gave us as patrlarchal an admonition and exhortation as I ever heard."

Our preachers and people will he glad to read this address. The words of that great and wise bishop are peculiarly appropriate and applicable at this time. I hope you will give this short letter and enclosed address a placc in your paper.

Truly yours,

COLLINS DENNY.

Address Dellvered by Bishop A. W. Wilson.

As I may not be ahle to attend all the mcctings of this Joint Commission, I will state at this time my views upon the question hcfore us. I am not much concerned ahout the mere question of authority to act on matters coming before us at this meeting. There is not much to he done here for which great authority is required. We are merely to recommend and we do (not) need large authority for that. The final action in the case must depend not upon the General Conferences only but upon the entirc church. I am looking more to that than to anything else. We do not want to do anything that will threaten the integrity of the church on any side.

I am afraid of these experlments. I have always been. I have noted the history of them. I have no personal ohjection whatever to the plan here proposed. I believe myself, as I said in Baltimore, that the best thing for all of us would he to get rid of the vexations and local worryings and to remain as we are and help each other instead of hindering one another.

I do not have difficulty in recognizing the Methodist Episcopal Church as my church. I preach for them as I preach for my own people. I advise with them whenever they come to see me. I have no hesitancy in doing the same thing for the Methodist Protestant Church. Their form of government and the way they go makes no more difference to me than the local differences in my own church. We ought to have religion enough to work with one another instead of hindering one another.

We have had a very sad history. I do not like to refer to it. In a part of it I was myself involved, but I have never changed my mind on the questions then at issue. We are not wedded to any church form in this world any more than to any national or municipal form. Change is bound to come and will continue till we reach the finality of all things. Whatever plan we adopt we shall see a great many changes within the next generation or two. I am not wedded to any particular forms. I prefer the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, not because of its splendid organization or methods of work, for they in the course of years must change, as they have changed even in the period of my episcopal service. But its history and success have justified the place it has taken in the brotherhood of churches, and whatever changes may take place in it should occur in the regular course of Providential adjustment. There is nothing entire or permanent in any physical or earthly sanctuary. The cosmic idea compels recognition of the fact that change is ever going on. If we are simple children of the faith, we will think of God as working the changes and bringing to pass the hest results out of them.

We can move in the lines proposed in this report without detriment to any church. I very gravely doubt whether it will he accepted by any of the three churches involved. It may be, but I shall not be sorry if it shall (not) be. Prejudice, as you call it, prevails to a large extent among the ordinary people. There are multitudes of people everywhere who do not know anything of the issues involved. When you talk of incorporating them with any other church, they feel very much as if they were heing surrendered hand and foot to their enemies. You cannot get that feeling out of them. I have no doubt if you should accept a plan of organic union such as is proposed here, there are five hundred thousand Methodists in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who would either go to other communions or organize an independent Methodist Church. I do not want any such results. I do not want to lose our people. I want them to remain in perfect sympathy with us in all our work, and feel that what we have done has been done for their advantage and the best interests of the Kingdom of God. If anything can produce that sort of feeling among them, it will save them from disaffection. There might possibly he a plan worked out of actual federation with four or five sections united in their general interests and hound together by a general council. I am not particular about names. We must look below the surface of things and prejudice and special church connections and separate organizations. We pride ourselves upon them. The Methodist Episcopal Church has done a momentous work. Our own church has done a work not surpassed in Protestant history. The Methodist Protestant Church deserves credit for its Methodist faith and practice. But after all, the main question lies heyond this. What do the hest interests of the Kingdom of God require? Will any of them or all of them be made better by change? If not, we had better revert to the old situation and work along as best we can with all the difficulties incident to it. If we are going to improve the condition of things by the plan proposed, then all right, and we should thank God for the opportunity given us. I am very much of a conservative and progressive at the same time. I hold to the past with all the energy of my nature. I have talked with fathers and have know some of them personally that could go back to the days of Asbury. I cherish the memory of them and their great heritage. I glory in the past of the church. It has been a powerful (wonderful) history. Methodism has and continues to have a powerful influence upon the nations of the earth. At the same time I know that we cannot reproduce the race of fathers. We cannot bring up a generation of that sort again. We may bring up men with a great grasp upon the various phases of the Kingdom of God. We may bring up men more experienced in managing the material interests of the Kingdom of God. We may bring up a class of men representing higher scholarship. But I say, and I do not say it unhappily, we cannot reproduce those old men with their solid faith in God and with their mighty determination and their great devotion to Christ and their ability to point out the way of conquest of the world. We can carry along their work and possibly upon higher lines.

Sometimes we are led to be boastful of our gains. Would to God that we were "a thousand times so many more than we are," and that our people were men and women of solid faith and true piety, and not people who have simply taken upon themselves the Methodist name and then dishonored it by an utter disregard of Christ and his gospel.

I am saying by way of personal allusion that it was a sore thing for me to break away from the old connection back in the sixties. The warmest friends I had were on your side of the line. Some of them were exceedingly bitter in their views and utterances. But I thank God the day came when the old affection was restored. I do not think a man of them was lost. They have been in my fellowship and affection in the course of a score of years. We consulted together as the evening shades came on and our hearts became tender to old-time friends, and it was delightful to enter into this old-time fellowship. It was hard for me to part from such friends. I believe that I did the only thing possible for the salvation of our Methodist Church in the times and territory with which we had to do. By our action we have saved tens of thousands of Methodists to the Kingdom of God who otherwise would have wandered away and been lost. In all that time I have never put a stone in the way of my brethren of the other church. I have not hindered them and have simply done the work I was forced to do by the conditions under which I was placed. I have done no proselyting. No member of your church has been won away by any solicitation of mine. The end of my journey is not far off. This whole thing, when it goes through, will be sung in requiem over my grave, but I shall have no part in the final result. I have no concern about that, hut I am concerned about the churches. I do not want a failure on the part of either of them. It would be hard for me to know that any part of our Methodism had failed to spread Scriptural holiness through the lands of the earth.

We need not fear to consider this report. If we come to an agreement, we can thank God for that much of unity among Methodists and can report to our General Conferences, and they will not take action in this matter without first presenting it to the church as a whole—laymen and laywomen, our Annual Conferences. The whole business will have to be submitted to the judgment and conscience of every member of the church. Whenever this proposed union shall have been effected, whatever it shall be, and the consensus of opinion throughout the entire church shall he back of it, I predict it will be the best product of ecclesiastical statesmanship and of personal and denominational religion ever known. We have had bitter quarrels and bitter antagonisms and we have come out of them all, and we sit here together before God and exchange greetings and fellowship, and nobody is hurt after all. But he cautious. Remember that you are to deal with people who do not know the situation and cannot know it. This matter must he put into such shape that all our people shall appreciate it and come to work at it heartily. I pray God may guide you in all your deliberations and cause the work of the Commission to add glory to his name and effectiveness to our beloved Methodism.

HOW HAS MISSISSIPPI ANSWERED THE HOSPITALIZATION CALL OF JESUS?

By Charles C. Jarrell, General Secretary, General Hospital Board.

Jesus told the story of how a big-hearted man hospitalized as best he could a wounded fellow-traveler. He drove the story home to the conscience of his interlocutor and said: "Go and do thou likewise."

The words of the Eternal One (the Logos) have eternal value. He says to-day (pointing to the sick and wounded), "Go and do thou likewise." That means, "Care for the sick. If you cannot heal them as I did, hospitalize them as the (Good) Samaritan did." He said the same thing to the Twelve; again, to the Seventy; again to the company who witnessed the Ascension; and in the Judgment Scene he included hospitalization among the issues of life and death:

Mississippi's Answer.

What has Mississippi said to this command of Jesus? The answer must be made in hospital beds. Jesus says, "Go and do thou likewise." Mississippi answers, "one hospital bed to every 1,222 human beings." These figures exclude hospitals for the insane and for convalescents, and were taken from Modern Hospital Year Book, 1920. God forbid I should reflect the least on the magnificent commonwealth of Mississippi or on its splendid people when I say there are forty-seven States, one district and the territorial possessions which have a higher ratio of hospital beds to population than has Mississippi. Has the Methodist church (from the heroic days of Tobias Gibson down) been failing to give the gospel of Jesus to that State? Have Methodist leaders—bishops, presiding elders, editors, pastors, all—preached something else than Jesus preached? or have they omitted in their preaching the part of Jesus' message which they did not care to present? or did they present the whole gospel and have they partially failed to get it understood?

The same Lord who said, "Go, preach, teach," said also, "Heal," with the same authority and with equal, if not greater, emphasis.

The Methodist Hospital at Hattiesburg is struggling under heavy difficulties, but submitted to the last Annual Conference a remarkable report. May I quote three short paragraphs?

"We have had a wonderfully successful year so far as patronage is concerned, and our collections have exceeded the operating expenses, thereby enabling us to spend the amount of $1,871.50 for repairs and apply $2,000 on bonded indebtedness.

"We have cared for nine hundred and twenty-two house patients during the year ending Nov. 1, 1923, which is one hundred and fifteen patients in excess of the preceding year, at an increase of expense of operating the hospital of $1,504.99; however, expense of operating the hospital for the year ending Nov. 1, 1922, was $3.94 per patient per hospital day, while the expense of operating the hospital during the year ending Nov. 1, 1923, was only $3.68 per patient per hospital day, showing a decrease in expense for operating hospital for the year ending Nov. 1, 1923, or 26 cents per patient per hospital day.

"The collections on campaign subscriptions have been very small insomuch that we fear that the Methodists within the bounds of the Mississippi Annual Conference are indifferent to a great opportunity. Therefore it has been necessary for the trustees to borrow $2,900 in order to meet the maturities on the bonded indebtedness of the hospital."

How long shall Mississippi Methodism confront Mississippi's need with such an indifferent gesture?

The General Hospital Board, under authority of the General Conference of 1922, created the Golden Cross Society as an annual enrollment for educating our people and inaugurating movements looking towards a great hospitalization advance.

The Golden Cross Society is the Methodist church expressing itself in the ministry of healing. It is auxiliary to the General Hospital Board. It is the method authorized by the General Conference for raising funds for the hospital work of the church. It can be used for erecting and maintaining hospitals, and especially for the treatment of the sick poor.

It is not a society requiring formal meetings in the local church. It is simply an annual enrollment to be carried out from Thanksgiving to Christmas, though members may enroll at any time. It is designed to confront each man, woman, and child in the church, together with the friends and adherents of the church, annually, with the opportunity and the obligation to enroll in this movement for the care of the sick in hospitals under the direction of our church. Coming annually, it is a cash enrollment and the Golden Cross button is given to each member on the payment of the amount named for the grade of membership taken. These grades of membership are as follows:

Juniors	$ .25
Student	.50
Adult	1.00
Active	5.00
Supporting	10.00
Sustaining	25.00
Service	50.00
Comrade of the Golden Cross	100.00
Life member	500.00
Life patron	1,000.00
Knight of the Golden Cross	10,000.00

Very few churches in either of the Mississippi Conferences last year even so much as presented this cause. The three weeks following Thanksgiving are devoted to the ministry of healing, and proper programs should be presented in every church in the State and an opportunity given to the people to enroll in the Golden Cross.

The Golden Cross Society is simply the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the uniform of a trained nurse, down on her knees following the example of her Lord, washing the feet of the sick and the afflicted.

In the golden heart of Methodism in a golden hour of opportunity, the vision of the Golden Cross Society has come as a divine inspiration. Jesus said, "Go, and do thou likewise."

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. W. L. DUREN.

Dear Dr. Carley: Leaving Alexandria on the "Vienna," one of the fastest and most luxurious boats of the Mediterranean, we were soon landed at Brindisi. My first objective was Naples. Here I had just time enough to visit the ruins of Pompeii and take a look into the crater of old Vesuvius. The ruins of Pompeii lack the grandeur and magnificence of the other great ruins, but they show more of the real life of the people. In the hour of destruction there was not time to set the house in order, so the spade of the archaeologist simply exposes them to the gaze of the world as they were on that fateful day. How little did they dream that the world would read their infamies in cold realities which could admit of no denial! The story of ancient Pompeii is soon told. It is self-indulgence, sensuousness, and shamelessness of such a variety that it is small wonder that a righteous God should have abandoned it to the fury of the volcano.

Vesuvius was in quite a state of eruption while I was there. As we approached the crater we could hear a sound as of muffled canonading. It was the deep explosions that sent bits of rock hurtling into the air, while a stream of red-hot lava poured over the rim of the inner cone. It was a sight never to be forgotten, but one utterly impossible of description. I doubt not that one morning in the future we may read that the life of Naples has met the fate of ancient Pompeii.

My next stop was at Rome, the city beside the Tiber. My mind went back to the days when I wrestled with that civilization in the Latin classics. There were the ruins of the Forum and the Coliseum, which spoke eloquently of the mournful and melancholy drama of the Caesars. There was the old Appian Way, which seemed still to echo the hoofbeat in the procession of Rome's conquering heroes who brought with them the trophies of their victorious conquests.

Alas, the Rome of those days sleeps in the dust with the broken monuments of her greatness. I visited St. Peters, which no speech can describe to those who have not seen it for themselves. The Vatican museum is a wonderful collection of the art treasures of all lands. The story of the tragic sufferings of the early church is mournfully depicted on the gloomy corridors of the Catacombs. And overlooking the arch of Septimus Severus is the Mamartine prison, where St. Paul is said to have been incarcerated, and from which he sent forth a number of his epistles. It is a sort of cave in the rock, and might well have served such a purpose, but somehow I failed to feel the spell of his great apostolic spirit there. But for all the tragic history and the change which has been wrought, Rome is still a wonderful city.

After nearly two days in Rome, I journeyed on to the north, stopping for dinner in Florence. It was hard not to tarry in Florence, for we felt the charm of Savonarola. But our schedule was otherwise. Passing through Milan in the early morning, we looked out at the great cathedral in the distance. We could see only the fretted and many-pointed spire which was crowned with the gilded statue of the Virgin; but it was a splendid sight. All day long we were passing through the Swiss Alps. Much of the time we were in great tunnels, and out of these midnight dungeons we would dash under the dazzling brilliance of a snow-clad peak. It was truly a glorious day that brought us past the picturesque Italian lakes and through Switzerland's eternal fortresses into beautiful and sunny France.

Two days in Paris are just enough to make one feel profoundly sorry for the short-sightedness that gave it such sparing consideration in planning a trip. I visited the Louvre, Versailles, the Pantheon, the Pantheon de la Guerre, Notre Dame, St. Chapelle, Tomb of Napoleon, Trocadero, and many other places. The further I went, the greater was my regret to leave Paris. To my mind, it is the most beautiful and the most consistently built city in the world, and despite its sins it holds a charm which I have not found anywhere else.

London was the last stop before my face should be turned homeward. It is in many respects like New York, and in some respects it is to me the least likeable of all the places I visited. To begin with, I had a hotel that might set one against any place that would offer its hospitality. Then I reached there on a rainy Sunday, which was followed by a "bank holiday," and when you add to all this the crests and cockney of the English, you certainly have a nut to crack. But I had a profitable time regardless of the handicaps. The British Museum, with the Alexandrine Codex and the Rosetta Stone among the hundreds of thousands of exhibits, the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and City Roads Chapel, with any number of lesser shrines, could not fail to grip the earnest heart. And the British are a great people, whether their ways fit us or not.

The holiday is over and my face is set toward home in that Empire of the West whose flag will ever be dearer and more beautiful for the experiences and contrasts of the lands beyond the old Atlantic.

W. L. DUREN.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Those of you who expect to come in your cars, please write me a card. It will help in placing you for entertainment.

Our trains reach Canton from Jackson, one in the forenoon, two in the afternoon, others late at night. We will meet all day trains.

Will the presiding elders please send me the names of any who will be here for admission or ordination that are not serving work? I have the names of the delegates, taken from the Advocate after district conferences were held.

We are looking forward to your coming with pleasure. Let us pray for a great Conference.

Canton, Miss. W. M. SULLIVAN, P. C.

OPENING OF THE METHODIST HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS.

Dear Dr. Carley: It was our pleasure on Tuesday, Sept. 16, to be one of more than 20,000 visitors who inspected our magnificent new Methodist Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., which was that day formally opened to the public. Right royally, and with just pride, did Dr. Henry Hedden, the efficient superintendent, and Brother L. H. Estes, the alert secretary, aided by the entire official staff, keep "open house" to the admiring throngs from 9 o'clock in the morning until near midnight.

Congratulations, happiness and thanksgiving were the order of the day. Especially happy were those of us who have been interested in the hospital movement from the heginning, and closely associated with the enterprise as Conference representatives and members of the Board of Commissioners. Who can douht that it was a glad hour to that elect layman and Christian philanthropist, John H. Sherard, in whose heart the hospital idea was born? Or to that princely pair of Memphis Methodists, John R. Pepper and L. M. Stratton, whose time and business acumen have been unstintedly devoted to the solution of the financial burdens and difficulties incident to huilding the hospital.

To many of us it seemed, as we vlewed it for the first time in all its architectural perfection and scientific completeness, a heautiful and happy dream come true. And yet we knew, as has since been so truly said in an edltorial in the Commercial Appeal, that: "The opening of the new Methodist Hospital in Memphis is not the realization of a dream. It is the culmination and reward of intelligent, systematic, religious effort that began a quarter of a century ago."

All this we saw materialized, realized and memorialized in the new Methodist Hospital: The answer to numberless prayers; the splendid trlumph of faith and perseverance over countless ohstacles and difficulties; the consummation of long-cherished hopes, and the ample reward of unselfish lahor and sacrifice on the part of a group of determined, consecrated laymen and ministers who have given themselves in unwavering devotion and service to the hospital ldea, during the long years. In it we saw epitomized, also, the enthusiasm, the vision, the sacrificlal service of Christian womanhood. For it is an historical fact that the first $1,000 raised for the great institution was subscribed hy and collected from the Woman's Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference, under the leadership of the beloved Mrs. Clemmle Short, of Como, Miss.

When the Home and Foreign Misslonary Societies were united under the Woman's Missionary Council in 1911, this fund passed into the hands of the North Mississippi Conference Missionary Society, to be applied to the establlshment of a memorial room whenever the building enterprise was completed. That happy day has arrived, and the Methodist Missionary workers of North Mississippi are the proud possessors of a room of their very own; ln whlch there shall go on, through all the years to come, the hlessed ministry of healing inaugurated hy the Divine Physician of the souls and bodies of men.

Woman's love and generosity were evidenced also hy the donation of the initial supply of llnen for the hospital, made by the Woman's Conference Societies of the Memphis, the Arkansas, and the North Mississippi Conferences.

The hospital secretary, Rev. L. H. Estes, lnforms me that something more than $4,500 of the total $5,000 assessment for linen has heen sent in as cash and supplies of linen. The Memphis Conference Society is in the lead in these contributions, with North Mississippi crowding the Arkansas Conference Soclety for second honors.

In this contest of "good works" North Mississippi's banner "must not suffer loss." Hence I am closing with an earnest appeal to every auxiliary within our Conference hounds that falled, for any reason, to ohserve "Linen Shower Day" on June 18, to raise their quota immediately. Do not wait to arrange a helated shower. Collect the cash and send it direct to Secretary L. H. Estes, Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. Report the amount contributed to our Conference Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. Susie Thomas, Starkville, Miss., to he credited to your auxiliary.

Are there not some of the stronger societies that will increase their quota, even yet? Our own small group here doubled its assessment.

I'm praying that the women of North Mississippi Methodism may be second to no group in generosity and loyal devotion to our hospital interests.

Let every Methodist man and woman of our Conference, take occasion when in Memphis to visit the hospital. In every case the impression will be that of the Queen of Sheba on the occasion of her visit to the court of King Solomon: "The half had not heen told me."

Yours cordially and joyfully,

MRS. J. M. WYATT,

Representative of the North Mississippi Conference Missionary Society on the Hospital Board.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE OPENING.

When the registrar announced one morning during the second week of the college year that three hundred and forty students had matriculated at Millsaps College this year, he remarked that this represented the largest numher that had ever matriculated at this institution in any one year. It means that about fifty more students have enrolled at Millsaps the first two weeks of this year than had enrolled the first two weeks of last session.

A number of improvements are to be seen on the campus. An arrangement has heen put through that places four new class rooms at the service of the instructors. This will he of much help in meeting the emergency caused hy the large increase in attendance at the college. Preparations are heing made for huilding the new library. This huilding will occupy a prominent place on the State Street side of the campus. When the building has heen finished and the improvements made to the adjacent part of the campus, this will be one of the most attractive portions of the college property.

As the number of young women has increased in the college, it has become more and more apparent that there must he a dean of women at Millsaps. This need has heen met, and Mrs. Wilson, who has been secured for this office, is already impressing herself upon the students hy her cultured and accommodating manner.

College Night was held Monday, Sept. 15. The college chapel was so crowded that more than a score of people had to stand in the rear of the auditorium. There was much enthusiasm and good fellowship manifested as the various features of the occasion went off.

Over fifty men are practicing on the athletic field each afternoon as the foothall season approaches. Coach Zimoski is loath to make predictions, but he does not hesitate to say that prospects for the foothall team are brighter than ever this fali.

In the columns of the Advocate mention has already been made of Dr. Walker, who takes the chair of Education at Millsaps this year. There is a new instructor ln the Rellgious Education department. Prof. J. T. Hooker, of Boston University, becomes Associate Professor of Religious Education at the college this fall. His recommendations are impressive and he has made a splendid impression since arriving at the college.

The increase of enrollment has added to the lahors of the first week, hut things are straightend out and everything is functionlng with regularity. All appearances indicate that Millsaps College is entering upon the most splendid year of her notable history.

Fifty thousand dollars Centenary money has been used to buy a splendid piece of property for Colegio Eliza Bowman, Cienfuegos.

DID MEMBERS VOTE AT ORGANIZATION?

A careful reading of pages 104-107, also page 151, of the "History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," by John B. McFerrin and others, to which Brother Payton A. Sowell refers in the Advocate of Sept. 18, indicates that the delegates from the Southern Conferences, before they left New York in 1844, addressed a public appeal to the "ministers and members" in the Southern territory and that numerous "primary meetings" and quarterly conferences passed resolutions which sustained the course of the Southern delegates and demanded a new organization for the South. The Conferences evidently sought to represent the sentiment of their constituency in their resolutions calling for the convention of 1845. These facts seem to be the basis for the assertion of Brother Sowell that the members voted.

A careful reading of the history, however, at least as far as these particular passages are concerned, fails to give evidence of anything like a formal referendum vote on the subject of the separation. What seems to have really happened is that the people in many communities, either through their quarterly conferences or through special meetings of the congregation, expressed their sentiments, which were almost unanimously in favor of carrying out the plan of separation. The application, if any, of this fact to the present situation is that any church, through its quarterly conference or general church meeting, under the inalienable right of petition, is at liberty to express its sentiment on the subject of the proposed unification, but does not suggest the existence of any legal method for a general and formal referendum.

Indeed, under our constitutional provisions, such a referendum would he entirely unfair unless it could be held in such a way as to bind the vote of the Conferences to follow the majority vote of such referendum. Otherwise, in case a majority of the membership should declare in favor of the plan, one more than one-fourth of the Conference membership could defeat the will of the majority of the church. The precedent sought in the history of 1844-46, however, is not established.

STIMULATING RELIGIOUS LIFE IN OUR METHODIST HOMES.

By Prof. C. A. Bowen.

This is one of the most pressing problems now confronting our church. We have diagnosed the situation, and now we are in earnest fashion seeking the cure. We know that no single remedy will bring the cure about. Our homes are afflicted with a disease that is as complicated as the modern life we live. We are seeking various ways of dealing with the situation.

One of these ways which our church is making use of is the observance of Children's Week at some time during the months of September or October. During Children's Week we propose to visit the homes where there are children under 12 years of age. The purpose is to get better acquainted with the parents and show them how the Sunday school needs their help in teaching religion in the home. Some time during Children's Week we want to get the parents to meet together in order that the Sunday school workers can get them to take some definite step forward in the matter of co-operating with what the church is doing for the children.

Now this is one of the very important matters facing us this fall. If we are deeply interested in getting hold of the children in our churches and getting them taught religion, we will get to work and do something to help forward the observance of Children's Week. By writing to the Conference Sunday School Superintendent you may secure directions that apply to putting on this program either in the town churches or in the circuit churches.

BISHOP McMURRY AND "THAT MINORITY REPORT."

By Rev. J. T. Leggett.

My good friend, Bishop McMurry, seems a little perturbed over the invasion of his Episcopal District by a little pamphlet entitled, "Minority Report."

In an article published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Aug. 28, 1924, he takes a fling at Bishop Denny for his unethical performance in presenting this document to the General Conference "under the guise of a 'Minority Report.'"

His angle of approach makes it difficult to determine which he objects to more, Bishop Denny's "performance" or "the minority report." If the fling is at Bishop Denny's performance in presenting that report to the General Conference, there is a way out. But if the objection is to the minority report, that document is before the church on its merits, and I do not blame my good friend for being afraid of it. Why this effort to divert the minds of people of our great church from the main issues involved in the pending question by citing the performance of one man as questionable? That a man of Bishop Denny's culture and knowledge of parliamentary usage should so far forget himself as to appear before the General Conference of the church with "a carefully prepared speech with all kinds of stuff in it," and offer it "under the semblance of a mere minority report," and that, too, in violation of commonly accepted ethical principles, is reprehensible, if true. Fortunately, the facts are against it.

Now, I hold no brief for the defense of Bishop Denny. He is amply able to take care of himself, but in justice to Bishop Denny and the church at large, I desire to say, "that minority report" is not Bishop Denny's report. It is the report of the minority of the Commission appointed "for the continuance of negotiations looking toward unification in harmony with the basic principles already agreed upon by the Joint Commission." The fact that Bishop Denny wrote the report no more detracts from its merit than if another number of the Commission had written it. Bishop Denny was the logical man to write the report, since he has been a member of the Commission from the beginning and is familiar with the entire history of negotiations between the two churches. The report as written by Bishop Denny was turned over to the other members of the minority with the frank suggestion that we deal with it according to our best judgment. He urged that if the report did not meet with our approval we revise, rewrite, or reject it as a whole and begin de novo.

After a careful reading of the report we cut out several paragraphs, and inserted two or three short paragraphs written by another member of the minority, after which it was adopted as the minority report of the Commission on Unification. That Bishop Denny appeared before the General Conference as a bishop of the church "with a carefully prepared speech, with all kinds of stuff in it, legal lore, history and everything else," is the unkindest cut of all. Bishop Denny read the report by request, and in his own right as one of the Commissoners on Unification.

If the minority Commissioners had a right to report at all, that right carried with it the further right of stating our objections to the plan of unification adopted by the majority of the Commission, and of giving our reasons for our objections. The length of the report is not material. The fact that the report covered forty-two pages instead of one, cannot logically be used to discredit the facts which it contains. To be sure, it was killed in action by a majority vote of the General Conference, but, like many other vital issues involved in this unification movement, it would not stay dead. It has resurrection power in it. It stands before the church to-day vocal with warning of danger ahead of us.

I would suggest that Bishop McMurry keep a copy of it on his desk for reference, so that when his mind gets confused on the main issues involved in this unification question, it may serve to clarify it. If this minority report, freighted with facts which the church can ill afford to brush aside, should unduly tax the mind of my good friend and he should "feel the need of diversion in the way of something fresh and up-to-date," I suggest that be procure a copy of "Why I am a Christian," by Dr. Frank Crane.

Hattiesburg, Miss.

TO THE PASTORS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST CHURCH, CORINTH DISTRICT.

When the Annual Conference meets at West Point, Oct. 29, our reports will be made showing the final results of the year's work. The time is short—only about six weeks—but much can be done in that short time if we will it so.

We have had some very fine revival meetings in the district this year. It looks now as if we will have the greatest ingathering that we have had in several years. Let us push the revival campaign until every church has had a revival. It is not too late yet for a revival meeting in your church if you have not had it. We have two district tents.

The Epworth League work has gone forward steadily for the past few years. Four years ago there were only four Epworth Leagues in the entire district. There are now twenty. We ought to have more.

The Sunday school work is encouraging for the most part. Not only do we have a greater number of them, but the quality of the work done is very much improved since we have had the five Standard District Training Schools, with the more than four hundred credits given.

There have been ten new churches and eight new parsonages built during the quadrennium, in the Corinth District. Others are being planned. Let the building go on.

All the charges in the district have accepted the quota for the Snperannuate Endowment fund. Quite a number have paid the first year's quota. Let every church pay at least its quota before the Conference year closes. Comparatively, the Corinth District has made a good showing on the Centenary and Christian Education, but many pledges remain yet unpaid. Let us see that we meet our obligations here. The need is great. The good women have wrought well. The number of Woman's Missionary Societies has grown from eighteen four years ago to thirty-five, and the amount of their contributions has been doubled. If our men were as active as our women, something worth while would take place in the Corinth District.

What about the benevoiences or Conference collections?

Now is the time for every pastor and member to get busy. So much depends on the payment of these sacred funds. Let the pastor make a diligent canvass of every member of his charge, where the amount is not included in the budget, and collect the last dollar on these assessments. It has been done. It can be done. Let us all work as well as pray for level columns at West Point, Oct. 29.

At the close of the third quarter, the amount paid on salaries was in advance of last year. Some churches have paid in full to date. Others are behind with the salary. Let every member pay as the Lord has prospered and blessed him. Let the stewards see that the pastor's salary is paid in full. Let us make it 100 per cent. "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

These four years have been pleasant ones to us. The prachers and people have been uniformly kind. We are thankful for their hearty cooperation. May the Lord's blessings be upon you. "We are laborers together with God."

Your friend and brother,

JOSEPH B. RANDOLPH, P. E.

AN OPPORTUNITY TO HELP.

Dear Advocate: On Thursday night, Sept. 11, Brother H. N. McKibben, our pastor at Horn Lake, Miss., lost everything by fire. Among other things he lost a library that cost him $2,400. He and family saved almost nothing. He and his little 12-year-old daughter came near being burned in the fire.

The good people of Horn Lake charge have been good and thoughtful of Brother McKibben and family. They had $1,000 insurance on the parsonage, but $400 of this amount goes to the Church Extension Board. The trustees of the charge are planning to buy another home for the pastor and get everything in shape for the comfort of the pastor and family right away.

In view of the fact that Brother McKibben lost practically everything, I think it would be a good and brotherly thing to do for our preachers to send him a donation of a few dollars to help him in carrying the added burden that is his as a result of the loss. Brother Luter, of Hernando, mentioned Brother McKibben's loss to a few of our Methodists of Hernando, and sent a donation of $10 to Brother McKibben. This was greatly appreciated both by them and by me. If any one feels inclined to help in this good cause, it will be greatly appreciated.

J. TILLERY LEWIS, P. E.

TO THE PASTORS, CENTENARY TREASURERS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Dear Co-workers: There was recently mailed from this office to all the pastors and Centenary treasurers a letter calling attention to the necessity for collecting THREE MILLION DOLLARS BY JANUARY 1, 1925, in order that our missionaries may be kept in the field.

The Mississippi Conference was given a minimum quota of $20,000, and I wrote to each pastor and treasurer suggesting a minimum amount to be collected on their unpaid pledges, and if this is done, we will easily have our $20,000. It needs to be done, and can be done; so, therefore, let's do it.

If every treasurer will make a personal appeal to those in arrears with an explanation of the need, I feel sure we can collect more than the $20,000. I have had some very encouraging reports and letters and some of the churches have already paid the amount requested. This kind of co-operation will cause us to succeed.

A few of the pastors have not replied to our letter asking for the names of those on their charge who really know God, and who really pray. I know you are busy, but please give us these names and addresses—not many.

Thanking you, we are,

Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Field Secretary-Treasurer.

"ANOTHER CHURCH PAID OUT."

To-day's mail brought a check from Mr. R. Leon Bass, Centenary Treasurer, for the final payment of the Centenary pledge of Midnight Church. I am sure it will be quite a pleasure to the pastor, in reporting other finances, to report the Centenary pledge at Midnight also paid in full.

There are a number of other churches that, if they would make just a little effort, could also pay out in full. WHO WILL BE NEXT?

W. D. HAWKINS,
Field Secretary-Treasurer.

O LITTLE MOTHER OF MINE!

Sometimes in the hush of the evening hour,
When the shadows creep up in the west,
I think of the songs that you used to sing,
And the boy that you lulled to rest—
The wee little boy with the tousled head
With its hair so silky and fine—
And I wonder if sometimes you long for that boy,
O little mother of mine!

And now he has come to man's estate,
Grown stalwart in body and strong,
And you'd hardly know that he was the lad
Whom you lulled with your slumber song.
The years have altered the form and the face,
The years have altered the form and the face,
But his heart is unchanged by time,
And still he is only the boy of old,
O little mother of mine! —Selected.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

AND WHO ARE THESE WITH SAD FACES AND EMPTY HANDS?

The meeting of an Annual Conference is mostly an occasion when preachers rejoice together over victories won. It is true the brethren stand around in groups discussing the hardships of the year, but such conversations generally end with glowing reports of things accomplished notwithstanding the difficulties. No preacher ever expects to win without a fight. He would rather have a victory after a struggle, for then it is sweeter and more satisfying. Nothing so thrills a visitor at an Annual Conference as does the reports of the preachers on how they "hit the line" in order to make a "touch-down."

But at every Annual Conference there is a small group of preachers who appear unhappy and uncomfortable. Their faces are sad because their hands are empty. They tell you about the "Situation" in charges where they worked, and say: "No man on earth could have succeeded under such conditions." Undoubtedly there are "situations" that are exceedingly difficult to manage, and we must not be too critical of men who have had to face them. However, I still believe that a way can be found to do what ought to be done.

THIS MOVEMENT CALLS FOR REAL FIGHTERS.

The Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment was projected at a time when the church was somewhat weary from hard campaigning for other causes. It was the last on the list of three great financial movements. It called for contributions from people who had made pledges for other causes which they had not been able to pay. It started when the economic conditions were not promising. Being a movement that the church has persistently postponed throughout her history, it was not an easy matter to make the people understand that the time for launching it had actually arrived. In the face of all this I am sure my readers will agree that its success is wholly dependent upon red-blooded fighting men who are determined to see it through.

The passion of my soul burns with enthusiasm toward adequate Superannuate Endowment. The thing is with me day and night. I believe there are enough preachers and lay members in our great church who feel as I do on this subject to guarantee its success. Therefore, my brothers, let us press closer together, set our jaws tighter, roll our sleeves further up, and with the lock-step of Trojan soldiers go forward to win!

THE HAPPIEST HOURS OF THE WORKING DAYS.

At the offices of the Board of Finance we have six mail deliveries every week day. Each day is crowded with much important work which demands close attention. But oh what jolly good fun it is when the postman comes around! Just to sit at the desk and open the envelopes and watch the checks come out! Every one has its own story to tell, and it is always fit to engage the attention of a king. How proud we are of the senders of these checks. How we honor the charges that have done their bit. So it is that these hours of mail delivery carry us with loving appreciation to every section of the church to express our gratitude to those who have proved themselves faithful to the task. Acknowledgment is now given of charges that have paid one-fifth or more of their total quotas, as follows:

Hughes Chapel, Kentucky, Covington, Rev. J. M. Baker, pastor; total assumed quota, $935; amount remitted, $265.

London, Kentucky, Danville, Rev. W. R. Johnson, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,105; amount remitted, $427.

Ironton, Patterson, St. Louis, Farmington, Rev. G. Kelly Robinson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,017; amount remitted, $203.40.

Warrensburg, Southwest Missouri, Sedalia, Rev. T. H. Hichman, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,625; amount remitted, $325.

Fulford and Pompano, Florida, Miami, Rev. E. H. Crowson, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,500; amount remitted, $314.88.

Magnolia, Little Rock, Camden, Rev. W. T. Wilkinson, pastor; total assumed quota, $3,000; amount remitted, $1,000.

Gallatin, Missouri, Chillicothe, Rev. W. J. Wilcoxon, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,665; amount remitted, $396.

Florida, Missouri, Hannibal, Rev. E. Y. Ginn, pastor; total assumed quota, $900; amount remitted, $214.75.

Lumberton Circuit, North Carolina, Rockingham, Rev. N. L. Seabolt, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,050; amount remitted, $210.

De Soto, St. Louis, Farmington, Rev. W. J. Velvick, pastor; total assumed quota, $1,750; amount remitted, $350.

Trinity (Charleston), South Carolina, Charleston, Rev. F. A. Buddin, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,320; amount remitted, $804.25.

Lexington, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. W. T. McClure, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,775; amount remitted, $791.03.

Slater, Southwest Missouri, Marshall, Rev. A. R. Faris, pastor; total assumed quota, $2,220; amount remitted, $444.

DON'T BLAME ME FOR YOUR MISTAKES.

I am very human in that I sometimes blunder. When I do, you should jerk me up by the short hairs. But if you blunder don't pull my hair. For instance, many preachers get after me for not publishing their charges when they pay one-fifth or more of their first year quotas. In practically every case of this kind we examine the Advocates and find that we made good but the preacher failed to read his Advocate that week!

Also, I have been telling you over and over to send all payments on quotas direct to the Board of Finance, Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., and to use the book of remittance forms in making remittances. But some continue to remit without the form, and they often send the money to some other source. All this causes confusion and lost motion.

Some of you who collect money on your quotas this year won't find it credited in the Minutes of your Annual Conference. Then you will go after me with sharp criticism, but you will be to blame for the failure because you did not get the money to us in time to be included in our report on the Conference year's work.

Colegio Palmore, Chihuahua, has received $13,297, Centenary, for running expenses and equipment.

Instituto Macdonell, Durango, has received for current expenses and equipment $9,582.

The Home Circle

A BOY THAT WOULD NOT GIVE UP.

About forty years ago I stepped into a bookstore in Cincinnati in search of some books that I wanted. While there a little ragged boy, not over 12 years of age, came in and inquired for a geography.

"Plenty of them," was the salesman's reply.

"How much do they cost?"

"One dollar, my lad."

He turned to go out, and even opened the door, but closed it again and came back.

"I've got sixty cents," said he—"could you let me have a geography and wait a little while for the rest of the money?"

How eager his little bright eyes looked for an answer, and how he seemed to shrink within his ragged clothes when the man, not very kindly, told him he could not. The disappointed little fellow looked up at me with a very poor attempt to smile and left the store. I followed him and overtook him.

"And what now?" I asked.

"Try another place, sir."

"Shall I go, too, and see how you succeed?"

"Oh, yes, if you like," said he in surprise.

Four different stores I entered with him, and each time he was refused.

"Will you try again?" I asked.

"Yes, sir, I shall try them all, or I should not know whether I could get one."

We entered the fifth store, and the little fellow walked up manfully and told the gentleman just what he wanted and how much he had.

"You want the book very much?" asked the proprietor.

"Yes, very much."

"Why do you want it so very much?"

"To study, sir. I can't go to school and I study when I can at home. All the boys have got one, and they will get ahead of me. Besides, my father was a sailor, and I want to learn of the places where he used to go."

"Well, my lad, I will tell you what I will do. I will let you have a new geography, and you can pay me the remainder of the money when you can, or I will let you have one that is not quite new for fifty cents."

"Are the leaves all in it, and just like the others, only not new?"

"Yes, just like the new one."

"It will do just as well, then, and I will have eleven cents left toward buying some other books. I am glad they did not let me have one at the other places."

Years later I went to Europe on one of the finest vessels that ever ploughed the waters of the Atlantic. We had beautiful weather until very near the end of the voyage; then came a terrific storm that would have sunk all on board had it not been for the captain. Every spar was laid low, the rudder was useless, and a great leak had shown itself, threatening to fill the ship. The crew were all strong, willing men, and the mates all practical seamen of the first class; but after pumping for one whole night and the water still gaining upon them, they gave up in despair, and prepared to take to the boats, though they might have known no small boat could live in such a sea.

"I will land you safe at the dock in Liverpool," said he, "if you will be men."

He did land us safely, but the vessel sank, moored to the dock. The captain stood on the deck of the sinking vessel, receiving thanks and blessings of the passengers as they passed down the gangplank. As I passed he grasped my hand and said:

"Judge P—, do you recognize me?"

I told him that I was not aware that I had ever seen him until I stepped aboard his vessel.

"Do you remember that boy in Cincinnati?"

"Very well, sir. William Haverly."

"I am he, he said. "God bless you."

And God bless noble Captain Haverly.—Young Folk's Weekly.

CAMP WINNITOGUS.

By Thelma Roberts.

Ethel Taylor and Marjourie Ford climbed on the train, chose a seat and arranged their baggage. There were bundles of blankets and all shapes and forms of hand-bags, for the girls were on their way to Camp Winnitogus.

Before the whistle blew every member of the Red Star Club was seated and every one was talking gaily.

After getting off the train at Gainesburg, they climbed into trucks and were off to the camp! Once in sight, they began to lay plans and select partners to play tennis.

All afternoon the jolly crowd played croquet, tennis and basketball, and swam. Toward sunset, every one set out to gather dry sticks and limbs for a campfire.

After supper in the "mess hall," they gathered around the fire to toast marshamllows and talk.

Early in the morning every one was about assigned work, and Ethel and Marjourie stopped under a live oak long enough to talk a while.

"Do you know," said Ethel, "the Dansaw Club from the camp across the way wants to enter a swimming contest with us?"

"Yes, and I'm dying to be in it," Marjourie answered, "but I'm afraid I can't swim far enough. I just give out."

"Well, so long—we'd better be about our work, but we'll see that you are in the meet."

Every one was practicing hard, and every afternoon Marjourie and Ethel went to the swimming pool to race. Ethel usually came in first, although Marjourie followed close behind.

After lunch on Wednesday evening Miss Reams, one of the hostesses, called out the contestants' names.

Marjourie glanced drearily at Ethel, for her name was not called out.

"You'll be in the tennis tournament anyway," comforted Ethel, "so keep up the camp spirit."

"I hope you'll win, Ethel, even if I can't try," said Marjourie, trying to keep back a tear.

On the day of the meet, all the girls from both camps sat around the edge of the pool in their bathing suits, ready for a plunge right after the contest, when, just as a girl from the next camp was about to win in one of the events, the girl next to Marjourie jumped in her excitement and fell in the water, which at that place was over her head.

Marjourie looked down at the white face and outstretched hand. Suddenly she found herself slipping in behind the girl and she swam furiously toward her.

The girl, in her effort to keep above the water, grabbed at Marjourie and pulled her under.

No one seemed to notice the girl until Marjourie was finally dragging her out. After bringing her back up to the bank and working with her a few minutes, she came through all right.

Then again the races became as exciting as ever. The contestants seemed not even to have noticed the accident that was taking place scarcely one hundred feet away.

Marjourie cheered heartily when Ethel won in the final race.

The loving cups for winners of the different events were to be awarded after supper.

Just as the girls lined up and started into the "mess hall," a delivery truck drove up and the boy brought all the loving cups. After supper, all were so excited they could hardly wait, but finally Miss Reams arose and delivered the cups amid the cheering and clapping of hands

When all the cups had been delivered but one, every one looked up in amazement, for all the winners had received their reward.

That one seemed to be an extra cup, but Miss Reams did not think so, for, with a smile, she said: "This last cup goes to Marjourie Ford for her bravery."

And Marjourie, with a smile on her face and joy in her heart, stepped forward to receive the tall silver loving cup.

AMUSING

"Take him out and shoot him," said Judge Creed to Officer Levi A. LeCain of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in the Municipal Court this morning. The judge was referring to a horse belonging to Jacob Fruman of 104 Spruce Street, Chelsea, which Fruman had a moment before been found guilty of driving when unfit for labor, but the defendant, misconstruing the sense of Judge Creed's words, thought that the death sentence had been pronounced upon himself.

Sputtering in a mixture of English and Yiddish, he voiced a protest at the verdict and when assured by court officers that it was the horse and not himself that was to be shot, sat down in his chair with a thud and mopped his brow in relief.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is hereby called to meet in reguiar annual session in the office of the Advocate, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La., at 10 o'clock a.m., Thursday, October 16, 1924.

JNO. F. FOSTER, Chairman.

Lake Providence, La., Sept. 19, 1924.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Lois, the eldest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Lee R. Sparks, Winnsboro, La., has entered Mansfield College; Robert, the only son, is a student at the Seashore Camp Ground School.

A revival meeting began in Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., on Sept. 14, with Rev. John W. Robertson doing the preaching. Rev. Del Longgrear is the pastor.

Rev. Payton A. Sowell, an honored superannuate member of the Tennessee Conference, who makes his home at the Seashore Camp Ground during the summer, has returned to Lawrenceburg, Tenn., for the winter.

Rev. Earl B. Moll, Mississippi Conference evangelist, has an open date of two weeks in October, caused by a cancelled engagement. Brother Moll can be reached at McHenry, Miss., by letter or telegram, until Sept. 28.

Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, wife and daughter, of Biloxi, Miss., paid the Advocate office a highly appreciated call recently while passing through the city. The editor greatly regrets being out of the office at the time of their visit.

The "Big Brothers," Greenville, Miss., recently gave the names of ten young men and women of Greenville who are attending various colleges. It is interesting and inspiring to note how many of them are active workers in the church.

St. Mark's, our great mission plant in New Orleans, will be formally dedicated on Monday evening, Oct. 13. Bishop Sam R. Hay will deliver the address. Bishop Hay will preach at Rayne Memorial Methodist Church at 11 o'clock on the Sunday preceding.

Saturday, Oct. 11, is "Work Day" for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and the next day—Sunday—is "Harvest Day." Every Methodist church in Louisiana should have a part in the magnificent work this institution is doing. Let us not forget the orphans.

We learn from "Methodist Matters," the weekiy bulletin of the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., that a new book by Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb, our pastor at West Point, Miss., will soon come from the press. It will be called, "Cavaliers of Truth."

The pastor, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, has planned for a revival meeting at Crystal Springs, Miss., beginning on Oct. 5 and continuing through Oct. 19. The pastor will do the preaching, and Miss Mollie Stockard, of Meridian, Texas, will lead the singing and conduct services for the children and young people.

Rev. J. H. Shumaker, Secretary of the Methodist Benevolent Association, has recently been made General Agent for the National Mutual Church Insurance Company, for the Southern Methodist Church. The Southern Church carries insurance of more than $9,000,000 in this company.

Rev. H. L. Johns, Cedar Grove, La., writes: "We have begun our revival campaign in Cedar Grove with Brother Leon I. McCain leading. Rev. Otis Spinks is the song director. Indications are good for a good meeting. We are to have a two-weeks' campaign, Sept. 14-28. We ask the prayers of our brethren in this work."

The report of Rev. Chas. Assaf, Syrian missionary of the Mississippi Conference, for the month of August shows that he has been active and successful. He has held 18 services during the month in which 101 people joined the church. The mimeographed copy of the report which we received was too indistinct for us to gather all the details.

A community revival was conducted in Yazoo City, Miss., recently, beginning on Sept. 14, in which the preaching was done by the pastors of the city—Drs. A. F. Watkins, Albert Martin, W. J. Caldwell, Webb Brame. The services were held in the Presbyterian church. The music was in charge of Mr. Alvin H. Doty.

The Licensing Committee of the New Orleans District met at the district parsonage on Tuesday evening of last week and licensed two fine young men to preach—Robert A. Cross, Jr., of Parker Memoriai Church, a sophomore in Centenary College, and Fred W. Campbeli, of St. Mark's, a student in the New Orleans High School.

Mr. Chas. S. Staples, son of the late Rev. C. F. Staples, of the Louisiana Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of last week. The associations of the days when he was a student in Centenary College were pleasantly renewed. Mr. Staples holds an important position in Shreveport, La., with a large financial institution.

In this week's Advocate appears an obituary of Mrs. Sarah Eliza Diffenwierth, wife of Rev. J. M. Diffenwierth, of Williston, Fla. Brother Diffenwierth is a local preacher, whose father was a charter member of the Louisiana Conference. He refers, in his letter, to the fact that he used to sit under the ministry of McTyeire, Keener, Parker, Carter, and other great men of that day.

Rev. T. F. King, pastor at Jeanerette, La., was a visitor to New Orleans recently. On Sunday morning and evening, Sept. 14, he filled the pulpit at McDonoghville, preaching at the morning hour and delivering an address, "The Meaning of Protestantism," at the evening hour. He greatly pleased his congregations. Brother King is the young Englishman who joined the Louisiana Conference last year.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Gulfport, Miss., passed through the city on Friday of last week, en route home from Bogalusa, La., where he had assisted Rev. Elmer C. Gunn in a meeting. The attendance upon the services was good, increasing from the beginning. There were six additions to the membership of the church, and the church as a whole was blessed. Brother Ferguson modestly declares that he is pastor of the greatest church in the Mississippi Conference.

Mr. H. Wynn Rickey, son of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Rickey, Natchitoches, La., and Miss Sarah Brandon, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Gerard Brandon, Natchez, Miss., were married recently, the father of the groom officiating. Mr. Rickey is a young man of brilliant mind and scholariy attainments, being an honor graduate of Tulane University. He is Acting Professor of French at Louisiana College, Pineville, La. The Advocate extends hearty good wishes to the fine young couple.

We regret not being in the office when Rev. Claude K. Smith, our pastor at Pineville, La., called one day this week. He has recently held a meeting at Pleasant Grove, in which 31 adults joined the church on profession of faith, 28 children were received, and there were 13 reclamations. The work at Pineville prospers, and a fine work is being done in the Government Base Hospital at that place—24 young men have professed conversion within the past three months. The sum of $9,000 has been raised for a new church at Pineville.

We take the following from the Southern Reporter (Sardis, Miss.), of Sept. 19: "Rev. J. A. Randolph rather took many of his congregation by surprise last Sunday morning when he announced that he did not expect to be in Sardis another year, and that he expected to retire from the work of a regular pastor. We understand that in all probability Brother Randolph will be located at Nashville, where he will be connected with Sunday school and educational work, for which he is so eminently qualified. He will leave Sardis with the regrets of the entire community, regardless of denominational lines."

Rev. J. L. Neiii, of the Mississippi Conference, Superintendent of our Czecho-Slovakia Mission and President of the Bibiical Seminary in Prague, will sail for the United States on Oct. 11. Joseph Dobes, son of one of the missionaries, is coming with him to enter the Seashore Camp Ground School. Brother Neiil will remain in the United States until April, 1925, assisting in the collection of the Centenary pledges. Mrs. Neill and Neliy will spend the winter in Bruxelles, where Neliy will enter a French school. It will be a great joy to Brother Neill's many friends in the home land to welcome him after his magnificent work abroad.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: D. R. Newton, Kokomo, Miss., 2; Mrs. E. T. W. Pond, Ethel, La., 2; Rev. B. F. Jones, Edwards, Miss., 2; Rev. J. D. Wroten, New Albany, Miss., 2; Rev. L. M. Sharp, Jackson, Miss., 3; Rev. J. T. McVey, Baker, La., 2; Rev. J. L. Greenway, Mendenhall, Miss., 12.

MISCELLANEOUS REFLECTIONS CONCERNING UNIFICATION.

the "Old South"—indeed, it is an everyday occurrence in stores, banks, offices.

7. The pending plan of unification seems to us to have so many excellencies, to provide so adequately for the needs of the situation, to lead so directly to a tremendous strengthening of the Protestant forces of the world by the union of the two great branches of Methodism, that we favor its adoption. We know, quite as well as anybody else perhaps, that it must be adopted or rejected by the members of the Annual Conferences. But we believe that the entire membership of the church ought to have the opportunity of registering their will in connection with the whole matter. It is not a question merely of a legislative enactment; it is a question that involves organic changes as to name, constitution, rolationships—all that enters into an ecclesiastical allegiance. It is not enough to say that our law provides for no such reference to the membership; no such fundamental change was contemplated in the organization of the church, and the law could not provide for an unthought-of situation; surely a method could be devised now by which the members of the church could vote on tho plan. One newspaper of national circulation is conducting a poll of 15 million voters with reference to their choice in the presidential election; surely a great church could devise some means for getting the opinion of two or three million people. The vote of the membership could not be legally binding—but it would have tremendous advisory significance. If the Methodist Episcopal Church South, is not a democratic church, it ought to be more so than it is. We stand upon the fundamental principle that the people who have made possible what the church is to-day ought to have a voice in what it shall be to-morrow. We believe a large majority of the members of the church are in favor of the adoption of the pending plan of unification—and we should like to hear them say so. If they are not in favor of it, we should like to know that, too.

THREE IMPORTANT BOOKLETS.

Dear Dr. Carlcy: In the interest of the work of our church, I wish to call your attention to three booklets recently published, and ask you to please give them somo notice in your columns. They deal with architectural requirements for church and Sunday school buildings, and are described and designated as types A, B, and C.

In our religious education program, practically all of our buildings may thus be classified. Into which of these classes any building fails is determined largely by the size of the congregation and Sunday school, the means available for building, the particular location, local conditions, etc. As may be gathered from a little study of these booklets, our purpose is to set forth clearly the essential requirements of a correct arrangement in each of these three types of buildings. Hence we do not introduce elevations or perspectives, as any particular treatment of the exterior is a matter of architectural taste and choice. The floor plans, although they have been used for practical building purposes, are used here simply to illustrate the principles and requirements set forth. Floor plans on other lines can bo used successfully. Any well studied plan can be planned to meet our requirements.

It is of special significance that these booklets represents the work of the Joint Commission created by the General Conference, as outlined in a preface to each booklet, and that this Joint Commission is made up from the two boards—the Board of Church Extenson and the General Sunday School Board. These booklets were prepared for the press, and all illustrations made by the department of architecture of the Board of Church Extension. However, the two Boards co-operate in handling the building program.

We are striving continually to improve our church and educational facilities as well as the architecture itself. We are convinced beyond question that a better arrangement of plan and a better design of building can be secured for the same money, if the right approach is made. Our new booklets indicate a great many steps in making that approach. Tho importance of having pastors and congregations get in touch with us at the very outset cannot be over-stressed, for by so doing much delay and unnecessary work can be avoided. Prospective church builders will be furnished with suggestive plans without charge.

Yours sincerely,

H. M. KING, Architect.

(These booklets will bc sent on application to the Board of Church Extension, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky., or to the Sunday School Board, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.—Editor.)

CHESTERFIELD AND PAUL.

To those useful witnesses, whose remains show the difference between the happiness of those who obey and those who disobey the law of God, may be added the testimony of two who had fulfilled their years. The first was the polished, the witty, the elegant and admired Earl of Chesterfield, who tried every source of earthly enjoyment, and, at the end, makes this acknowledgment.

"I have seen," says he, "the silly rounds of business and of pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world, and, consequently, know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which is in truth very low; whereas, those that have not experienced always overrate them. They only see their gay outside, and are dazzled at the glare.

"But I have been behind the scenes. I have seen all the coarse pulleys and dirty ropes which exhibit and move the gaudy machines; and I have seen and smelt the tallow candies which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of the ignorant audience.

"When I reflect on what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself that all that frivolous hurry of bustle and pleasure of the world had any reality. But I look upon all that is passing as one of those romantic dreams which opium commonly occasions; and by no means do I desire to repeat the nauseous dose for the sake of the fugitive dream.

"Shall I tell you that I bear this melcanholy situation with that meritorious constancy and resignation which most people boast of? No, for I really cannot help it. I bear it, becanse I must bear it, whether I will or not! I think of nothing but killing time the best way I can, now that he has become my enemy. It is my resolution to sleep in the carriage during the remainder of the journey of life."

The other person was Paul, the Aged. For Christ and the salvation of those for whom Christ died, Paul "suffered the loss of all things;" and this is the record of his course: "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft, in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the wilderness, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness; and that which cometh daily upon me, the care of all the churches.

"We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, yet not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, bnt not destroyed. For though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

And as the time drew near when he was to be "offered up," and he looked back on the past course of his life, these are his words of triumphant exultation: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give."

To this testimony of tho experience of mankind may be added that of scripture: "Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he! The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to her. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Keep sound wisdom, so shall it be life to thy soul. Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely; and when thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid; yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet."

And thus the Redeemer invites to his service: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Miss Beecher.

THE TEST OF CIRCULATION.

One rough-and-ready test of any book is how many readers it has won.

In days when each copy had to be made by hand, scribes multiplied only such works as were in demand. We can judge how far a book is popular by the number of its manuscripts which have come down to us. To take a single example, the plays of Aeschylus survive in about fifty manuscripts; but of the New Testament we possess over four thousand Greek manuscripts, more or less complete, besides eight thousand Latin manuscripts of the Vulgate version.

The earliest book to be printed in Europe was the Latin Bible, and one hundred editions of it appeared during the first half century of printing.

The most popular modern English author is Charles Dickens, and it has been computed that, since "Pickwick" appeared, twenty-five million copies of his books have gone out into the world. But during the four years of the World War the Bible Society alone circulated forty million copies of the Scriptures. Since the society was founded, in 1804, it has sent out two hundred and ninety-three million volumes.

One Book is always in constant demand, and far outsells every other volume published. As an American bookseller said: "You may talk as you will of your multitudinous editions of popular novels, but the Bible leads them all, year in and year out."—British Weekly.

Colegio Irene Tolman in Matanzas has received $1,350 for running expenses during the Centenary years.

In the old days they used to anoint a king with oil; but we doubt if the practice will be popular hereafter.—Columbia Record.

Congress has still another fruitful field for investigation if it should take up the matter of the Ivory Dome.—Honolulu Star-Bulletin.

The soul must be filled before it can overflow to others. It must seek God and receive from him if it is not to remain empty or shallow.—Selected.

SISTER MARY J. LEWIS (nee McPherson) was born Dec. 13, 1856, at Rose Hill, Jasper County, Miss. Her life was dedicated to God in holy baptism by the pastor of the Methodist church and her saintly parents shortly after birth. On reaching the age of 12 years, she joined the Methodist church. On April 10, 1878, she was married to Brother W. B. Lewis. To this union were born twelve children: S. B., Dan, Tully, Bernis, and Brame (boys); Mrs. A. V. Reynolds, Mrs. Carl Reuter, Mrs. C. C. Reed, and Miss Willie. Three children died in infancy. Her saintly spirit was emancipated from its terrestial body and turned loose on the domains of a boundless eternity to ascend to meet its God, just as the sun was rising on the beautiful morning of Sept. 4, 1924. Her remains were carried to Pleasant Grove cemetery, where, after a solemn service conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. M. Ainsworth, it was gently placed in an earthly resting place beneath a mighty cloud of flowers placed over the grave as a token of the high esteem in which she was held, who once inhabited the body that there awaits its transforming into the celestial in the first resurrection. Sister Lewis was a Christian and ready to go. It was my privilege to be her pastor two years, and I can say with great joy she was a great character. But few human beings have I ever known quite so meek and Christ-like in life.

GEORGE G. YEAGER,
Pastor, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
Rose Hill, Miss.

MRS. SARAH ELIZA DIEFFENWIERTH was born in Claiborne County, Miss., March 12, 1848; was married at the home of her father, Mr. T. H. Freeland, Jan. 24, 1871, to Rev. J. M. Dieffenwierth, and from Largo, Fla., went to heaven May 17, 1924, aged 76 years, 3 months and 5 days. To this union were born eleven children, four of these having preceded her to the heavenly home. The seven remaining on earth are: Thomas Freeland, Leonard Augustin, Steven Howard, Daniel Dulaney, William Beall, Mrs. M. C. Weeks, and Miss Elvira Nelson. Of these, Daniel Dulaney is a member of the Florida Conference, and Leonard Augustin a minister of the Church of God in California. Sister Dieffenwierth was reared a member of the Presbyterian Church, but united with the Methodist Church after her marriage. They moved to Largo, Fla., Nov. 12, 1881, where they lived until the Conference established Southern College at Sutherland. They then moved there to educate their children. This great task completed, they returned to Largo. Sister Dieffenwierth was a consistent and thorough Christian. It was a great pleasure to her to attend all church services, although for many years during the latter part of her life she was often deprived by sickness of this sacred privilege. Another Christian grace in which she excelled was charitableness. She was a cheerful giver—she and her husband were tithers. Her husband's younger brothers and sisters remember with gratitude her thoughtful kindness when they came here, motherless children, from their Louisiana home. It was the writer's pleasure to be her near neighbor and pastor a few years at Sutherland. As her pastor, he found her to be a sweet-spirited, faithful Christian, one of God's saints on earth. A veritable mother in Israel is gone, a ripened sheaf for the heavenly harvest. God signally blessed her home during a long, useful career of more than half a century. Eternity alone can reveal what such a home has done for this country and the world. May the children and grandchildren continue the work. Our own broken heart goes out in deepest sympathy with her lonely, sorrowing husband and bereaved children. May the Heavenly Father abundantly minister to each one of his infinite tenderness, grace and comfort.

A GREAT TENT MEETING, JACINTO CHURCH, BURNSVILLE CIRCUIT.

One of the greatest and most far-reaching revivals ever held in this community came to a close at old Jacinto Friday night, Sept. 12.

Rev. J. A. George, our pastor at Ripley, Miss., did the preaching, and the tent was crowded to its capacity night after night to hear the heart-searching and powerful messages brought by this servant of God, who preaches the old-time gospel. Brother George does not depend upon sensationalism or emotionalism for results, but he emphasizes the fundamentals of our faith—a Divine Savior who made a blood atonement for the sins of a fallen race; an eternal burning hell as the certain doom of sinners who reject Christ; a real personal devil who seeks to deceive and destroy men; and a real heaven as the home of all who follow Christ.

The whole community was stirred deeply; fifty-one members were added to the Methodist church; seven gave their names for membership in the Baptist church; a union prayer meeting and an Epworth League were organized; two babies were baptized, and all the finances for the year were met in full.

It has indeed been a great meeting. Our revival begins at Burnsville, Sept. 14. Rev. A. L. Davenport, of Kossuth, Miss., will do the preaching.

W. T. BAZZEL,
Pastor, Burnsville Circuit.

GOOD MEETINGS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Dr. Carley: As I have seen no report of the meetings we recently held in Mississippi, and since I think the readers of the Advocate are always interested in reading of victories won in His name. I am sending you the following:

On the evening of Aug. 8, Rev. J. L. Sells, pastor of our First Church, McComb City, preached the opening sermon of the camp meeting at the historical old Felder or Topasaw Camp Grounds. The mere statement that Brother Sells preached is enough to those who know him. This meeting continued for one week. The writer preached three times each day, excepting two afternoons, when Brothers Weems and McCormack preached. Brother McCormack also rendered excellent help as song leader. He and his three brothers deserve special mention for quartet music. I have McCormack sized up as one of our coming men. Let us pray that his health may be completely restored. Among other visiting brethren who rendered assistance by their prayers, testimonies, etc., were: Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Brookhaven; Revs. J. A. Wells and A. S. Oliver, of McComb City; Rev. L. J. Snelgrove, of Adams; Rev. I. R. Kelly, of Sales City, Ga.; also Rev. Mr. Thompson, who is pastor of the Presbyterian churches at Magnolia and Summit, and is a son-in-law of Brother Kelly. Wish I could remember the names of other brethren who attended and whose kindliness and real Christ-like spirit were manifested in so many ways, all of which was so helpful. Of course the faithful pastor, Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, was always on hand, with his congeniality. Brother Ferguson is a fine fellow to work with; we are all the more convinced of this after being with him last year, when we did all the preaching at this same camp meeting. We rejoiced to find his wife's health greatly improved. They are serving a loyal people, who have stood by them during their severe illness and trials.

Results? Well, of course, we all know that eternity alone will tell of all the good accomplished along any line of work that is really for Christ and his gospel. Eighty or more professed conversion, hundreds expressed desire for living more consecrated lives. One morning at the close of the 11 o'clock service we felt led to call for testimonies, and while Brother Tom Ferguson was testifying, he stated, among other matters, that it was at this altar seventeen years ago he first felt the call to preach, and yielded to that call. At the close of these testimonies we called for volunteers for life service, and four fine young men and four fine young women came forward and consecrated themselves to the Great Head of the church to be used where he leads them.

The attendance was better still this year than last, and there was more evidence of a real revival spirit. This, we were told, is largely prevailing through that great State, and is attributed largely to the result of the Gipsy Smith campaigns being held throughout the State. A conservative estimate placed the number attending on the Sabbath of the meeting at 4,000, and the big tabernacle was full every night and afternoon. Of course these people never thought of such a thing as charging a gate fee (this statement is made with all due respect for those who charge admission fees for people to a place of worship), yet all helpers were well paid, and a free-will offering was taken the last night of the meeting for the pastor.

We greatly appreciate the kindly, Christian hospitality shown us by all whose invitations we had the pleasure of accepting, especially that of our good friend and brother, Will Griffin, and his good wife, in whose home we were entertained the last night.

A week later we held another meeting with the same pastor, this time at the Pisgah Church, in the opposite direction from Summit. Here the house was crowded, and many stood near the doors and windows to hear. Sinners professed conversion, backsliders were reclaimed, eight or more pledged themselves to erect family altars, and there were many evidences of a real revival. Of course the good, old-time Christian hospitality was much in evidence here, too. Rev. Mr. Thompson, above referred to, rendered much help at this place by preaching the opening sermon on Sunday before we arrived, and while the pastor was engaged in a Presbyterian-Methodist revival at Summit, where our good Brother Kelly was doing the preaching. Talk about real, solid, old-time Methodist theology, Kelly has it.

Well, I fear I have already imposed on your liberalness of space, and will close, stating that it's fine to be back home, and I want to send some news of progress from the Winnsboro charge soon. We have some of the best people on earth here, and they have been exceedingly kind and considerate of their unworthy pastor during the year.

Fraternally,

LEE R. SPARKS.

WHY YOU NEED IRON—

To make you strong and "brainy" and put the power into your blood to overcome disease germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—It is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact almost any disease or disease germs is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance and the greater energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increased the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, rundown folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

FROM SALLIS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Some time has passed since I have written to the Advocate. Since I have finished my revivals, I will tell you and the readers of the Advocate about them.

I started at Shrock the fourth Sunday in July. We had a warm revival. Every one seemed to get a great blessing. While we had only one accession to the church, the membership was greatly revived. The first Sunday in August I went to Spring Grove. The Lord was with us in great power. We had the "old-time religion" manifested here. Many were reclaimed, sinners were converted, and there were twenty-nine accessions to the church on profession of faith and baptism, and eight by letter. We closed this meeting with an afternoon service on Thursday.

The following Sunday I began my meeting at Zemuly. We held an eight days' meeting. The Lord again blessed us and was with us with great power. Sinners were converted, and backsliders reclaimed; the church was greatly revived; there were seventy-four accessions to the church on profession of faith, and several were converted who have not yet united with the church. I did all the preaching at each of these places, and the Lord was with me, and to him belong the praise and the glory.

On the fourth Sunday we were at McAdams. Brother W. N. Duncan did the preaching in great earnestness and zeal. He was at his best. Every one enjoyed and appreciated his sermons. He preached the gospel in its purity and simplicity. The church was greatly revived, and there we had three accessions to the church.

The fifth Sunday, Brother T. H. Lipscomb came to us at Sallis, bringing us some great sermons, full of truth, and a gospel of love. He gave us six days of good, sound gospel preaching. Again we had a revival, and Sallis will feel the effect of this meeting in the days yet to come. We had two accessions to the church.

We appreciate the good work which these two able men did for us on the Sallis charge. We always feel uplifted by the association with them. We pray God's blessings upon them.

The meetings being over, we are now winding up our work and getting everything in shape for Conference. We hope to have a good report.

R. G. A. CARLISLE.

REPORT OF THE PASTOR TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES CONCERNING SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN 1924.

By A. L. Dietrich.

One of the important things every pastor has to do in preparation for the Annual Conference is the gathering together of statistics from the various organizations in the church and putting them in suitable shape for report to the statistical secretary at the Annual Conference.

For a number of years the writer has had, among his other duties, the preparation of the statistical tables for the annual Yearbook of the General Sunday School Board. The examination year after year of the Conference Journals, or Minutes, reveals a lack of uniformity and what appears to be a certain amount of guess work in making up the statistics that appear in the reports; hence he is taking the liberty of offering a few suggestions concerning the making up of the reports, so far as they relate to the Sunday school statistics.

The first item called for on the blank is "Number of schools." Every Sunday school, the superintendent of which is appointed by one of our pastors or elected by a quarterly conference, should be reported as a Southern Methodist Sunday school, no matter what literature is used in the school. Schools that may have suspended meeting for a period ("gone into winter quarters," as it is frequently expressed) should be included in the report. Schools that have gone out of existence during the year should not be included.

As to the "Number of officers and teachers," care should be observed in several directions in order that an accurate aggregate may be arrived at. We have a total of some 16,000 Sunday schools. Inaccuracy or guesswork with regard to any considerable percentage of them shows in the aggregate very large. "Number of officers and teachers" should include all the teachers of all the departments, care being observed to see that no one individual is counted twice. For instance, he should not be counted once as an officer and once as a teacher. Care should be observed to see that subordinate officers who may also be carried on the roll of some class in the school are not counted twice (once as an officer and once as a pupil). The pastor, in making up the total of officers and teachers for his circuit or station, should count himself as one of the officers of the Sunday school on the charge, but he should be counted only once, no matter how many schools he may be pastor of. Officers of classes should not be included under this heading, as their names should be carried and counted on the rolls of the classes of which they are officers.

As to the Cradle Roll and Home Department members, the superintendents of these departments should see to it that their membership rolls are kept up-to-date and accurate and that a correct statement of their membership is reported to the pastor either directly or through other officers of the Cradle Roll and Home

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

It has been some time since I have had a letter in the Advocate. The press of duties has made it impossible.

The Biloxi Training School was a success in every respect. The attendance was larger than we looked for, and the percentage of credits was good. We hope, with the help of the rest of the folks, to make this a very large and progressive gathering of Sunday school workers for this part of the Conference. Nowhere have we received a better support in our efforts.

The Vicksburg school had the largest percentage of units to the enrollment of any school we have held so far. The attendance was good, but the enrollment was not what we expected. Each teacher in this school did exceptionally good work. We are really proud of the loyal workers of Vicksburg. If we began to name them, we would run the risk of leaving out those who ought to be named. Their kindness personally and loyalty to me and the work is always an inspiration and a help.

Two matters that should have been attended to long, long ago—Sunday School Day and Children's Week.

Sunday School Day: 25 of our 170 pastors' names are ready for the Sunday School Day Honor Roll. It looks like a small per cent to me. Can this not be made better?

Our Sunday School Day offering last year was $2,176; our offering this year is only $1,324.25. There is a difference of $851.75. WE NEED THIS MONEY. Nobody can tell how bad we do need it. Our finances will be OK if we can get into the Treasurer's hands by the first of October $200, and get into his hands by the first of November $600. If you have Sunday School Day money, please send it in. If you have not held the Day, won't you please take a collection and send it in? We need the money. Out of 428 Sunday schools, we have received offerings from 155. Think what a small amount it will take from the rest if they will rally and send in an offering.

Children's Week: A certain number of schools have been selected in each district to observe Children's Week. Several schools that were not selected are holding this Week. No one is prohibited. If you care to do this work, please send for the material.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The neglecting of Children's Week is almost equivalent to forgetting the children. Only twenty schools have ordered literature from Miss Virginia Thomas for this purpose. The halfway observance of the week will help train leaders, stimulate indifferent parents to help the teachers, get new members, and do some piece of work that will help the entire church. From the present until the 1st of June Miss Virginia Thomas will be at the University of Mississippi. Her address is Box 152, University, Miss.

Let all teachers of children 4 and 5 years of age remember that no lesson material for such children has been provided except Beginner Graded lessons. Order the following: One Beginner Teacher's Text Book No. 1, and as many Beginner Lesson Stories, No. 1, as you have children in your class. The Olivet Picture Card is not intended as lesson material. It is only to amuse the child. Please do not order these cards as long as you live. The children cry for bread, will you give them a stone?

The institute conducted by Miss Thomas and Mrs. Howorth at Macon was well attended and was a distinct success. These institutes never fail to encourage the workers and stimulate them to go forward in their work. We need not less than seven district elementary superintendents in the Conference to do this type of instruction. May the Holy Spirit call as many as are needed. He does call, but they fail to answer.

The past week I checked up Coahoma, Jonestown, Sherard, Gunnison, and Clarksdale. Jonestown had covered seven points; Coahoma, five points; Sherard, five points, and have each of the other points partially covered. The teachers and officers at Sherard have been awarded fifteen units in the standard course during the last nine months and are taking other courses. The school at Sherard is continually making progress because the teachers are studying. The leaders must lead to a definite goal, and they must have the ability to lead, or else they must slide backward, go in a circle, or shoot off in the wrong direction. Each one of the schools visited promised to take up the neglected work and go forward.

If every superintendent in the Conference would take the pains to have the schools commit the aim of the school and repeat it in concert until it was familiar to every one, it would stimulate the school to greater endeavor in all the work. The next best thing is to call attention frequently to the aim, and check the school once a month or at every meeting of the Worker's Council. This is simple, but very effective. Just try it and report the results.

SOME LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL ITEMS.

The New Orleans Sunday School District has quarterly meetings. Most of the other districts in our Conference have only annual meetings. The date for the next district meeting for the New Orleans District is October 9, at First Church. Secretary of this District, Mr. H. P. Wall, writes: "I checked four schools last week and five so far this week, three Wednesday night. The attitude of the pastors, superintendents, and workers towards the checking has been splendid. They have all set their faces towards the goals set for standard schools."

Sunday, September 28, will be observed as Promotion Day in many of our schools in Louisiana. No doubt several of the schools that have not taken an offering for the promotion of the Conference Sunday school work, will do so on this day.

One of the latest leaflets issued by the General Sunday School Board is, "The Adult Department in Sunday School Organization." Most of us know something about the value of the organized Bible class, but this leaflet will give us a clearer idea of the value of the organization of the Adult Department.

Our Annual Conference will be honored this year with a visit from the General Sunday School Secretary, Dr. John W. Shackford, of Nashville.

We helped to organize recently a Sunday school in an old country church near Alexandria, named Pleasant Grove. This church has been abandoned as a preaching place, but with the coming of the Sunday school they will no doubt take on new life. There were over 50 present last Sunday.

We are sending five small seals to the Carrollton Avenue Church. This school was recently checked by the District Secretary, Mr. H. P. Wall. Two of our Elementary workers, Mrs. R. C. Culpepper, of Alexandria, and Mrs. R. H. Harper, of New Orleans, have been recently approved to check up the Elementary Department work in the Sunday schools. We hope by the end of the year to have several Elementary Departments checked by these workers.

The second Saturday in October is "Work Day" in our Conference for the Orphans, and the following Sunday is "Harvest Day." We hope each Sunday school will observe these two days.

The Shreveport Standard Training School opens Monday night, October 13. A preliminary meeting for organization, enrollment, and classification of that school will be held Sunday, October 12, at 3:30 p. m.

A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. The reason for its phenomenal success is because of its absolute purity, and Dr. Pierce's high standing as an honored citizen of Buffalo is a guarantee of all that is claimed for the Favorite Prescription as a regulator for the ills peculiar to women.

ADVENTURES IN EVANGELISM

By EDMUND THICKSTUN

Since Harold Begbie's "Twice-Born Men," no volume of stories of the power of the Gospel in the lives of men has appeared of such absorbing interest as this. There are some stories in the book that ought to be added to the repertoire of all those who strive to the saving power of Christ. Evangelists, evangelistic pastors, and all personal workers will welcome this contribution to the subject which lies so close to the heart of evangelical Christianity and will read it through at one sitting, so absorbing is the interest and so delightful the style.—Review and Expositor.

Woman's Missionary Society

MacDONELL FRENCH MISSION SCHOOL, 1924-25 TERM.

The first week of school, Sept. 8-12, has been one of happy, bustling activities at the MacDonell French Mission School.

The girls and boys began coming in by the Thursday before, and continued arriving through Monday, thirteen eager, wide-awake boys, and seventeen girls, very much alive, if you please.

On Sunday afternoon a new girl came in accompanied by her entire family, ten strong, from father to tiny year-old baby, completely filling a truck, borrowed for the occasion.

The first meal, Sunday night's supper, under the wonderful big trees back of the dining hall, made everybody feel friendly and at ease. Then all attended the night services at the Houma church, and were soon after happily dreaming. Monday morning school opened and lessons were assigned, and the first chapel exercises were led by our pastor, Brother McCoy; then, in the afternoon, work schedules were mapped out and started, while Monday night a social time, with refreshments, was enjoyed to make the last-comers feel at home.

Except for the fact that three new teachers had to get things in hand, and one of the last year's force was disabled by sickness during the whole week, thus throwing double duty on the other workers, by the end of the first week everything was moving with schedule regularity. Happier, more eager youngsters it would be hard to find, and the new matron says she has never seen such capacity for hiding away food of every description, especially bread.

All our old students have returned except two, one of whom was married during the summer, and the other one has not yet been able to get back. There are four new boys and three new girls with us. We do ask the earnest prayers of all our friends back of our work here for the Master, that God will give us wisdom and grace to do his will in all things for these young French folk. In the face of the State Superintendent's recent figures on Louisiana's position as to illiteracy in our nation, stating that Lafourche Parish has only 40%, and Terrebonne only 54% white educables in school attendance, the desperate need of the work of such a school comes home to us with a new force, and we gather courage to go on with the fight against ignorance and sin.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A visit to the commercial department, 201 Baronne street, New Orleans, will always pay.

"WHAT DID YOU DO?"

When the Princess Alice, an excursion boat, was sunk on the River Thames, there were about seven hundred women and children drowned. At the inquest, one man said that he saw a mother struggling in the water, with a little baby in her arms. She was calling for help. He said as she went down she held her little baby up above her head as high as she could, thinking that some one would rescue it. She rose again, and again, and went down for the third and last time, still holding her little baby above her head.

The judge said: "Well, what did you do?" The man said: "I did not do anything." The judge asked: "You saw that woman struggling in the water, with a little baby in her arms; you saw her sink down, holding the little baby above her head, and yet you did not do anything?" Men jumped to their feet, and he was hissed and driven from the courtroom.

There is going to be another inquest some day. You and I might be there, and the question may be asked Department. These officers should be included among the number reported as officers and teachers.

Perhaps as important an item as the pastor has to report to the Annual Conference is that under the heading, "Total enrollment in all departments of the Sunday school." This should include all those reported as officers and teachers, Cradle Roll members, Home Department members and everybody else connected with any department or class in the Sunday school. The number so reported should represent the actual number of persons belonging to the Sunday schools of the charge in any way at the time the report is made to the Annual Conference.

Careful investigation should be made in order that the item on the report blank calling for "Number of Sunday school pupils who have joined the church during the year" shall be an accurate statement, no guesswork. It is the judgment of the writer that a considerable number of Sunday school pupils are received into our churches every year and are not counted among the number carried in the reports turned in to the Conference because in very few places are records kept so as to clearly show this fact. The pastor and superintendent depend largely upon memory. The most fertile field the church has for recruiting of its membership ranks is that of the Sunday school, and after the officers and teachers, including the pastor, have worked faithfully and zealously all the year the results of their efforts in pupils added to the church should appear on the records.

Another item that is important is the correct report of the amount of money raised in the Sunday schools for missions. If our church, or any other church for that matter, is ever to be thoroughly missionary in spirit and practice it will be because the members of that church were instructed properly and trained carefully during the days of childhood and youth, and the Sunday school is the place where the church is doing that now. Perhaps one of the best ways that we can judge what is being done in the way of instruction in this respect is through the amounts that are contributed to missions in the Sunday schools. Therefore all the money raised in the Sunday school for missions, either as specials or on regular accounts, should be reported. In this connection the amount of money reported as raised for missions in the Sunday schools should agree with the account that is turned over to the treasurers of the several Mission Boards and funds of the church. Money raised for missions should not be used for purposes that are not missionary. The educational value of the effort to instruct is largely lost if the money that is contributed as a result of that effort is used for any other purposes.

The total amount of money raised in the Sunday schools should be accurately reported. It is nothing but right and just to those who have contributed it that a full and accurate report be made at the end of the year and due credit given through its publication in the regular statistical report.

The writer has observed what he believes to be considerable improvement in the reliability of the statistics appearing in the Conference Journals during the last two or three years, and believes that through the exercise of proper care and attention on the part of each pastor our statistical records can be made just as reliable as those of a bank or other business house.

In view of the fact that the General Sunday School Board is sponsoring an active membership campaign this fall through which it is hoped to increase quite materially the Sunday school enrollment of our church, it is essential that at the beginning records should be as clear and that proper count should be kept of enrollment in order that at the end of the year it may be definitely ascertained whether worth while results have been achieved by the effort put forth in the membership campaign.

NOTICE TO THE PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS OF NEWTON DISTRICT.

As Newton District Superintendent of Missionary Education, I am taking this means of asking the pastors of this District to co-operate with me by sending me the names and addresses of their Sunday school superintendents, as I have addresses of only a few.

I have been Missionary Superintendent for over a year, and have written to a number of pastors, and have received only three replies, these coming from Philadelphia, Forest, and Bay Springs.

I most earnestly solicit the co-operation and help of both pastors and superintendents, for without this, little can be accomplished in this important work. Mrs. ROY MAPP.
